Apparently the Chronicler wanted to proceed by a series of broad surveys. The main subject of Ezr 1-6 is the rebuilding of the Temple under Darius: the successive returns from Exile are all dealt with together; the figure of Sheshbazzar is blocked out to throw Zerubbabel into relief; various hostile activities of the Samaritans are narrated in adjacent sections. In the following chapters the books represent Ezra and Nehemiah as working side by side for the one great purpose. Hence, until the 15th century A.D. the Hebrew text did not separate the books; they appeared as the one 'Book of Ezra'. Nor did the Greek translation. It was only in the first centuries of our era that a distinction was made.

Such methods of composition create certain problems for the historian. Thus the identification of Sheshbazzar, Ezr 1:8; 5:14, with Zerubbabel, Ezr 2:2; 3:2; 5:2, has been accepted by many scholars, but it seems more likely that these are two distinct persons: Sheshbazzar, prince of Judah, appointed high commissioner by Cyrus, was the leader of the first immigrants; Zerubbabel, who returned later, was high commissioner in the days of Darius, and saw to the rebuilding of the Temple. The question of dating is even more involved and controversial. If we accept the book's own sequence, Ezra reached Jerusalem in 458, the seventh year of Artaxerxes I, Ezr 7:8. Nehemiah joined him in 445, the twentieth year of the same reign, Ne 2:1. He stayed for twelve years, Ne 13:6; it was therefore in 433 that he returned to Persia for an unstated period; he went back to Palestine before the death of Artaxerxes I, i.e. before 424. This traditional order of events is upheld by able commentators who, however, restrict the mission of Ezra to a single year, accepting the precise figures given in the book, and make Ezra leave before the arrival of Nehemiah. Others reverse the order, judging that the work done by Ezra could have been done only after Nehemiah had finished his. In this hypothesis, the dates assigned to Ezra relate to the reign of Artaxerxes II, not, as for Nehemiah, to that of Artaxerxes I; Ezra did not therefore reach Palestine until 398. A third and recent school admits that Ezra followed Nehemiah but objects that the text gives no indication that two different reigns are being referred to; it therefore places the mission of Ezra between the two missions of Nehemiah. This theory requires a textual emendation of Ezr 7:8; Ezra arrives not in the seventh but in the thirty-seventh year of Artaxerxes, i.e. in 427. This solution is implied in our footnotes to the text but is by no means certain; the other two are both possible and the question remains open.

In any case, so far as a religious appreciation of the books is concerned, the problem is of minor importance. The author's intention is to present a composite, though not misleading, picture of the Jewish Restoration; and to assess the significance of this event it is more important to appreciate the ideas inspiring it than to discover the precise sequence of its various stages. Taking advantage of the liberal religious policy that the Achmenids applied in their empire, the Jews return to their Promised Land, restore the ancient worship, rebuild the Temple and the city walls, and live as a community governed by men of their own race and regulated by the Law of Moses. All that the imperial power requires is loyalty, no great price to pay when that power shows such respect for Jewish customs. This is an event of great importance—nothing less than the birth of Judaism, prepared by long meditation in Exile and assisted by the actions of leaders raised up by God.

After Zerubbabel, who rebuilt the Temple (but on whom the Chronicler does not confer the messianic titles awarded by Haggai and Zechariah, Hg 2:23; Zc 6:12f), come Ezra and Nehemiah as pioneers of this restoration. The real father of Judaism is Ezra with his three dominant conceptions: the chosen race, the Temple, the Law. If his reforming measures seem severe and his isolationism narrow, it is because his zeal was great and the need to safeguard the infant community urgent. He is the pattern of all scribes, the great and growing hero of Judaic tradition. Nehemiah, though inspired by the same ideals, acts in a different sphere, restoring and repopulating Jerusalem and making it possible and attractive for its citizens to lead a national life. The record he has left us, more intimate than that of Ezra, reveals a vivid and human personality, ungrudging of effort yet prudent and deliberate, trusting in God, whose help he seeks in frequent prayer. Behind him he left a noble memory, and Ben Sirach sings the praises of him who 'rebuilt our walls which lay in ruins', Si 49:13.

It is not surprising that in this restored community, gathered round the Temple and obedient to the Law, the Chronicler sees a realisation of the ideal God-governed society for which he has pleaded in the Books of Chronicles. He well knows that the realisation is not perfect, that the future has something better in store, but here he is more dependent on documents, which he reproduces, than he was in the Chronicles. He retains their exclusivist tone prompted by circumstances, and respects their silence on the messianic hope. Doubtless literary integrity prevented the author from adjusting these characteristics. He writes midway through the 4th and 3rd centuries B.C., a time of which we know little and during which the community in Jerusalem, withdrawn into itself, grew quietly to maturity and deepened its spirituality.

 8 Sons of Ethan: Azariah.

The ancestors of David

- 9 Sons of Hezron: there were born to him Jerahmeel, Ram, Chelubai.^b

1 a. These first chapters consist almost entirely of genealogies. The 'Priestly' genealogies of Gn make Abraham the centre from whom blessings radiate to the nations, Gn 12:3. Here, however, the central figure is David, ancestor and prototype of the Messiah, with his retinue of priests, Levites and cantors. Cf. the genealogy of Christ in Mt 1:1-17 and Lk 3:23-38. In many cases the genealogies of Ch register no more than the relationship between tribes or clans; several names are those of clans or of towns. The form of many names varies in the Hebr. and the versions; details of variations are not given in the notes.

b. The long lists of Gn 5 and 11 are abbreviated and some important passages are copied from Gn 10; of all the peoples descended from the first man only the Semites interest the author, Abraham first and then his sons, Isaac and Jacob.

2 a. The Chronicler begins with Judah, the tribe of David.

b. Chelubai, like Chelub, 4:11, is apparently to be identified with Caleb, Jos 14:6+, Cf. 1 Ch 2:18.

Ram became father of Amminadab, Amminadab father of Nahshon, prince 10 of the sons of Judah, •Nahshon became father of Salma, Salma father of Boaz. 11
 Boaz became father of Obed, Obed father of Jesse. •Jesse became father of Eliab, 12 his first-born, of Abinadab second, Shimea third, •Nethanel fourth, Raddai 13 fifth, •Ozem sixth, David seventh. •Their sisters were Zeruiah and Abigail. Sons 14 of Zeruiah: Abishai, Joab and Asahel: three. •Abigail gave birth to Amasa; the 15 father of Amasa was Jether the Ishmaelite. 16
 1 S 26:6

Jos14:6+ Caleb

2:24f;4:11f Caleb son of Hezron became father of Azubah,^e Ishshah and Jerioth; these 18 are the sons:^d Jeshur, Shobab and Ardon. •Azubah died, and Caleb took Ephrath, 19 who bore him Hur. •Hur became father of Uri, Uri father of Bezalel. 20 2:50 Then Hezron married the daughter of Machir, father of Gilead; he took her 21
 2 Ch 1:5 when he was sixty years old and she bore him Segub. •Segub became father of 22
 Jair who held twenty-three towns in the land of Gilead. •Then from Geshur 23
 Nb32:41-42 and Aram he won the Encampments of Jair, Kenath and its outlying villages, sixty towns. All this belonged to the sons of Machir,^e father of Gilead.
 2:18 After Hezron's death, Caleb married Ephrathah,^f wife of Hezron his father, 24 who bore him Ashhur, father of Tekoa.

Jerahmeel

1S27:10 Jerahmeel, Hezron's eldest son had sons: Hezron, his first-born, Ram, Bunah, 25
 Oren, Ozem, Ahijah. •Jerahmeel had another wife called Atarah; she was the 26 mother of Onam.

Sons of Ram, Jerahmeel's first-born: Maaz, Jamin and Eker. 27

Sons of Onam: Shammai and Jada. Sons of Shammai: Nadab and Abishur. 28
 Abishur's wife was called Abihail; she bore him Ahban and Molid. •Sons of 29 Nadab: Seled and Ephraim. Seled died leaving no son. •Sons of Ephraim: Ishi; 30 sons of Ishi: Sheshan; sons of Sheshan: Ahlai. •Sons of Jada, Shammai's brother: 31 Jether and Jonathan. Jether died leaving no sons. •Sons of Jonathan: Peleth and 32
 Zaza. 33

These are the sons of Jerahmeel.

Sheshan had no sons,^g only daughters. He had an Egyptian slave Jarha •to 34 whom Sheshan gave his daughter in marriage. She bore him Attai. •Attai became 35 father of Nathan, Nathan father of Zabad, •Zabad father of Ephlal, Ephlal 36 father of Obed, •Obed father of Jehu, Jehu father of Azariah, •Azariah father of 37
 Helez, Helez father of Eleasah, •Eleasah father of Sismai, Sismai father of 38
 Shallum, •Shallum father of Jekamiah, Jekamiah father of Elishama. 39

2:18f;4:11f Caleb^h
 Jos14:6+

Sons of Caleb, Jerahmeel's brother: Mesha, his first-born, who was the father 42 of Ziph. His son wasⁱ Mareshah, father of Hebron. •Sons of Hebron: Korah, 43 Tappuah, Rekem and Shema. •Shema became father of Raham, Jorkeam's 44 father. Rekem became father of Shammai. •Shammai's son was Maon, and Maon 45 became father of Bethzur.

Ephah, Caleb's concubine, gave birth to Haran, Moza and Gazez. Haran 46 became father of Gazez.

Sons of Jahdai: Regem, Jotham, Geshan, Pelet, Ephah and Shaaph. 47

Maacah, Caleb's concubine, gave birth to Sheber and Tirhanah. •She gave 48 birth to Shaaph, father of Madmannah, and Sheva, father of Machbenah and 49 father of Gibeai.

Jos15:16-19 The daughter of Caleb was Achsah.

These are the sons of Caleb.

Hur^j

2:19;4:1f Sons of Hur, the first-born of Ephrathah: Shobal, father of Kiriath-jearim,

- ⁵¹ Salma, father of Bethlehem, Hareph, father of Beth-gader. •Shobal, father of ⁵³ Kiriath-jearim had sons: Haroeh, that is, half of the Manahathites, •and the clans of Kiriath-jearim: the Ithrites, Puthites, Shumathites and Mishraites.
 Their descendants are the people of Zorah and Eshtaol. Jg 13:2;18:2
- ⁵⁴ Sons of Salma: Bethlehem, the Netophathites, Atroth-beth-joab, half of the ⁵⁵ Manahathites, the Zorathites, •the Sophrate clans living at Jabez, the Tirathites, 4:9
 the Shimeathites, the Sucathites. These are the Kenites who came from Ham- Nb24:21 +

C. THE HOUSE OF DAVID

The sons of David

- ¹ 3 These are the sons of David who were born to him in Hebron: the first-born ||2S3:2-5
² Amnon, by Ahinoam of Jezreel; second, Daniel, by Abigail of Carmel; •third, Absalom son of Maacah the daughter of Talmai king of Geshur; fourth, Adonijah ³ son of Haggith; •fifth, Shephatiah by Abital; sixth, Ithream by his wife Eglah.
⁴ Six, therefore, were born to him in Hebron, where he reigned for three years ||2 S 5:5
 and six months.
⁵ He reigned for thirty-three years in Jerusalem. •These are the sons who were =14:3-7
 born to him in Jerusalem: Shimea, Shobab, Nathan, Solomon, the four of them ||2S5:14-16
⁶ children of Bath-shua,^a the daughter of Ammiel; •Ibhar, Elishama, Eliphelet, ⁷ Nogah, Nepheg, Japhia, •Elishama, Eliada, Eliphelet: nine.
⁹ These are all the sons of David, not counting the sons of the concubines. Tamar 2 S 13:1f was their sister.

The kings of Judah^b

- ¹⁰ Sons of Solomon: Rehoboam; Abijah his son, Asa his son, Jehoshaphat his ¹¹ son, •Joram his son, Ahaziah his son, Joash his son, •Amaziah his son, Azariah ¹² his son, Jotham his son, •Ahaz his son, Hezekiah his son, Manasseh his son, ¹⁴ Amon his son, Josiah his son. •Sons of Josiah: Johanan,^c the first-born, ¹⁵ Jehoiakim second, Zedekiah third, Shallum fourth. •The sons of Jehoiakim:
¹⁶ Jeconiah his son, Zedekiah his son. 2Ch36:1f

The royal line after the exile^d

- ¹⁷ Sons of Jeconiah the captive: Shealtiel. His sons: •Malchiram, Pedaiah, ¹⁸ Shenazzar, Jekamiah, Hoshama, Nedabiah. •Sons of Pedaiah: Zerubbabel^e and ¹⁹ Shimei. Sons of Zerubbabel: Meshullam and Hananiah; Shelomith was their ²⁰ sister. •Sons of Meshullam: Hashubah, Ohel, Berechiah, Hasadiah, Jushab-hesed:
²¹ five. •Sons of Hananiah: Pelatiah; Jeshaiah his son, Rephaiah his son, Arnan
²² his son, Obadiah his son, Shecaniah his son. •Sons of Shecaniah: Shemaiah, Ezr 8:3

c. Var. (Vulg.) 'Caleb married Azubah'.

d. Of Azubah.

e. Corr.; Hebr. 'All these were descendants of Machir'.

f. 'Caleb married Ephrathah' corr.; 'in Caleb of Ephrathah' Hebr.

g. According to a tradition differing from that in v. 31.

h. Another genealogical record of Caleb's descendants, cf. vv. 18f, no doubt representing a different period when the relationships of the clans had changed.

i. 'His son was' corr.; 'son of (Mareshah)' Hebr.

j. The name 'Hur' is found in the Aaron traditions,

Ex 17:10; 24:14; it is also the name of a people that appears to have once lived to the S. and W. of Jerusalem.

a. Greek reads 'Bersabee' ('Bathsheba').

b. The list derives from Kings. Shallum, son of Josiah is the same, Jr 22:11, as the Jehoahaz of Kings.

c. Some MSS read 'Joahaz' for 'Johanan'.

d. This list probably extends to the author's own day.

e. In all the other texts, cf. Ezr 3:2; Hg 1:1, Zerubbabel is son of Shealtiel.

f. 'Sons of Meshullam' is not in the text.

D. THE SOUTHERN TRIBES^aJudah. Shobal

- 2:3, 50 4 Sons of Judah: Perez, Hezron, Carmi, Hur, Shobal.^b 1 Reaiah son of Shobal became father of Jahath, and Jahath father of Ahumai 2 and Lahad. These are the Zorathite clans.

2:50+ Hur

- These are Abi-etam, Jezreel, Ishma, and Idbash, whose sister was called 3 Hazzelepni.
 Rt 1:2 Penuel became father of Gedor, Ezer father of Hushah. 4
 These are the sons of Hur, the first-born of Ephrathah, father of Bethlehem.

Ashhur

- Ashhur, father of Tekoa, had two wives: Helah and Naarah. 5
 Naarah bore him Ahuzzam, Hepher, the Timnites, and the Ahashtarites. 6
 These are the sons of Naarah.
 Sons of Helah: Zereth, Zohar, Ethnan. 7
 2:55 Koz became father of Anub, Hazzobebah and the clans of Aharhel son of 8
 Harum. •Jabez won himself more honour than his brothers. His mother gave 9
 Gn35:18 him the name Jabez, 'because' she said 'in distress I gave birth to him'.^c •Jabez 10 called on the God of Israel. 'If you truly bless me,' he said 'you will extend my lands, your hand will be with me, you will keep harm away and my distress will cease.' God granted him what he had asked.

2:18f, 42f
Jos14:6+ Caleb^d

- 2:9+ Chelub, Shuhah's brother, became father of Mehir, who was the father of 11
 Eshton. •Eshton became father of Bethrapha, Paseah and Tehinnah father of 12
 Irnashash, brother of Eselon the Kenizzite. These are the men of Recah.
 ||Jg 1:13 Sons of Kenaz: Othniel and Seraiah. Sons of Othniel: Hathath and 13
 Meonothai, •who became father of Ophrah. Seraiah became father of Joab, father 14
 Ne 11:35 of Geharashim—and they were in fact craftsmen.^e
 ||Nb 13:6 Sons of Caleb son of Jephunneh: Iru, Elah and Naam. Sons of Elah: Kenaz. 15
 Sons of Jehallelel: Ziph, Ziphah, Tiri-a, Asarel. 16
 Sons of Ezra: Jether, Mered, Ephraim, Jalon. Then she^f conceived Miriam, 17
 Shammai, and Ishbah, the father of Eshtemoa, •whose Judaeen wife gave birth 18 to Jered father of Gedor, Heber father of Soco, and Jekuthiel, father of Zanoah.
 These are the sons of Bithiah, the daughter of Pharaoh whom Mered married.
 The sons of the wife of Hodiah, the sister of Naham father of Keilah the 19
 Garmite and of Eshtemoa the Maacathite.
 Sons of Shimon: Amnon, Rinnah, Ben-hanan, Tilon. 20 Sons of Ishi: Zoheth and Ben-zoheth.

Shelah^g

- 2:3 Sons of Shelah son of Judah: Er father of Lecah, Laadah father of Mareshah, 21 and the clans of linenworkers at Beth-ashbea, •Jokim, the men of Cozeba, Joash 22 and Saraph who went to Moab to take wives^h before returning to Bethlehem.ⁱ (Events, these, of long ago.) •These were potters and lived at Netaim and 23
 Gederah; they stayed with the king there, employed in his workshop.

Simeon

- ||Gn46:10
||Nb26:12f Sons of Simeon: Nemuel, Jamin, Jarib, Zerah, Shaul; •Shallum was his son, 24
 Mibsam his son, Mishma his son. •The sons of Mishma: Hammuel his son, 25
 1:29-30
Gn25:13 Zaccur his son, Shimei his son. •Shimei had sixteen sons and six daughters, 26

but his brothers did not have many children, and the sum of their clans did not multiply as the sons of Judah did.

28 They lived in Beersheba, Moladah and Hazar-shual, •Bilhah, Ezem and
29 Tolad, •Bethuel, Hormah and Ziklag, •Beth-marcaboth, Hazar-susim, Beth-biri, ||Jos19:1-8
30 Shaaraim. These were their towns until the reign of David. •Their outlying 31 villages were: Etam, Ain, Rimmon, Tochen and Ashan, five towns, •with all 32 the outlying villages round these towns as far as Baalath. Here they had their 33 settlements and sorted themselves into their various groups.

34 Meshobab, Jamlech, Joshah son of Amaziah, •Joel, Jehu son of Joshibiah, 35 son of Seraiah, son of Asiel, •Elioenei, Jaakobah, Jeshohaiah, Asaiah, Adiel, 36 Jesimiel, Benaiah, •Ziza, Ben-shiphi, Ben-allon, Ben-jedaiah, Ben-shimri, Ben- Nb 1:2
37 shemaiah, •These men here named came with their clans and families; they grew 38 in number and spread. •In search of pasture for their flocks they travelled from 39 the Gerar¹ pass to the eastern end of the valley, •where they found good, fat 40 pasture; the land was broad, untroubled, peaceful. Hamites^{*} had been living there before them.

41 The Simeonites, registered by name, arrived there in the time of Hezekiah king of Judah; they overran their tents and the dwellings¹ they found there. They put them under a ban still in force today and settled in their place, since there Jos6:17+ was pasturage for their flocks.

42 Some of them, belonging to the sons of Simeon, reached Mount Seir: five hundred men led by Pelatiah, Neariah, Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi.
43 They defeated the surviving fugitives of Amalek and still live there today. Ex17:8+

E. THE TRANSJORDANIAN TRIBES

Reuben

1 5 Sons of Reuben, first-born of Israel. He was indeed the first-born but, when he violated his father's couch, his birthright was given to the sons of Joseph Gn 35:22 son of Israel.

2 The group of Reuben forfeited the birthright •because Judah proved more powerful than his brothers—a prince having come from him—with Joseph having the birthright.^a

3 Sons of Reuben, first-born of Israel: Hanoch, Pallu, Hezron, Carmi.

||Gn 46:9
||Nb26:5f

Joel^b

4 Sons of Joel: Shemaiah his son, Gog his son, Shimei his son, •Micah his 5 son, Reaiah his son, Baal his son, •Beerah his son, whom Tiglath-pileser king
6 of Assyria carried off into exile. He was a prince of the Reubenites.

7 His kinsmen, by clans, grouped according to their kinship: Jeiel, the chief,
8 Zechariah, •Bela son of Azaz, son of Shema, son of Joel.

4 a. Survey of the clans of each tribe. Levi occupies the central place as in Nb 2 and Ezk 48.

b. This new series substitutes three more genuinely Israelitic clans for the three more or less Canaanite clans of 2:3.

c. Playing on Jabez and ozeb 'distress'.

d. In this passage the Chronicler assembles traditional data on the clans in Judah without fixed territory, some no doubt still existing in his own time; he makes no attempt to harmonise the data.

e. The name means 'Valley of Craftsmen', cf. Ne 11:35.

f. Bithiah, v. 18.

g. The clans mentioned in connexion with Shelah are not, as in the preceding passage, nomadic or semi-nomadic but craftsmen of settled abode, weavers and potters who in very early times had immigrated from Moab. On the post-exilic guilds cf. Ne 3:8,31.

h. Cf. Rt 1. Alternative translation 'ruled in Moab'.

1. 'before returning to Bethlehem' corr.

J. 'Gerar' Greek.

k. Name used for the non-Israelitic peoples to the S. of Palestine, sometimes styled 'Egyptians', cf. Gn 21:9.

l. Alternative translation 'and the Meunim', cf. 2 Ch 20:1.

5 a. In this way the Chronicler harmonises his faith in the messianic character of the Judaeon dynasty of David and the pre-eminence of the tribes of Joseph, Gn 49:26; cf. 48:18. The Greek text corrects 'birthright' to 'blessing'.

b. Joel is the Reubenite clan deported after Tiglath-pileser's conquest of Damascus and Samaria in 732, 2 K 15:29. It returned after the Exile and figures here as the sole Reubenite representative, though the precise family connexion with Reuben is not stated. At that time its head must have been Bela, v. 8.

Reuben's territory

Reuben, having settled at Aroer, spread as far as Nebo and Baal-meon. •To 9
the east his lands stretched to the beginning of the desert that ends at the river Euphrates, for he had many herds in the land of Gilead.

During the reign of Saul they waged war on the Hagrites; they suffered 10 defeat at their hands and the Hagrites occupied their tents throughout the region east of Gilead.

Gad

The sons of Gad lived next to them, inhabiting the land of Bashan as far as 11
Salecah: •Joel, the chief, Shapham second, then Janai and Shaphat in Bashan. 12
Their kinsmen, by families: Michael, Meshullam, Sheba, Jorai, Jacan, Zia, 13
Eber: seven.

These are the sons of Abihail: Ben-huri, Ben-jaroah, Ben-gilead, Ben-michael, 14
Ben-jeshishai, Ben-jahdo, Ben-buz. •Ahi son of Abdiel, son of Guni, was head 15 of their family.

They had settled in Gilead, in Bashan and its dependencies, as well as 16 throughout the pasturages of Sharon to their furthest limit. •They sorted 17 themselves into their various groups in the days of Jotham king of Judah.

The sons of Reuben, the sons of Gad, the half-tribe of Manasseh, a number 18 of their fighting men, men who carried shield and spear and could handle the bow, men used to warfare, forty-four thousand seven hundred and sixty of them fit for service, •waged war against the Hagrites, against Jetur, Naphish and Nodab. 19 God came to their help against them, and the Hagrites with all their allies fell 20 into their hands, for they had called on God as they fought, and because they put their trust in him their prayer was heard. •They carried off of the Hagrites' live- 21 stock fifty thousand camels, two hundred and fifty thousand sheep, two thousand donkeys and a hundred thousand people, •for, God directing the battle, the 22 greater part had been killed. And they settled in what had been Hagrite territory until the exile.

The half-tribe of Manasseh

The sons of the half-tribe of Manasseh settled in the country between Bashan 23 and Baal-hermon, Senir and Mount Hermon.

They were numerous. •These are the heads of their families: Ephraim, Ishi, Eliel, 24 Azriel, Jeremiah, Hodaviah, Jahdiel. These were stout fighting men, men of renown, heads of their families.

But they were unfaithful to the God of their ancestors and prostituted themselves 25 to the gods of the peoples of the land whom God had destroyed before them.
So the God of Israel roused the hostility of Pul^a king of Assyria and of Tiglath- 26 pileser king of Assyria. He deported Reuben, Gad and the half-tribe of Manasseh, taking them off to Halah near Habor and the river Gozan. They are still there today.

which are at variance with the biblical data, must attach to the clans exiled in 732.

d. Pul and Tiglath-pileser are the same, cf. 2 K 15:19+.

e. The Chronicler introduces his survey of the levitical clans with a list of high priests up to the Exile, matching the list of David's descendants in ch. 3. This parallelism tallies with the theological ideas of Ezekiel for whom the community is poised on priesthood and prince; it is even closer to those of Zechariah who, 3:8f, associates the privileges of Zerubbabel's descendant with those of the high priest, and after his vision of the crowning of the high priest Joshua foresees that this 'branch', too, will be crowned, 6:11f. This list of high priests has been compiled with the help of 6:35-38 and the list of Ezra's ancestors, Ezr 7:2f.; but the names in vv. 33-36 (excepting Johanan) are 6 a. Gershom (called Gershon in Nb) was, according to the N. traditions, Ex 2:22; Jg 18:30, probably a descendant of Moses. This family had been in charge of the schismatic shrine at Dan; for this reason the 'Priestly' tradition gives preference to the Kohathites.

b. The Chronicler considers the sacred chant (praise, confession, thanksgiving) to be the heart of sacrificial worship—the outlook of Ho 14:3; Is 12; 25-26, and probably Mt 1:11. He assigns its institution to David.

c. The most famous cantors belong, according to the Chronicler, to the three great levitical families; but Heman and Ethan were sages of old, 1 K 5:11, of the Zerah clan, Ps 89: inscr.; 1 Ch 2:6, a branch of Judah.

To the sons of Aaron of the Kohath clan (for to these the lot fell) •they gave⁴⁰
 Hebron in the land of Judah and the pasture lands adjoining. •The fields and⁵⁵ villages of this town they gave to Caleb son of Jephunneh, •but to the sons of⁴¹
 Aaron they gave the cities of refuge, Hebron, Libnah with its pasture lands,⁵⁶
 Jattir, Eshtemoa with its pasture lands, •Hilen, Debir, •Ashan, Beth-shemesh⁴² each with its pasture lands. •From the tribe of Benjamin they gave Geba, Alemeth^{43,44} and Anathoth, each with its pasture lands. In all, their clans took in thirteen^{58,59} towns.⁶⁰

b. Other Levites

The remaining sons of Kohath were allotted ten towns taken from the⁴⁶ clans of the tribe, from the half-tribe, the half of Manasseh. •The sons of⁶¹
 Gershom and their clans were allotted thirteen towns taken from the tribe of⁴⁷ Issachar, the tribe of Asher, the tribe of Naphtali and the tribe of Manasseh⁶² in Bashan. •The sons of Merari and their clans were allotted twelve towns⁴⁸ taken from the tribe of Reuben, the tribe of Gad and the tribe of Zebulun.⁶³
 The sons of Israel gave these towns with their pasture lands to the Levites.⁴⁹

Also from the tribes of the sons of Judah, the sons of Benjamin and the sons⁶⁴ of Simeon, they allotted the towns to which they gave their names.⁶⁵

Towns from the tribe of Ephraim also were assigned to the territory of some⁵¹ clans of the sons of Kohath. •They were given the following cities of refuge:⁶⁶ Shechem with its pasture lands in the highlands of Ephraim, together with⁵²
 Gezer and its pasture lands, •Jokmeam, Beth-horon, •Aijalon and Gath-rimmon,⁶⁷ each with its pasture lands, •and from the half-tribe of Manasseh: Aner and^{53,54} Bileam, each with its pasture lands. This for the clan of the remaining sons of^{68,69}
 Kohath.⁵⁵

The sons of Gershom were given, from the half-tribe of Manasseh: Golan in⁵⁶
 Bashan, and Ashtaroth, each with its pasture lands; •from the tribe of Issachar:⁷¹
 Kedesh, Daberath, •Ramoath, Anem, each with its pasture lands; •from the tribe⁵⁷ of Asher: Mashal, Abdon, •Hukok, Rehob, each with its pasture lands; •from⁷²
 the tribe of Naphtali: Kedesh in Galilee, Hammon, Kiriathaim, each with its^{58,59}

G. THE NORTHERN TRIBES

Issachar

For the sons of Issachar: Tola, Puah, Jashub, Shimron: four.¹
 Sons of Tola: Uzzi, Rephaiah, Jeriel, Jahmai, Ibsam, Shemuel, heads of the² families of Tola. In the time of David these numbered twenty-two thousand six hundred stout fighting men, grouped according to their kinship.

- 3 Sons of Uzzi: Izrahiah. Sons of Izrahiah: Michael, Obadiah, Joel, Isshiah.
4 Five chiefs in all, answerable for a battle force numbering thirty-six thousand men, grouped according to their kinship and families; for there were many 5 women and children. They had kinsmen belonging to all the clans of Issachar, eighty-seven thousand stout fighting men, all belonging to one related group.

Benjamin

8:1f
||Gn46:21
||Nb26:38

- 6 Benjamin: Bela, Becher, Jediel: three.
7 Sons of Bela: Ezbon, Uzzi, Uzziel, Jerimoth and Iri: five, heads of families, stout fighting men, forming a related group of twenty-two thousand and thirty-four men.
8 Sons of Becher: Zemirah, Joash, Eliezer, Elioenai, Omri, Jeremoth, Abijah, 9 Anathoth, Alemeth, all these were the sons of Becher; the heads of their families, stout fighting men, formed a related group, according to their kinship, of twenty thousand two hundred men.
10 Sons of Jediel: Bilhan. Sons of Bilhan: Jeush, Benjamin, Ehud, Chenaanah, 11 Zethan, Tarshish, Ahishahar. All these sons of Jediel became heads of families, stout fighting men, numbering seventeen thousand two hundred men fit for active service.
12 Shuppm and Huppm. Sons of Ir: Hushim; his son: Aher.

Naphtali

||Gn46:24
||Nb26:48-50

- 13 Sons of Naphtali: Jahziel, Guni, Jezer, Shallum. They were the sons of Bilhah.^a

Manasseh

- 14 Sons of Manasseh: Asriel, born of his Aramaean concubine.^b She gave birth 15 to Machir, father of Gilead. Machir took a wife for Huppm and Shuppm. His sister's name was Maacah.

The name of the second^c was Zelophehad. Zelophehad had daughters.

Nb26:33

- 16 Maacah the wife of Machir gave birth to a son whom she called Peresh. His brother was called Sheresh and his sons Ulam and Rakem.

- 17 Sons of Ulam: Bedan. These were the sons of Gilead son of Machir, son of Manasseh.

- 18 His sister was Malchath. She gave birth to Ishhod, Abiezer and Mahlah.

Jg 6:11f

- 19 Shemida had sons: Ahian, Shechem, Likhi and Aniam.

Ephraim

- 20 Sons of Ephraim: Shuthelah, Bered his son, Tahath his son, Eleadah his son, ||Nb26:35
21 Tahath his son, Zabad his son, Shuthelah his son, Ezer and Elead.^d

- The men of Gath^e killed them because they had come down to raid their cattle. Ephraim their father mourned long for them and his brothers came to comfort him. Then Ephraim went to his wife, and she conceived and gave birth to a son whom she called Beriah, 'because' she said 'in my house one is in 23 misfortune.'^f He had a daughter, Sheerah, who built both Lower and Upper 24 Beth-horon and Uzen-sheerah.

Jos 16:3

7 a. The sons of Bilhah were Dan and Naphtali, Gn 30:6-8. No doubt Hushim, cf. Gn 46:23, here represents the tribe of Dan which otherwise does not appear.

b. Manasseh was in contact with the Aramaeans, cf. Gn 31:46f. Machir is the Transjordanian half of Manasseh, Nb 32:39f, and doubtless the older half, Jg 5:14. Huppm and Shuppm are Benjaminites, but the Manassite Jabesh of Gilead was an ally of the Benjaminites, cf. Jg 21:12.

c. The first was probably Asriel.

d. The Chronicler completes the list of Nb 25:35f with a second list which adds two Benjaminite names: Zabad, cf. 8:15f, and Ezer, cf. 4:4. Ephraim and Benjamin were neighbours and some clans may have passed from one tribe to the other.

e. The Hebr. adds 'who were born in the land'.

f. Following Greek. The name Beriah is interpreted as meaning 'in misfortune (raah)'. Beriah is therefore an Ephraimitic clan which later went over to Benjamin, cf. 8:13. It was perhaps at that time that Benjamin became an independent tribe.

Nb 1:10 Rephah his son, Shuthelah his son, Tahan his son, •Ladan his son, Ammihud 25
 Ex 33:11 his son, Elishama his son, •Nun his son, Joshua his son. 26
 They had lands and settlements in Bethel and its outlying towns, in Naaran 28 to the east, in Gezer and its outlying towns to the west, Shechem^g and its outlying towns, as far as Ayyah and its outlying towns. •Beth-shean, Taanach, Megiddo, 29 Dor, each with its outlying towns, were in the hands of the sons of Manasseh.
 There lived the sons of Joseph son of Israel.

Asher^h

||Gn46:17 Sons of Asher: Imnah, Ishvah, Ishvi, Beriah; their sister Serah. 30
 ||Nb26:44f Sons of Beriah: Heber and Malchiel. He was the father of Birzaith. •Heber 31 became father of Japhlet, Shomer, Hotham and their sister Shua. 32 Sons of Japhlet: Pasach, Bimhal and Ashvath. These are the sons of Japhlet. 33
 Sons of Shomer his brother: Rohgah, Hubbah and Aram. 34
 Sons of Helem his brother: Zophah, Imna, Shelesh and Amal. •Sons of 35
 Zophah: Suah, Harnepher, Shual, Beri and Imrah, •Bezer, Hod, Shamma, 37
 Shilshah, Ithran and Beerah. •Sons of Ithran: Jephunneh, Pispah, Ara. 38
 Sons of Ulla: Arah, Hanniel, Rizia. 39
 Nb 1:2 All these were sons of Asher, heads of families, stout fighting men; when 40 numbered, they formed a related group of twenty-six thousand men for active service.

H. BENJAMIN AND JERUSALEMThe line of Benjamin^a

7:6 8 Benjamin became father of Bela, his first-born, Ashbel second, Ahiram third, 1
 ||Gn46:21 8 Nohah fourth, Rapha fifth. •Bela had sons: Addar, Gera father of Ehud, 2

In Geba

These are the sons of Ehud. They were heads of families of the inhabitants 6 of Geba and led them into exile at Manahath: •Naaman, Ahijah and Gera. 7
 It was he who led them into exile;^b he became the father of Uzza and Ahihud.

In Moab

He became father of Shazaraim in the plains of Moab after he had dismissed 8 his wives, Hushim and Baara. •By his new wife he had sons: Jobab, Zibia, 9 Mesha, Malcam, •Jeuz, Sachia, Mirmah. These were his sons, heads of families. 10

In Ono and Lud

By Hushim he had sons: Abitub and Elpaal. •Sons of Elpaal: Eber, Misham 11 and Shemed: it was he who built Ono, and Lud with its outlying towns. 12

In Aijalon

7:23+ Beriah and Shema. They were heads of families of the inhabitants of Aijalon 13 and put the inhabitants of Gath to flight.
 His brother: Shashak. 14

In Jerusalem^c

Jeremoth, •Zebadiah, Arad, Eder, •Michael, Ishpah, Joha were sons of 15
 Beriah. 16

Zebadiah, Meshullam, Hizki, Haber, •Ishmerai, Izliah, Jobab were sons of 17
 Elpaal. 18

Jakim, Zichri, Zabdi, •Elioenai, Zille-thai, Eliel, •Adaiah, Beraiah, Shimrath 19,20 were sons of Shimei. 21

^{22,23} Ishpan, Eber, Eliel, •Abdon, Zichri, Hanan, •Hananiah, Elam, Anthothijah, ²⁴ Iphdeiah, Penuel were sons of Shashak.
²⁵ Shamsherai, Shehariah, Athaliah, •Jareshaiah, Elijah, Zichri were sons of ²⁶ Jeroham.

²⁸ These were the heads of families, grouped according to their kinship. They = 9:34 lived in Jerusalem.

= 9:35-38

²⁹ At Gibeon lived Abi-gibeon, whose wife was called Maacah. •His first-born ³⁰ son was Abdon, then Zur, Kish, Baal, Ner,^e Nadab, •Gedor, Ahio, Zecher •and ³¹ Mikloth who became father of Shimeah. These also, near their kinsmen, lived ³² with their kinsmen in Jerusalem.

Saul and his family^f

³³ Ner became father of Kish, Kish father of Saul, Saul father of Jonathan, = 9:39-43
³⁴ Malchi-shua, Abinadab and Eshbaal. •Son of Jonathan: Meribbaal. Meribbaal
³⁵ became father of Micah. •Sons of Micah: Pithon, Melech, Tarea, Ahaz. •Ahaz ³⁶ became father of Jehoaddah, Jehoaddah father of Alemeth, Azmaveth and ³⁷ Zimri. Zimri became father of Moza, •Moza father of Binea.

³⁸ Raphah his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son. •Azel had six sons, whose names were these: Azrikam, his first-born,^g then Ishmael, Sheariah, Obadiah, Hanan. All these were sons of Azel.

³⁹ Sons of Eshek his brother: Ulam, his first-born, Jeush second, Eliphelet third.
⁴⁰ Ulam had sons, stout fighting men and bowmen.^h They had numerous sons and grandsons, a hundred and fifty of them.

All these were sons of Benjamin.

Jerusalem, the holy city of Israel

^g. Shechem is usually associated with Manasseh. Here the Chronicler seems to call the Ephraim-Manasseh combination 'Ephraim'.

^h. Asher occupied the district between Phoenicia and Carmel, Jos 19:24-31; but the clan names here mentioned are apparently not restricted to this area.

ⁱ. 'his brother' corr.

^b. The story of Geba (confused with Gibeon), Jg 19-21, cf. Ho 9:9, is thus connected with Moab's oppression of Benjamin from which Ehud delivered them; the author sees this oppression as a deportation which he puts in the time of Gera, Ehud's father.

^c. This list of Benjaminite families must have been drawn up subsequently to the repopulation of Jerusalem after the Exile, cf. Ne 11:4-9.

^d. Before the time of David the tabernacle was at Gibeon, according to the Chronicler, 21:29.

^f. The Chronicler follows the line to the eighth generation after Saul, vv. 33-37a, and adds a second list, vv. 37b-38, going to the twelfth generation. He listed David's descendants to the Exile and after in order to emphasise the prosperity of the Davidic dynasty.

^g. To reach the total of six sons the Hebr. reads 'Bocheru' for 'his first-born'.

^h. Familiar description of the Benjaminites, 12:2; 2 Ch 14:7; 2 S 1:22.

⁹ ^a. The Chronicler describes the population of Jerusalem and of the countryside in a manner corresponding to the actual process of Israel's post-exilic restoration: small groups settled one after another in various places.

^b. That the Manassites were there (cf. 12:20-21) is not recorded by the ancient documents, even Ezr and Ne. It is possible that we have here a reminiscence of the arrival, in the 4th century, of certain Israelites from the N. who were opposed to the Samaritan schism. In the Chronicler's eyes the holy city is the property of all the tribes.

26:1 The keepers of the gate: Shallum, Akkub, Talmon, Ahiman and their kinsmen. Shallum, their head, •still keeps station at the royal gate, to the east. These were the gatekeepers of the camps of the Levites. •Shallum son of Kore, son of Ebiasaph, son of Korah, with his brother Korahites, of the same family, were

26:13 On the four sides stood the keepers of the gate, east, west, north, and south. Their kinsmen in their villages would come to join them for a week from time to time, •since the four head gatekeepers themselves lived there permanently. They were the Levites responsible for the chambers and treasuries of the house of God. •They spent the night in the precincts of the house of God, their duties being to guard it and open it every morning.

Some of them were responsible for the furnishings of worship; they counted them whenever they put them away and took them out. •Certain others were in charge of the furniture and all the sacred furnishings, the fine flour, the wine, the oil, the incense, the spices, •while those who prepared the mixture for the spices were priests.

Lv 2:4-7 One of the Levites, Mattithiah—he was the first-born of Shallum the Korahite—was, because of his loyalty, made responsible for making the offerings that were baked on the pan. •Some of their kinsmen the Kohathites were responsible for the loaves to be set out in rows sabbath by sabbath.

Ps 134:2 These are the cantors,^e heads of the levitical families. When free from service they lived in the Temple chambers, because they were on duty day and night.

=8:28 These were the heads of the levitical families, grouped according to their kinship. These heads lived in Jerusalem.^f

I. SAUL, DAVID'S PREDECESSOR

=8:29-38 The ancestors of Saul

At Gibeon lived Abi-gibeon and Jeiel, whose wife was called Maacah, His first-born son was Abdon, then Zur, Kish, Baal, Ner, Nadab, •Gedor, Ahio. Zechariah and Mikloth. •Mikloth became father of Shimeam. These also, near their kinsmen, lived with their kinsmen in Jerusalem.

Ner became father of Kish, Kish father of Saul, Saul father of Jonathan, Malchi-shua, Abinadab and Eshbaal. •Son of Jonathan: Meribbaal. Meribbaal

- 41 became father of Micah. •Sons of Micah: Pithon, Melech, Tahrea. • Ahaz
42 became father of Jarah, Jarah father of Alemeth, Azmaveth and Zimri; Zimri 43 became father of Moza, •Moza father of Binea.
44 Rephaiah his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son. •Azel had six sons; their names were these: Azrikam, his first-born, then Ishmael, Sheariah, Obadiah, Hanan. These were the sons of Azel.

The death of Saul

- 1 10 The Philistines made war on Israel, and the Israelites fled from the ||S31:1-13
2 Philistines and were slaughtered on Mount Gilboa. •The Philistines pressed Saul and his sons hard and killed Jonathan, Abinadab and Malchi-shua, the 3 sons of Saul. •The fighting grew heavy about Saul; the bowmen took him off 4 his guard, so that he fell wounded by the bowmen. •Then Saul said to his armour-bearer, 'Draw your sword and run me through with it. I do not want 5 these uncircumcised men to come and gloat over me'. But his armour-bearer was 6 afraid and would not do it. So Saul took his own sword and fell on it. •His armour-bearer, seeing that Saul was dead, fell on his sword too and died with 7 him. •And so Saul died, he and his three sons and all his House together.
8 When all the Israelites who were in the valley saw that the men of Israel had 9 taken to flight and that Saul and his sons were dead, they abandoned their towns and fled away. The Philistines then came in and occupied them.
10 When the Philistines came on the following day to strip the dead, they found 11 Saul and his sons lying on Mount Gilboa. •They stripped him and, taking his head and his armour, had them carried round the land of the Philistines to 12 proclaim the good news to their idols and their people. •They placed his armour in the temple of their god, but his head they nailed up in the temple of Dagon.
13 When all the inhabitants of Gilead^a heard all that the Philistines had done
14 to Saul, •all the warriors set off; and they took the bodies of Saul and his sons away and, bringing them to Jabesh, they buried their bones under the tamarisk of Jabesh; and they fasted for seven days.
15 Saul died because he had shown himself unfaithful to Yahweh: he had not kept the word of Yahweh; he had even questioned and consulted a necromancer.
16 He had not consulted Yahweh, who therefore put him to death and transferred the monarchy to David son of Jesse.

II. DAVID, FOUNDER OF THE TEMPLE WORSHIP

A. DAVID THE KING

David is anointed king^a

||2S5:1-3

- 1 11 All the tribes of Israel then rallied to David at Hebron. 'Look,' they said
2 'we are your own flesh and blood. •In days past when Saul was our king, it was you who led Israel in all their exploits; and Yahweh your God said to you, "You are the man who shall be shepherd of my people Israel, you shall 3 be the leader of my people Israel". ' •So all the elders of Israel came to the king at Hebron, and David made a pact with them at Hebron in the presence of

c. The Chronicler likens Jerusalem to the Israelite camp described in the 'Priestly' texts.

d. In this chapter (which precludes the Davidic organisation in ch. 26) the tabernacle is not in Jerusalem but at Gibeon, 21:29. The Levites have their own quarters (beginning of the process of settlement) but come to the tabernacle (already called 'Temple') to carry out their functions; some of them live near it. It remains only for David to see them housed in the city itself.

e. Sung worship did in fact pre-date David, but the Chronicler transfers to the Gibeon period the Jerusalem organisation as known to himself.

f. The Levites did not yet live in Jerusalem; the Chronicler is simply repeating 8:28-38 verbatim.

10 a. 'all the inhabitants of Gilead' corr.; 'all Jabesh of Gilead' Hebr., cf. 1 S 31:11.

11 a. It was only some years after Saul's death that this alliance of the N. tribes took place, but the Chronicler wishes to present David as the one who united all the tribes under Yahweh.

1S16:1-13 Yahweh, and they anointed David king of Israel, in accordance with the word of Yahweh through Samuel.

12S5:6-10 The capture of Jerusalem

Jg 19:10 David with all Israel marched on Jerusalem (that is to say, Jebus); the 4 inhabitants of the country were Jebusites. •The inhabitants of Jebus said to 5 David, 'You will not get in here'. But David captured the fortress of Zion, that is, the Citadel of David. •David said, 'The first to strike down a Jebusite 6 shall become leader and commander'. Joab son of Zeruiah was first to go up, and became leader. •David went to live in the fortress, and that is how it came 7 to be called the Citadel of David. •He then built a wall round the city, and the 8 Millo as well as the surrounding wall, while Joab restored the rest of the city.^b David grew greater and greater, and Yahweh Sabaoth was with him. 9

David's champions

These are the principal champions of David, those who in his reign grew in 10 power with him and who, with all Israel, had made him king in accordance with the word of Yahweh concerning Israel. •This is the roll of David's 11 champions: Jashobeam the Hachmonite, leader of the Thirty; it was he who wielded his battle-axe against three hundred whom he killed at one time.

27:2 27:4 After him there was Eleazar son of Dodo, the Ahohite, one of the three 12 champions. •He was with David at Pas-dammim when the Philistines mustered 13 for battle there. There was a field full of barley there; the army took flight before the Philistines, •but they positioned themselves in the middle of the field, defended it 14 and struck down the Philistines. So Yahweh brought about a great victory.

Three out of the Thirty went down to David at the rock near the Cave of 15 Adullam while a company of Philistines was encamped in the Valley of the Rephaim. •David was then in the stronghold and there was a Philistine garrison 16 in Bethlehem. •'Oh' David sighed 'if someone would fetch me a drink of water from the well that stands by the gate at Bethlehem!' •At this the three champions, forcing 17 their way through the Philistine camp, drew water from the well that stands by the gate of Bethlehem and, bringing it away, presented it to David. But David 18 would drink none of it and poured it out as a libation to Yahweh. •'God keep 19 me' he said 'from doing this! Am I to drink the blood of these men? For at the risk of their lives they brought it.' And so he would not drink. Such were the deeds of the three champions.

Abishai, the brother of Joab, was leader of the Thirty. It was he who wielded 20 his spear against three hundred whom he killed, winning himself a name among the Thirty. •He was more famous than the Thirty and became their captain, 21 but he was no rival for the Three.^c

Benaiah son of Jehoiada, a hero from Kabzeel, a man of many exploits, 22 struck down the two champions of Moab and, one snowy day, went down and killed the lion in the cistern. •He was also the man who killed an Egyptian, 23 a huge man five cubits tall. The Egyptian had a spear in his hand like a weaver's beam, but he went down against him with a staff, tore the spear from the Egyptian's hand and killed the man with it. •Such were the exploits of Benaiah 24 son of Jehoiada, winning him a name among the thirty champions. •He was more 25 famous than the Thirty, but he was no rival for the Three. David put him in command of his bodyguard.

The valiant champions:

Asahel the brother of Joab. 26

Elhanan son of Dodo, from Bethlehem.

Shammoth from Harod. 27

Helez the Pelonite.

Ira son of Ikkesh, from Tekoa. 28

—Abiezer from Anathoth.

- 29 Sibbecai from Hushah.
 Ilai from Ahoh.
 30 Maharai from Netophah.
 Heled son of Baanah, from Netophah.
 31 Ithai son of Ribai, from Gibeah of Benjamin.
 Benaiah from Pirathon.
 32 Hurai from the wadis of Gaash.
 Abiel from Beth-ha-arabah.
 33 Azmaveth from Baharum.
 Eliahba from Shaalbon.
 34 Bene-hashem from Gizon.
 Jonathan son of Shagee, from Harar.
 35 Ahiam son of Sachar, from Harar.
 Eliphelet son of Ur.
 36 Hepher from Mecherah.
 Ahijah the Pelonite.
 37 Hezro from Carmel.
 Naarai son of Ezbai.
 38 Joel the brother of Nathan.
 Mibhar son of Hagri.
 39 Zelek the Ammonite.
 Naharai from Beeroth, armour-bearer to Joab son of Zeruiah.
 40 Ira from Jattir.
 Gareb from Jattir.
 41 Uriah the Hittite.
 Zabad son of Ahlai.
 42 Adina son of Shiza the Reubenite, leader of the Reubenites and over the Thirty.
 43 Hanan son of Maacah.
 Joshaphat the Mithnite.
 44 Uzzia from Ashteroth.
 Shama and Jeiel, sons of Hotham the Aroerite.
 45 Jediahel son of Shimri, and Joha his brother, the Tizite.
 46 Eliel the Mahavite.
 Jeribai and Joshaviah, sons of Elnaam.
 Ithmah the Moabite.
 47 Eliel, Obed, and Jaasiel from Zoba.

David's first supporters^a

- 1 12 These are the men who rallied to David at Ziklag when he was still kept
 2 from the presence of Saul son of Kish; they were champions, a standby
 2 in battle, •who could handle the bow with right hand or with left, who could 8:40+ use stones or arrows.
 3 Of the kinsmen of Saul the Benjaminite: •Ahiezer the leader, and Joash, sons of Hasshemar from Gibeah, Jeziel and Pelet, sons of Azmaveth, Beracah and 4 Jehu from Anathoth, •Ishmaiah from Gibeon, a champion among the Thirty,
 4 and over the Thirty; •Jeremiah, Jahaziel, Johanan and Jozabad from Gederoth,
 5,6 Eluzai, Jerimoth, Bealiah, Shemariah, Shephatiah from Hariph, •Elkahah, 5,6 Isshiah, Azarel, Joezer, Jashobeam, Korahites, •Joelah, Zebadiah, sons of 7 Jeroham from Gedor.

b. The Chronicler credits David alone with the building of the walls (what the Millo was his contemporaries no longer knew, cf. 1 K 9:15+) and attributes to Joab the minor work of building the houses. Nehemiah was to perform the same task, Ne 3:17f.

c. A gloss adds 'among the two'.

12 a. To the list of David's knights the Chronicler adds a representative list of all the tribes who rallied to David; he sees David as the one who gathers Israel together. Cf. 11:42 where a Reubenite is already mentioned.

Some Gadites seceded to David in the stronghold in the wilderness. They⁹ Dt 33:20 were stout fighting men and trained, well used to shield and spear. Lions they⁸ were in aspect, and, for speed, gazelles on the mountains. •Ezer was the leader,¹⁰ Obadiah second, Eliab third, •Mishmannah fourth, Jeremiah fifth, •Attai sixth,^{11,12} Eliel seventh, •Johanan eighth, Elzabad ninth, •Jeremiah tenth, Machbannai^{10,11} eleventh. •These sons of Gad were troop commanders, each one in command,^{13,14} the lesser of a hundred, the greater of a thousand. •These are the men who¹⁵ crossed the Jordan in the first month, when it overflows its course, and put to¹⁶ flight all who lived on its banks, both east and west.¹⁵

Certain Benjaminites, too, and Judaeans came to David in the stronghold.¹⁷
David went forward to them and addressed them. 'If you come to me as friends'¹⁸ he said 'to give me help, then I am ready to join with you. But if it is to betray¹⁷ me to my enemies, when I have done no wrong, then may the God of our ancestors take note and give judgement.'

Then the spirit took possession of Amasai, leader of the Thirty:¹⁹

'Go forth, David! Peace be with you, son of Jesse!
Peace to you, peace to him that helps you,
for your help is your God.'

David accepted them and added them to his other company commanders.

Certain Manassites deserted to David as he was setting out with the²⁰ Philistines to fight Saul. But he gave them no help because the Philistine chiefs,¹⁹ after consultation, dismissed him. 'If he deserted to his master Saul' they said²¹
'it would cost us our heads.' •He was on his way to Ziklag when these²⁰
Manassites deserted to him: Adnah, Jozabad, Jediael, Michael, Jozabad, Elihu, Zillethai, commanders of thousands in Manasseh. •This was a reinforcement²² for David and his troops, since they were all valiant champions and became²¹ officers in the army.

Indeed reinforcements reached David every day, so that his camp grew into²³
a camp of prodigious size.^b²²

The warriors who assured David's kingship^c

These are the figures from the roll of warriors equipped for battle who joined²⁴
David at Hebron to transfer Saul's kingship to him in accordance with the²³ order of Yahweh:

Sons of Judah carrying shield and spear: six thousand eight hundred warriors²⁵ equipped for battle;²⁴

of the sons of Simeon; seven thousand one hundred champions valiant in war;²⁶ of the sons of Levi: four thousand six hundred, •in addition to Jehoiada,²⁷ 27:5 in command of the Aaronites, with three thousand seven hundred of these,²⁵

Zadok, a young and valiant champion, and twenty-two commanders of his family;^{26,27} of the sons of Benjamin: three thousand kinsmen of Saul, most of them²⁹ hitherto in the service of the House of Saul;²⁸ of the sons of Ephraim: twenty thousand eight hundred valiant champions,³¹ men famous in their families;³⁰ of the half-tribe of Manasseh: eighteen thousand men assigned by name to³² go and proclaim David king;³¹ of the sons of Issachar, sound judges of the times when Israel should take³³ action, and the way to do it: two hundred chiefs and all their kinsmen under³² their command;

of Zebulun: fifty thousand men fit for service, marshalled for battle, with³⁴ warlike weapons of every kind, staunch-hearted auxiliaries;³³ of Naphtali: a thousand commanders, and with them thirty-seven thousand³⁵ men armed with shield and spear;³⁴

of the Danites: twenty-eight thousand six hundred men marshalled for battle;³⁶

of Asher: forty thousand men fit for service, marshalled for battle;³⁷

38 from Transjordan: a hundred and twenty thousand men of Reuben, Gad 37 and the half-tribe of Manasseh, with warlike weapons of every kind.

39 All these fighting men, marshalled reinforcements, came to Hebron with the 38 purpose and determination to proclaim David king over all Israel; and the rest of 40 Israel, too, were all of one mind in making David king. •For three days they 39 stayed there, eating and drinking with David.

41 Their kinsmen had made preparations for them; •furthermore, from as far 40 as Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali their neighbours brought provisions, by donkey and camel, mule and ox—flour cakes, fig cakes, bunches of raisins, wine, oil, quantities of oxen and sheep; for there was joy in Israel.

The ark brought back from Kiriath-jearim

1 13 David conferred with the commanders of thousands and of hundreds and 2 with all the leaders. •To the whole assembly of Israel David said, 'If this has your approval, and if Yahweh our God wills it so, we will send messengers to the rest of our brothers throughout the territories of Israel, and also to the priests and Levites in their towns and adjacent lands, bidding them join us.
3 We will then recover the ark of our God, for in the time of Saul we neglected it.'

4 The whole assembly agreed to this, for in the eyes of all the people it was 5 the right thing to do. •So David gathered all the people together from the Shihor of Egypt to the Pass of Hamath to bring the ark of God from Kiriath-6 jearim. •Then David and all Israel went up to Baalah, to Kiriath-jearim in Judah, to bring up from there the ark of God which bears the name of Yahweh
7 who is seated on the cherubs. •At Abinadab's house they placed the ark of God
8 on a new cart. Uzzah and Ahio were leading the cart. •David and all Israel danced before God with all their might, singing to the accompaniment of lyres, 9 harps, tambourines, cymbals, trumpets. •When they came to the threshing-floor of the Javelin, Uzzah stretched his hand out to hold the ark, as the oxen 10 were making it tilt. •Then the anger of Yahweh blazed out against Uzzah and he struck him down because he had laid his hand on the ark, and he died there 11 in the presence of God. •David was displeased that Yahweh had broken out against Uzzah, and that place was called Perez-uzzah as it still is now.

Jg 20:1+

12 David went in fear of God that day. 'However can I bring the ark of God 13 to my home?' he said. •So David did not take the ark home to the Citadel of 14 David, but took it to the house of Obed-edom of Gath. •The ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom, in his house, for three months, and Yahweh blessed the family of Obed-edom and everything that belonged to him.

David at Jerusalem, his palace, his children

1 14 Hiram king of Tyre sent envoys to David with cedar wood and stone-
2 masons and carpenters to build him a palace. •David then knew that Yahweh had confirmed him as king over Israel, and that for the sake of his people Israel his reign was being made glorious.

||2S5:11-16

3 At Jerusalem David took more wives and fathered more sons and daughters.
4 These are the names of the children born to him in Jerusalem: Shammua, Shobab, 5 Nathan, Solomon, •Ibhar, Elishua, Elpelet, •Nogah, Nepheg, Japhia, •Elishama, 6 Beeliada, Eliphelet.

Victories over the Philistines

8 When the Philistines heard that David had been anointed king of all Israel, they all marched up to seek him out. On hearing this, David went out to meet 12 b. Lit. 'camp of the gods', Hebr. expression for son of Jehoiada of 11:22 with the priest of the same name, 15:24; 16:5. He did not choose to mention Abiathar whom Solomon dismissed in favour of Zadok.

c. Census of warriors on the model of Nb 1-3; 26.
d. The Chronicler appears to identify the Benaiiah them. •When the Philistines arrived they deployed in the Valley of the Rephaim. 9 David consulted God; 'Shall I attack the Philistines?' he asked. 'Will you deliver 10 them into my power?' Yahweh answered him, 'Attack! I will deliver them into your power.' •Accordingly they went up to Baal-perazim and there David defeated 11 them. David said, 'Through me God has made a breach in my enemies like a breach the waters make'. For this reason that place was called Baal-perazim.

They had left their gods behind them there, and David ordered them to be burnt. 12

Again the Philistines deployed in the valley. •David again consulted God, 13 and God answered, 'Do not attack them from the front; go round and engage them opposite the balsam trees. •When you hear the sound of steps in the tops 15 of the balsam trees, launch your attack, for that will be God going out ahead of you to rout the army of the Philistines.' •David did as God had ordered, and 16 they routed the Philistine army from Gibeon as far as Gezer.

The fame of David spread into every region, and Yahweh made him feared 17 by every nation.

B. THE ARK IN THE CITADEL OF DAVID

Preparations for moving the ark^a 15 He put up buildings for himself in the Citadel of David and prepared 1 a place for the ark of God, and he pitched a tent for it. •Then he said, 2

•'The ark of God may be moved only by the Levites, since Yahweh has chosen them to carry the ark of Yahweh and to serve him always'.

Nb 1:50;
3:5f; 4:
7:9
Dt 31:25

Then David gathered all Israel together in Jerusalem to bring the ark of 3
God up to the place he had prepared for it. •David called together the sons of 4
Aaron and the sons of Levi: •of the sons of Kohath: Uriel the chief and his 5 hundred and twenty kinsmen; •of the sons of Merari: Asaiah the chief and his 6 two hundred and twenty kinsmen; •of the sons of Gershon: Joel the chief and 7 his hundred and thirty kinsmen; •of the sons of Elizaphan: Shemaiah the chief 8 and his two hundred kinsmen; •of the sons of Hebron: Eliel the chief and eighty 9 kinsmen; •of the sons of Uzziel: Amminadab the chief and his hundred and 10 twenty kinsmen.

David summoned the priests Zadok and Abiathar, and the Levites Uriel, 11
Asaiah, Joel, Shemaiah, Eliel and Amminadab. •To these he said, 'You are 12
the heads of the levitical families. Sanctify yourselves,^b you and your kinsmen, and bring the ark of Yahweh, the God of Israel, up to the place I have prepared for it. •It was because you were not there the first time that Yahweh our God 13 broke out against us,^c because we did not approach him in the right way.' •So the 14 priests and the Levites sanctified themselves to bring up the ark of Yahweh, the God of Israel, •and the Levites carried the ark of God with the shafts on 15 their shoulders, as Moses had ordered in accordance with the word of Yahweh.

Nb 7:9

David then told the heads of the Levites to assign duties for their kinsmen 16 as cantors, with their various instruments of music, harps and lyres and cymbals, to play joyful tunes. •The Levites then appointed Heman son of Joel, Asaph 17 son of Berechiah, one of his brothers, Ethan son of Kushaiah, one of their Merarite kinsmen; •and with them, next in rank, their kinsmen: Zechariah son 18 of Jaaziel, Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Unni, Eliab, Benaiah, Maaseiah, Mattithiah, Eliphelehu, Mikneiah, Obed-edom, Jeiel, keepers of the gate. •Heman, Asaph 19 and Ethan, the cantors, were to clash the cymbals of bronze; •Zechariah, 20 Jaaziel, Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Unni, Eliab, Maaseiah and Benaiah were to play the keyed harp.^d •Mattithiah, Eliphelehu, Mikneiah, Obed-edom, Jeiel and 21 Azaziah, giving the beat, were to play the octave lyre. •Chenaniah, a chief of the Levites and versed in divine oracles, was to expound these, being expert 22 in them. •Berechiah and Elkanah were to be gatekeepers to the ark. •The priests 23
Shebaniah, Joshaphat, Nethanel, Amasai, Zechariah, Benaiah and Eliezer were 24

to sound the trumpet before the ark of God. Obed-edom and Jehiah were to be gatekeepers to the ark.^a

The ark is brought to Jerusalem

25 So David, with the elders of Israel and the commanders of thousands, went ||2S6:12-19 to bring up the ark of the covenant of Yahweh from Obed-edom's house with 26 great rejoicing. •And since God was helping the Levites who carried the ark of 27 the covenant of Yahweh, they sacrificed seven bulls and seven rams. •David was wearing a cloak of fine linen, like all the Levites who carried the ark, the cantors and Chenaniah, the officer in charge of its transportation. David also 28 wore the linen ephod. •Thus all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of Yahweh with acclaim, to the sound of the horn, of trumpets, of cymbals, making 29 harp and lyre resound. •Now as the ark of the covenant of Yahweh entered the Citadel of David, Michal the daughter of Saul was watching from the window and saw King David dancing and exultant; and she despised him in her heart.

1 16 They brought the ark of God in and put it inside the tent that David had ||2S6:17-19 pitched for it; and they offered holocausts before God, and communion
2 sacrifices. •And when David had finished offering holocausts and communion
3 sacrifices, he blessed the people in the name of Yahweh. •He then distributed to all the Israelites, men and women, a loaf of bread each, a portion of dates, and a raisin cake.^a

The service of the Levites before the ark

4 David appointed some of the Levites as ministers before the ark of Yahweh, Si 47:9 5 to commemorate, glorify and praise Yahweh, the God of Israel: •first Asaph, second Zechariah, then Uzziel,^b Shemiramoth, Jehiel, Mattithiah, Eliab, Benaiah, Obed-edom, Jeiel. These were to play the harp and the lyre, Asaph was to clash 6 the cymbals. •The priests Benaiah and Jahaziel were to keep sounding the 7 trumpet before the ark of the covenant of Yahweh. •That day, David, foremost in praising Yahweh, entrusted this song of praise^c to Asaph and his kinsmen:

8 Give thanks to Yahweh, call his name aloud, ||Ps105:1-15 proclaim his deeds to the peoples.
9 Sing to him, play to him,
tell over all his marvels.
10 Glory in his holy name,
let the hearts that seek Yahweh rejoice!
11 Seek Yahweh and his strength, seek his face untiringly;
12 remember the marvels he has done,
his wonders, the judgements from his mouth.
13 Stock of Israel his servant,
sons of Jacob his chosen one, 14 he is Yahweh our God;
his authority is over all the earth.

15 a. The Chronicler is about to define the part played in the ceremony by priests and Levites, after the fashion of the 'Priestly' texts.

b. By ceremonial ablution, eating of sacrificial meat, cf. Lv 22:2, and abstention from sexual intercourse, 1 S 21:6.

c. The author's interpretation of Uzzah's death, 13:10f, cf. 2 S 6:8+.

d. Translation uncertain. The names of the other musical instruments are found in Ps.

e. The Chronicler has combined three lists: first, that of the famous cantors Heman, Asaph and Ethan, cf. 6:18-32; second, a list of twelve keepers of the gate; third, a list of seven priests together with the mention of Obed-edom and Jehiah as 'gatekeepers to the ark', an expression corresponding to the situation in his day; there are two legitimate sanctuaries, the ark and the tabernacle, 16:37-42. Among these people the Chronicler has divided the various musical functions. The oracular and prophetic function which the author sees in the liturgical chant, 25:1, is attributed to Chenaniah who, in v. 27, is charged with the 'bearing' (massa) of the ark; but massa also means 'oracle'.

16 a. Or one might correct, and read 'each had his portion of food, a sacred morsel of beef and a sacred morsel of mutton'.

b. 'Uzziel', cf. 15:18; 'Jeiel' Hebr.

c. This hymn is made up of fragments of Ps 105, 96 and 106, with a few textual variants.

Remember his covenant for ever, 15
 his word of command for a thousand generations, the pact he made with Abraham, 16
 his oath to Isaac.

He established it as a statute for Jacob, 17
 an everlasting covenant for Israel.
 'I give you a land,' he said 18
 'Canaan, your allotted heritage,
 'there where you were easily counted, 19
 'few in number, strangers to the country.'

They went from nation to nation, 20 from one kingdom to another people, he let no man oppress them, 21
 he punished kings on their behalf.
 'Do not touch my anointed ones,' he said 22
 'do not harm my prophets.'

||Ps 96

Sing to Yahweh, all the earth. 23
 Proclaim his salvation day after day, tell of his glory among the nations, 24
 tell his marvels to every people.

Yahweh is great, loud must be his praise, 25
 he is to be feared beyond all gods.
 Nothingness, all the gods of the nations. 26

Yahweh himself made the heavens;
 in his presence are splendour and majesty, 27
 in his sanctuary power and joy.

Pay tribute to Yahweh, families of the peoples, 28 tribute to Yahweh of glory and power, tribute to Yahweh of his name's due glory. 29

Bring out the offering, bear it before him, worship Yahweh in his sacred court, tremble before him, all the earth! 30

Firm has he made the world, and unshakeable.
 Let the heavens be glad, let earth rejoice! 31
 Say among the nations, 'Yahweh is king!'
 Let the sea thunder and all that it holds, 32
 let the fields exult and all that is in them, let all the woodland trees cry out for joy, 33
 at the presence of Yahweh;
 for he comes to judge the earth.

Ps 106:1,
47-48
Jr 33:11

Give thanks to Yahweh, for he is good, 34
 his love is everlasting.

Say, 'God of our salvation, save us, 35 gather us, rescue us from among the heathen, to give thanks to your holy name
 and to find our happiness in praising you.'

Blessed be Yahweh the God of Israel 36
 from all eternity and for ever!
 And let all the people say, 'Amen!'
 Alleluia!

- 37 There before the ark of the covenant of Yahweh David left Asaph and his 25:1
kinsmen to maintain a permanent ministry before the ark as each day's ritual 38 required, •and also Obed-edom, with his sixty-eight kinsmen. Obed-edom son of Jeduthun, and Hosah^d were to be keepers of the gate.
- 39 Zadok the priest and the priests, his kinsmen, he left before the tabernacle 40 of Yahweh on the high place at Gibeon •to offer holocausts to Yahweh unfailingly, morning and evening, on the altar of holocaust, and to carry out 41 all that is written in the Law of Yahweh laid down for Israel. •With them were Heman and Jeduthun and the rest of those who were chosen and assigned by 42 name to give praise to God, 'for his love is everlasting'. •With them were Heman and Jeduthun who were to sound the trumpets, cymbals and musical instruments accompanying the hymns to God. The sons of Jeduthun were given charge of the gate.
- 43 Then all went away, each to his own house, and David returned to bless his 12S6:19-20 household.

The prophecy of Nathan^a

12S7:1-17

- 1 17 Once David had settled into his house, he said to the prophet Nathan,
'Here am I living in a house of cedar, while the ark of Yahweh's covenant 2 is still beneath the awning of a tent'. •Nathan said to David, 'Do all that is in your mind, for God is with you'.
- 3 But that very night the word of Yahweh came to Nathan,
4 'Go and tell my servant David, "Yahweh says this: You are not the man
5 to build me a house to dwell in. •I have never stayed in a house from the day I brought Israel out until today, but went from tent to tent, from one shelter 6 to another. •In all my journeying with the whole of Israel, did I say to any one of the judges of Israel, whom I had appointed as shepherds of my people: Why 7 have you not built me a house of cedar?... This is what you must say to my servant David: Yahweh Sabaoth says this: I took you from the pasture, 8 from following the sheep, to be leader of my people Israel. •I have been with you on all your expeditions; I have cut off all your enemies before you. I will 2 M 5:19 9 give you fame as great as the fame of the greatest on earth. •I will provide a place for my people Israel; I will plant them there and they shall live in that place and never be disturbed again; nor shall the wicked continue to destroy 10 them, as they did •in the days when I appointed judges over my people Israel;
I will subdue all their enemies. I will make you great;^b Yahweh will make 11 you a House. •And when your days are ended and you must go to your ancestors, I will preserve your offspring after you, a son of your own, and make 12S7:12f
12 his sovereignty secure. •It is he who shall build a house for me and I will make 28:6 13 his throne firm for ever. •I will be a father to him and he a son to me. I will not withdraw my favour from him, as I withdrew it from your predecessor.
14 I will preserve him for ever in my house and in my kingdom; and his throne shall be established for ever." '

- 15 Nathan related all these words to David and this whole revelation.

David's prayer

12S7:18-29

- 16 King David then went in and, seated before Yahweh, said:
'Who am I, Yahweh God, and what is my House, that you have led me as 17 far as this? •Yet in your eyes, O God, this is still not far enough, and you make your promises extend to your servant's House into the distant future. You show 18 me as it were a line of men, and it is Yahweh God, who promises it. •What more can David say to you for the honour you have given to your servant?

d. Jeduthun, known also from the titles of Ps 39, 62 and 77, is apparently the same as Ethan. He appears here as the father of Obed-edom, v. 38, and therefore of the gatekeepers, v. 42. Certain Levites in the times of Nehemiah were descendants of his, Ne 11:17;

1 Ch 9:16. On Hosah, cf. 26:10.

17 a. The author follows 2 S 7 closely with a few characteristic modifications.

b. 'I will make you great' corr.; 'I declare to you' Hebr.

You yourself have singled out your servant. •For your servant's sake, this dog of yours,^c you have done such a great thing by revealing all this greatness to come.
 SI 36:4 There is none like you, no God except you alone, that we have ever heard of. 20
 Is there another people on the earth like your people Israel, with a God setting 21 out to redeem it and make it his people, giving yourself a name for great and terrible things by driving nations out before your people whom you redeemed from Egypt? •You made your people Israel your own people for ever; and you, 22 Yahweh, have become their God. •Now, Yahweh, let the promise you have 23 made to your servant and to his House be always kept, and do as you have said.
 May this promise hold good and your name be exalted for ever; may they say, 24
 "Yahweh Sabaoth is the God of Israel, he is God for Israel." The House of your servant David will be made secure in your presence, •since you yourself, 25 my God, have made the revelation to your servant that you would build him a House; and so your servant has ventured to offer this prayer in your presence.
 Yes, Yahweh, you are God indeed, and you have made this kind promise to your 26
 Ps 21:6 servant. •Be pleased, then, to bless the House of your servant, that it may 27 continue for ever in your presence; for what you, Yahweh, have blessed is blessed for ever.'

||2S8:1-14 The wars of David

18 After this, David defeated the Philistines and subdued them. From the 1 hands of the Philistines he took Gath and its outlying villages. •He also 2 defeated the Moabites; the Moabites became subject to David, paying him tribute.

At Hamath David defeated Hadadezer^a king of Zobah on his way to 3 consolidate his power over the river Euphrates. •David captured one thousand 4 chariots, seven thousand charioteers and twenty thousand foot soldiers from him; David hamstrung all the chariot teams, keeping only a hundred of them.
 The Aramaeans of Damascus came to the help of Hadadezer king of Zobah, 5 but David killed twenty-two thousand men of the Aramaeans. •Then David 6 imposed governors on Aram of Damascus, and the Aramaeans became subject to David, paying him tribute. Wherever David went, God gave him victory.
 David took the golden shields carried by the guards of Hadadezer and brought 7 them to Jerusalem. •From Tibhath and from Cun, towns belonging to Hadadezer, 8 22:3 David took a great quantity of bronze; with this Solomon made the bronze Sea and the bronze pillars and furnishings.

When Tou king of Hamath heard that David had defeated the entire army 9 of Hadadezer king of Zobah, •he sent his son Hadoram to King David to greet 10 him and to congratulate him on fighting and defeating Hadadezer, since Hadadezer was the enemy of Tou. He sent articles of every kind in gold, silver 26:26 and bronze, •which King David also consecrated to Yahweh together with the 11 silver and gold he had levied from all the nations: Edom, Moab, Ammonites, Philistines, Amalek.

Abishai son of Zeruiah defeated the Edomites in the Valley of Salt, eighteen 12 thousand of them. •He imposed governors on Edom, and all the Edomites 13 became subject to David. Wherever David went, God gave him victory.

The exploits of David's commanders

||2S8:15-18 David ruled over all Israel, administering law and justice to all his people. •Joab 14 son of Zeruiah was in command of the army; Jehoshaphat son of Ahilud was 15 recorder; •Zadok son of Ahitub and Abiathar son of Ahimelech^b were priests; 16 Shavsha was secretary; •Benaiah son of Jehoiada was in command of the 17
 Cherethites and Pelethites; David's sons held the first place at the king's side.^c

||2S10:1-19 19 After this, Nahash king of the Ammonites died and his son Hanun suc- 1 ceeded him. •David thought, 'I will show kindness to Hanun son of Nahash 2 since his father was kind to me'. And David sent messengers with his condolences on his father's death. But when David's servants reached Hanun in the 3 land of the Ammonites to present these condolences, •the Ammonite leaders, said to Hanun, 'Do you imagine David means to honour your father when he sends you messengers of sympathy? On the contrary, the reason why his servants have come to you is to explore, overthrow and reconnoitre the country.'

4 Whereupon Hanun seized David's servants, shaved them, cut their clothes half-way up to the buttocks, and sent them away. •David was soon told what had happened to these men; he sent someone to meet them, for the men were covered with shame. 'Stay in Jericho' the king said 'until your beards have grown again, and come back then.'

6 The Ammonites saw that they had incurred the enmity of David, and accordingly Hanun and the Ammonites sent a thousand talents of silver to hire chariots and charioteers from the Aramaeans of Upper Mesopotamia, of Maacah and of Zobah. •They hired thirty-two thousand chariots; also the king of Maacah with his army. These came and encamped before Medeba, while the Ammonites, having left their towns and mustered, were advancing to the war. •When David heard this, he sent Joab with all the common soldiers and the champions. •The Ammonites marched out and drew up their line of battle at the approaches to the town, but the kings who had come kept their distance in the open country. •Joab, seeing that he had to fight on two fronts, to his front and to his rear, chose the best of Israel's picked men and drew them up in line facing the Aramaeans. •He entrusted the rest of the army to his brother Abishai, and drew them up in line facing the Ammonites. •'If the Aramaeans prove too strong for me,' he said 'you must come to my help; if the Ammonites prove too strong for you, I will come to yours. •Take courage and stand firm for the sake of our people and the towns of our God. And may Yahweh do as he thinks right.' •Joab and the force with him joined battle with the Aramaeans, who fled before him. •When the Ammonites saw that the Aramaeans had taken flight, they too fled before Abishai, Joab's brother, and withdrew into their town. Then Joab came back to Jerusalem.

16 Seeing that they had been defeated by Israel, the Aramaeans sent messengers and mobilised the Aramaeans from beyond the river, with Shophach, commander of Hadadezer's army, at their head. •Word of this was brought to David, who mustered all Israel, crossed the Jordan, made contact with them and took up position near them. David drew up his line of battle facing the Aramaeans, who then engaged him. •But the Aramaeans gave ground before Israel, and David killed seven thousand of their chariot teams and forty thousand foot soldiers. He also killed Shophach their general. •When the vassals of Hadadezer saw that they had been defeated by Israel, they made peace with David and became subject to him. The Aramaeans were reluctant to give any more help to the Ammonites.

1 20 At the turn of the year, the time when kings go campaigning, Joab led out the troops and ravaged the land of the Ammonites and went to lay siege to Rabbah. David, however, remained in Jerusalem. Joab reduced Rabbah and dismantled it. •David took the crown from the head of Milcom^a and found that it weighed a talent of gold; in it was set a precious stone which made an ornament for David's head. He carried off a great quantity of spoil from the town. •He brought away its population and set them to work with saws, iron picks and axes. David treated all the Ammonite towns in the same way. Then David and the whole army returned to Jerusalem.

4 After this, war with the Philistines was resumed at Gezer. This was when

c. 'this dog of yours' corr.; 'according to your own heart' Hebr.

18 a. 'Hadadezer' with the present Hebr.; the original text (cf. Greek) probably read 'Hadarezer' here and in what follows.

b. Var. 'Abimelech'.

c. According to 2 S they were priests; but for the Chronicles, as for the 'Priestly' texts and Ezekiel, the priests are of levitical, and not Judaeen descent; moreover, the political and the religious authorities are distinct.

20 a. In place of 'Milcom' the Hebr. reads 'their king'.

20:10+ Sibbecai of Hushah killed Sippai, a descendant of the Rephaim. The Philistines were subdued.

War with the Philistines broke out again, and Elhanan son of Jair killed Lahmi, the brother of Goliath of Gath,^b the shaft of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

There was another battle at Gath, where there was a man of huge stature with six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot, twenty-four in all. He too was a descendant of Rapha. Jonathan, son of David's brother Shimea, killed him when he defied Israel.

These men were descended from Rapha of Gath and they fell at the hands of David and his guards.

C. PRELUDE TO THE BUILDING OF THE TEMPLE^a

2S24:1-9 The census

21 Satan^b rose against Israel and incited David to take a census of the Israelites. David said to Joab and to the senior army officers, 'Go, and take a census of Israel, from Beersheba to Dan, then come back and tell me the total.' Joab said, 'May Yahweh multiply the people a hundred times! My lord king, are they not all servants of my lord? Why should my lord make this enquiry? Why should guilt be brought on Israel?' But the king enforced his order on Joab, and Joab went away, covered the whole of Israel, and then returned to Jerusalem. Joab gave David the figures for the census of the people: the whole of Israel numbered one million one hundred thousand men capable of drawing sword, and Judah four hundred and seventy thousand capable of drawing sword.^c Joab had found the king's command so distasteful that he had taken no census of Levi or of Benjamin.

2S24:10-17 The pestilence. God's forgiveness

God looked with displeasure on these proceedings, and he struck Israel. Then David said to God, 'I have committed a grave sin by doing this. But now I beg you to forgive your servant for this fault. I have been very foolish.' Then Yahweh spoke to Gad, David's seer, 'Go and say to David, "Yahweh says this: I offer you three things; choose one of them for me to do to you." So Gad went to David and said, 'Yahweh, says this, "Take your choice: three years of famine, three months of disaster at the hands of your enemies, with the sword of your enemies thrusting at you, or the sword of Yahweh and three days' pestilence in the country, with the angel of Yahweh ravaging all the territory of Israel". Now decide how I am to answer him who sends me.' 'This is a hard choice' David said to Gad. 'But let me rather fall into the power of Yahweh, since his mercy is very great; and not into the power of men.'

2 Ch 3:1 So Yahweh sent a pestilence on Israel, and seventy thousand men of the Israelites died. Then God sent the angel to Jerusalem to destroy it, but as he was about to destroy it, Yahweh looked and thought better of this evil;^d and he said to the destroying angel, 'Enough! Now withdraw your hand.' The angel of Yahweh was standing beside the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite. Jos 5:13 David, raising his eyes, saw the angel of Yahweh standing between earth and heaven, a drawn sword in his hand stretched out towards Jerusalem. Then David and the elders, clothed in sackcloth, fell on their faces. 'Was it not I who sinned, who did this most wicked thing? But these, this flock, what have they done? Yahweh my God, let your hand lie heavy on me and on my family; but let your people escape the plague.'

The angel of Yahweh then said to Gad, 'David must go up and erect an altar

19 to Yahweh on the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.' •So David went up 20 at the word which Gad had spoken in the name of Yahweh. •Now Ornan, as he turned, had seen the angel and had hidden, with his four sons. Ornan was 21 threshing wheat •when David came to him. Ornan looked down, saw David, came off the threshing-floor and with his face to the ground did homage to David.
 22 Then David said to Ornan, 'Let me have the site of this threshing-floor, to build an altar to Yahweh. Let me have it at its full price. For then the plague will 23 be turned away from the people.' •'Take it' Ornan said to David 'and let my lord the king do as he thinks right. Look, I will give you the oxen for holocausts, the threshing-sled for the wood and the wheat for the oblation. I give them all.'
 24 But King David said to Ornan, 'No. I must buy it from you at the full price;
 I will not take for Yahweh what belongs to you, offering holocausts that cost 25 me nothing.' •So David gave Ornan six hundred shekels of gold by weight for the site.

26 David built an altar there to Yahweh and offered holocausts and communion Jg 6:21 sacrifices. He called on Yahweh, and Yahweh answered him with fire from 27 heaven on the altar of holocaust •and ordered the angel to sheathe his sword. 1K18:38 28 Then it was, seeing that Yahweh had answered him on the threshing-floor of 29 Ornan the Jebusite, that David offered sacrifice there. •The tabernacle of Yahweh that Moses had made in the wilderness and the altar of holocaust were at that 30 time on the high place at Gibeon, •but David had not been able to go into God's presence there to consult him, so fearful was he of the sword of the angel
 1 of Yahweh. 22 Then David said, 'Here is the house of Yahweh God; and this shall be the altar of holocaust for Israel'.

Preparations for the building of the Temple^a

2 David gave orders for the gathering of all the strangers living^b in the land 2Ch2:16 of Israel and set stonecutters preparing dressed stones for building the house of 1K5:31-32 3 God. •David furthermore stored up great quantities of iron to make nails for 18:8
 the leaves of the doors and for clamps, and more bronze than could be weighed; 4 logs of cedar too, beyond number, the Sidonians and Tyrians having brought Ezr 3:7
 cedar logs to David in great quantities.
 5 Then David said, 'My son Solomon is young, of tender years, and the house to be built for Yahweh must be of great splendour, renowned for its magnificence in every country. I will make preparations for him.' And so, before he 6 died, David made ample preparations. •He then summoned his son Solomon
 7 and instructed him to build a house for Yahweh, the God of Israel. •'My son,' David said to Solomon 'my heart was set on building a house for the name 8 of Yahweh my God. •But the word of Yahweh came to me, "You have shed much blood and fought great battles; it is not for you to build a house for my 9 name, since you have shed so much blood on the earth in my presence."^c •But

b. The Chronicler thus interprets 2 S 21:19 with an eye to 1 S 17 where David is credited with the defeat of Goliath.

21 a. This chapter begins a most important section: the organisation of worship and sacred officials in the Davidic community to which the messianic promises of Nathan's oracle were addressed. The Chronicler goes further than Ezk 40-48 and boldly puts the organisation of the Temple officials (assuming uniformity of Temple worship) before the building of the Temple itself.

b. The Chronicler, with his developed theology, attributes to Satan (cf. Jb 1:6+) what 2 S, with the ultimate cause in mind, ascribed to 'the anger of Yahweh'.

c. Different figures in 2 S 24, cf. 1 Ch 27:24. As in Nb 1, Levi is excluded from the census.

d. The Chronicler stresses God's protection of the holy city more than 2 S does.

e. This verse, peculiar to the Chronicler, presents a hitherto unfamiliar picture of angels rather like that in Dn 9:21 and 2 M 10:29.

f. The Chronicler distinguishes the building of the altar from that of the Temple, as he does for the post-exilic period, Ezr 3:1f. It is not a temporary altar, unlike 2 S, but the permanent Temple altar, 22:1.

22 a. The chapters that follow are not derived from any biblical source. They treat of the Chronicler's favourite themes, but several passages seem to point to an earlier source.

b. Commonly understood to refer to conquered Canaanites, cf. Ex 12:48+, but in 2 Ch 30:25 the same term (ger) is used of proselytes. According to Ezr 1:4, cf. 3:1-4:5, the faithful from afar will rebuild the Temple; according to Is 60:10 the Jerusalem of messianic times is to be rebuilt by those from abroad.

c. Abhorrence of spilt blood is a feature of the 'Priestly' texts. Cf. Gn 9:4f; Lv 1:5+.

now a son is born to you. He shall be a man of peace, and I will give him peace from all the enemies that surround him; for Solomon is his name,^d and in his days I will give Israel peace and quiet. •He shall build a house for my name; 10
 28:6 he shall be a son to me and I a father to him, and I will make his royal throne
 2 S 7:12f secure in Israel for ever." •Now, my son, may Yahweh be with you and give 11 you success in building a house for Yahweh your God, as he has said concerning you. •Yet may he give you discretion and discernment, may he give you his 12 orders for Israel so that you may observe the Law of Yahweh your God. Success will be yours if you carefully observe the statutes and the ordinances 13 Dt31:23 that Yahweh has prescribed to Moses for Israel. Be strong and stand fast, be fearless, be dauntless. •Poor as I am, I have set aside for the house of Yahweh 14
 one hundred thousand talents of gold, a million talents of silver and more bronze and iron than can be weighed; I have stored up wood and stone too, to which you must add more. •You will have many workmen, stonecutters, 15 masons, carpenters, skilled artisans of every kind, •while your gold and silver, 16 bronze and iron, will be beyond reckoning. Set to work, then, and may Yahweh be with you!"

David then ordered all the Israelite leaders to help his son Solomon. 17
 'Is not Yahweh your God with you?' he said. 'He has given you peace on all sides, since he has put the inhabitants of the country into my power and the land has been subdued for Yahweh and for his people. •So now devote heart 19 and soul to the search for Yahweh your God. Set to and build the sanctuary of Yahweh your God, so that you can bring the ark of the covenant of Yahweh and the holy things of God to the house that is built for the name of Yahweh.'

The orders and functions of the Levites^a

23 David, an old man now with his fill of days, made his son Solomon king 1 over Israel. •He gathered all the Israelite leaders together, with the priests 2 and Levites.

23:27 A census was taken of those Levites thirty years old and upwards. On a 3
 Nb 4:3 count of heads their number was thirty-eight thousand;^b •twenty-four thousand 4 of these were responsible for the services^c of the house of Yahweh; six thousand were scribes and judges; •four thousand were keepers of the gate; four thousand 5 Am 6:5 praised Yahweh on the instruments David had made^d for that purpose.

^e Then David divided the Levites into orders: Gershon, Kohath and Merari. 6
 26:21f For the Gershonites:^f Ladan and Shimei. •Sons of Ladan: Jehiel first, 7 2Ch31:17 Zetham, Joel; three in all. •Sons of Shimei: Shelomoth, Haziël, Haran; three 9 in all. These are the heads of families of Ladan. •Sons of Shimei: Jahath, Zina, 10
 Jeush, Beriah; these were the sons of Shimei; four in all. •Jahath was the eldest, 11
 Zizah the second, then Jeush and Beriah, who had not many children and were reckoned as one family.

Sons of Kohath: Amram, Izhar, Hebron, Uzziel; four in all. •Sons of Amram: 12
 Dn 9:24 Aaron and Moses. Aaron was set apart to consecrate the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, to burn incense in the presence of Yahweh, to serve him and to bless in his name for ever.^g •Moses was a man of God whose sons were 14 given the name of the tribe of Levi. •Sons of Moses: Gershom^h and Eliezer. 15 24:20-30 Sons of Gershom: Shebuel, the first. •Eliezer had sons: Rehabiah, the first. 16
 Eliezer had no other sons, but the sons of Rehabiah were very numerous. •Sons 18 of Izhar: Shelomith, the first. •Sons of Hebron: Jeriah first, Amariah second, 19
 Jahaziel third, Jekameam fourth. •Sons of Uzziel: Micah first, Isshiah second. 20

Sons of Merari: Mahli and Mushi. Sons of Mahli: Eleazar and Kish. •Eleazar died leaving no sons but only daughters; their kinsmen, the sons of Kish, married these. •Sons of Mushi: Mahli, Eder, Jeremoth; three in all. 23

23:27 These were the sons of Levi by their families, the heads of families, and those 24 registered by name, individually; whoever was twenty years old or upwards had his function in the service of the Temple of Yahweh.

25 For David had said, 'Yahweh, the God of Israel, has given peace to his people; and he dwells in Jerusalem for ever. •The Levites are no longer required
26 to carry the tabernacle or any thing used in its service.' •For, according to the 27 last words of David, the Levites who had been registered were of twenty years 23:3,24 28 and upwards. •Their duty is to be at the disposal of the sons of Aaron for the service of the Temple of Yahweh, in the courts and chambers, to purify 29 everything consecrated; their duty is to serve the Temple of God. •They are also responsible for the loaves set out in rows, and for the flour for the oblation, the wafers of unleavened bread, the cakes baked on the griddle or mixed, and 30 with the various measures of volume and of length.ⁱ •They have to be present
31 every morning to give glory and praise to Yahweh, and also in the evening, •and Ps 134:2
at every offering of holocaust to Yahweh on the sabbath, New Moon or solemn Nb28-29 feast—a set number of them laid down by rule. This is a perpetual obligation 32 for them in the presence of Yahweh. •In serving the Temple of Yahweh they observe the ritual of the Tent of Meeting, the ritual of the sanctuary and the ritual of their kinsmen, the sons of Aaron.

The classification of the priests

1 24 Orders of the sons of Aaron: Sons of Aaron: Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, 1Nb 3:2-4 2 Ithamar. •Nadab and Abihu died in their father's lifetime leaving no 2Ch5:12;
3 children, so Eleazar and Ithamar became priests. •David divided them into 8:14 orders with the help of Zadok, one of Eleazar's sons, and Ahimelech, one of Ne 12:45 the sons of Ithamar,^a and made a register of them according to their duties.
4 The sons of Eleazar were found to have more leading men than the sons of Ithamar; accordingly, from the heads of families of the sons of Eleazar they 5 made sixteen orders, and from those of the sons of Ithamar, eight. •They divided them, both parties, by lot: there were consecrated officials, officials of God, 6 among the sons of Eleazar, as among the sons of Ithamar. •One of the Levites, the scribe Shemaiah son of Nethanel, recorded them in the presence of the king, his officers, Zadok the priest, Ahimelech son of Abiathar and the heads of the priestly and levitical families. They drew lots for each family of the sons of Eleazar and for the sons of Ithamar, turn and turn about.^b

7 The first lot fell to Jehoiarib, to Jedaiah the second, •Harim the third, 1 M 2:1
8 Seorim the fourth, •Malchijah the fifth, Mijamin the sixth, •Hakkoz the seventh,
9 Abijah^c the eighth, •Jeshua the ninth, Shecaniah the tenth, •Eliashib the eleventh, Lk 1:5 10 Jakim the twelfth, •Huppah the thirteenth, Ishbaal the fourteenth, •Bilgah the

d. The name Solomon comes from shalom, 'peace'.

23 a. Following Ezekiel's arrangement in which David organises the ministerial staff after planning for the Temple.

b. Cf. Nb 4:3. Vv. 6f, on the other hand, make 20 the age for levitical service, cf. v. 24.

c. Presumably the cantors; the categories are the same as in ch. 25 and 26: cantors, cf. ch. 25, gatekeepers, 26:1f, scribes and judges, 26:29, instrumentalists, cf. 15:19f.

d. 'David had made' corr.; 'I had made' Hebr.

e. Vv. 6-32 are an introduction, modelled on Nb 8:5f, to the organisation of sacred offices. But the functions of the Levites are not those contemplated by Nb. They no longer have to see to the transport of ark and tabernacle, Nb 3-4, because God has chosen a settled home; they are to remain in the Temple and help the priests in the task mentioned in Lv: the purifying of everything consecrated, i.e. the washing of the victims, cf. Ne 12:45; Lv 1:9,13 etc.; the loaves of offering, Lv 24:6; the fine flour for oblation, Lv 2:2; the various cakes, Lv 2:4f. The sons of Aaron do indeed enjoy special powers, vv. 13f, but the author does not here distinguish priests and Levites. This new disposition, definitive and established, derives from David, just as the old unstable and provisional one derived from Moses. In Ezr 8:28 the Levites share the sacred character of the priests, cf. 2 Ch 35:3.

f. This list is most closely related to 26:21f; it differs from the other Gershonite lists, Ex 6:17; Nb 3:18; 1 Ch 6:2,5. It seems to include non-levitical Israelites whom the Chronicler presents as Gershonites.

g. The three essential priestly functions: consecration (rite unknown; ritual eating?) of sacred food in some holy place, Lv 6:19; cf. 1 Ch 15:12+, offering of incense, cf. Nb 16:7f, blessing, cf. Nb 6:22-27.

h. Notwithstanding 5:27 and 6:1 (cf. 23:7) the Chronicler here distinguishes Gershom from Gershon.

i. Allusion to the 'sanctuary shekel', cf. e.g. Ex 30:1,3, and probably to the special cubit of 2 Ch 3:3 (the old cubit measure used in the construction of the Temple). See also Lv 19:35-36.

24 a. Eleazar's line is that of the Zadokites, cf. 6:35-38. Ithamar's is much less certain; the family returned from exile with Ezra, Ezr 8:2, and our passage connects it, through Ahimelech, with Abiathar, David's second priest. The Books of Samuel make Ahimelech father, not son, of Abiathar, 1 S 22:20; cf. 2 S 8:17. Ezekiel had recognised the Zadokites only, but the Chronicler wishes to make David's throne the rallying point of all the rival families.

b. Translation uncertain.

c. Zechariah, father of John the Baptist, was a member of this group, Lk 1:5.

fifteenth, Immer the sixteenth, •Hezir the seventeenth, Happizzet the eighteenth, 15
 Pethahiah the nineteenth, Jehezkel the twentieth, •Jachin the twenty-first, Gamul 16
 the twenty-second, •Delaiah the twenty-third, Maaziah the twenty-fourth.^d 18

2 Ch 23:8 These were the men as registered by their various duties, to enter the Temple 19 of Yahweh in conformity to their rule handed on by Aaron their father as Yahweh, the God of Israel, had laid it down for him.

As regards the rest of the sons of Levi: 20

23:16f For the sons of Amram: Shubael. For the sons of Shubael: Jehdeiah. •For 21
 Rehabiah, for the sons of Rehabiah: the eldest, Isshiah. •For the Izharites: 22
 Shelomoth; for the sons of Shelomoth: Jahath. •The sons of Hebron: Jeriah 23 the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, Jekameam the fourth. •Sons 24 of Uzziel: Micah; for the sons of Micah: Shamir; •the brother of Micah: Isshiah; 25 for the sons of Micah: Isshiah, Zechariah. •Sons of Merari: Mahli and Mushi. 26 Sons of Jaaziah: his son; •sons of Merari: for Jaaziah his son: Shoham, Zaccur, 27
 Ibri; •for Mahli: Eleazar who had no sons; •for Kish: the sons of Kish: 28
 Jerahmeel. •Sons of Mushi: Mahli, Eder, Jerimoth. 30

These were the sons of Levi by their families. •Like their kinsmen, the sons 31 of Aaron, these families, senior and junior, drew lots in the presence of king David, Zadok, Ahimelech, and the heads of the priestly and levitical families.

The cantors

16:37-43; 2 Ch 8:14; 23:18; Ne 12:45 25 For the liturgy, David and the senior army officers set apart the sons of 1
 Asaph, of Heman and of Jeduthun, prophets^a who accompanied themselves with lyre and harp and cymbal, and a list was made of those with these duties to perform.^b

For the sons of Asaph: Zaccur, Joseph, Nethaniah, Ashareliah; the sons of 2
 Asaph were under the direction of Asaph who prophesied at the king's direction.

For Jeduthun: sons of Jeduthun: Gedaliah, Zeri, Jeshiah, Hashabiah, 3
 Mattithiah; there were six of them under the direction of their father Jeduthun
 2 K 3:15 who, to the sound of the lyre, prophesied to the glory and praise of Yahweh.

For Heman: sons of Heman: Bukkiah, Mattaniah, Uzziel, Shebuel, Jerimoth, 4
 Hananiah, Hanani, Eliathah, Giddalti, Romamti-ezer, Joshbekashah, Mallothi, Hothir, Mahazioth. •All these were sons of Heman, the king's seer; these 5 sounded the trumpet to accompany God's words.^c God gave Heman fourteen sons and three daughters; •all of them sang in the Temple of Yahweh under 6 their father's direction to the sound of cymbal, harp and lyre, for the liturgy in the house of Yahweh at the king's direction.

Asaph, Jeduthun and Heman, •these who had learnt to sing to Yahweh, 7 were registered with their kinsmen; the total of those so trained was two hundred and eighty-eight. •Junior and senior, master and pupil alike, they drew lots for 8 their term of duty. •The first to whom the lot fell was the Asaphite, Joseph. 9
 The second was Gedaliah, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The third was 10
 Zaccur, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The fourth was Izri, twelve with 11 his sons and brothers. •The fifth was Nethaniah, twelve with his sons and brothers. 12
 The sixth was Bukkiah, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The seventh was 13
 Jeshareliah, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The eight was Jeshiah, twelve 14 with his sons and brothers. •The ninth was Mattaniah, twelve with his sons and 15 brothers. •The tenth was Shimej, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The 16 eleventh was Azarel, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The twelfth was 17 Hashabiah, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The thirteenth was Shubael, 18 twelve with his sons and brothers. •The fourteenth was Mattithiah, twelve with 19 his sons and brothers. •The fifteenth was Jeremoth, twelve with his sons and 20 brothers. •The sixteenth was Hananiah, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The 21 seventeenth was Joshbekashah, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The eighteenth 22 was Hanani, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The nineteenth was Mallothi, 23 twelve with his sons and brothers. •The twentieth was Eliathah, twelve with his 24 sons and brothers. 25

28 sons and brothers. •The twenty-first was Hothir, twelve with his sons and brothers.
 29 The twenty-second was Giddalti, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The twenty-30 third was Mahazioth, twelve with his sons and brothers. •The twenty-fourth 31 was Romamti-ezer, twelve with his sons and brothers.

The keepers of the gate^a

9:17-27
 2Ch8:14;
 23:19
 Ne 12:45

1 26 As regards the orders of the gatekeepers:

2 For the Korahites: Meshelemiah son of Kore, one of the sons of Ebiasaph.^b
 3 Meshelemiah had sons: Zechariah the first-born, Jediel the second, Zebadiah
 4 the third, Jathniel the fourth, •Elam the fifth, Jehohanan the sixth, Eliehoenai 5 the seventh.

6 Obed-edom had sons: Shemaiah the first-born, Jehozabad the second, Joah 7 the third, Sacar the fourth, Nethanel the fifth, •Ammiel the sixth, Issachar the 8 seventh, Peullethai the eighth; God had indeed blessed him. •To his son 9 Shemaiah sons were born who had authority in their families, for they were 10 stout fighting men. •Sons of Shemaiah: Othni, Rephael, Obed, Elzabad and his 11 brothers^c Elihu and Semachiah, brave men. •All these were sons of Obed-edom.
 These and their sons and brothers were well fitted for their task. For Obed-edom, sixty-two.

 2 S 6:10f

9 Meshelemiah had sons and brothers: eighteen brave men.^d

10 Hosah, one of the sons of Merari, had sons: Shimri was the first, for although 11 he was not the first-born his father had made him the chief. •Hilkiah was the 12 second, Tebaliah the third, Zechariah the fourth. The sons and brothers of Hosah 13 were thirteen in all.

Gn48:13-20

12 These, as keepers of the gate, had their orders, and the leaders of these heroes
 13 had duties corresponding to those of their kinsmen in the service of the Temple 14 of Yahweh. •They drew lots, junior and senior family alike, for each gate. •For 15 the east side the lot fell to Shelemiah, whose son Zechariah was a shrewd counsel-16 lor; when they drew lots, the lot for the north side fell to the latter. •To 17 Obed-edom went the south, and to his sons the storehouse.^e •To Shuppim and 18 Hosah went the west with the Gate of the Felled Tree-trunk on the upper road.
 19 The watch, turn and turn about: •on the east, six daily;^f on the north, four daily;
 20 on the south, four daily; at the storehouse, two each side; •for the Parbar^g 21 on the west: four at the road, two at the Parbar. •These were the orders of the 22 gatekeepers among the Korahites and Merarites.

9:24

Other levitical duties

20 The Levites, their kinsmen,^h were responsible for asaph in charge of the 21 treasuries of the Temple of God and in charge of the treasuries of votive offerings:

21 The sons of Ladan, sons, through Ladan, of Gershon, had the Jehielites for 22 heads of the families of Ladan the Gershonite. •The Jehielites, Zetham and Joel his brother,ⁱ were responsible for the treasuries of the Temple of Yahweh.

 2 Ch 7:1

d. Ne 12 gives two lists of priestly families with only 22 (or 21) names in all. The classification of the Chronicler seems to be of later date.

25 a. The Chronicler attributes prophetic characteristics to the sacred chant.

b. Parallel with the 24 orders of priests the Chronicler places 24 orders of cantors which he relates to the three famous names, Asaph, Heman and Jeduthun. The only names sufficiently attested elsewhere are of Zaccur son of Asaph, Ne 12:35 and 1 Ch 9:15 (Zichri), Mattithiah, 15:18, 21; 16:5, and Mattaniah, Ne 11:17, cf. 1 Ch 9:15. It may be that the last nine names of the sons of Heman derive from a document which was not in fact a list of names but the fragment of a psalm, the translation of which would read 'Be gracious to me, Yahweh, be gracious to me. You are my God. I have grown great, I have grown tall, you are the help I sought. Grant me many visions.'

c. Meaning uncertain.

26 a. The gatekeepers, cf. 9:17-27, are numbered with the cantors in 16:37-43. In the time of Ezra and Nehemiah they were still distinct, Ezr 2:42; Ne 11:19. This chapter, too, appears to distinguish them but it is deliberately picturing a past age.

b. 'Ebiasaph' corr.; 'Asaph' Hebr.

c. 'and his brothers' corr.

d. This remark follows on v. 3 and introduces v. 14. The observations on Obed-edom and on Hosah seem to be insertions.

e. Translation uncertain.

f. 'daily' corr.

g. Derivation and meaning uncertain.

h. 'their kinsmen' corr.

i. Zetham and Joel with Shebuel and Shelomoth are made officially responsible for the public funds or treasury, like the commission in the days of Nehemiah, Ne 13:13, or of Ezra, Ezr 8:33.

As regards the Amramites, Izharites, Hebronites, and Uzzielites:

Shebuel son of Gershom, son of Moses, was the officer responsible for the 24 treasuries. •His kinsmen through Eliezer: Rehabiah his son, Jeshaiiah his son, 25 Joram his son, Zichri his son, Shelomoth his son. •This Shelomoth and his 26 kinsmen were responsible for all the treasuries of votive offerings dedicated by King David and by the heads of families as officers of thousands, of hundreds, or other senior officers, •(they had dedicated a part of the spoils of war to make 27 the house of Yahweh more impressive), •and also for all that Samuel the seer 28 had dedicated, and Saul son of Kish, Abner son of Ner, and Joab son of Zeruiah.
All that had been dedicated was the responsibility of Shelomoth and his kinsmen.

15:22 For the Izharites: Chananiah and his sons were assigned to outside duties 29 for Israel^d as scribes and judges.

27:17 For the Hebronites: Hashabiah and his kinsmen, one thousand seven hundred 30 fighting men to guard Israel west of Jordan in all that had to do with Yahweh and in the service of the king. •For the Hebronites: Jerijah the chief. In the fortieth 31 year of David's reign, the pedigrees of the Hebronite families were investigated and stout fighting men were found belonging to them at Jazer in Gilead. •King 32 David nominated two thousand seven hundred fighting men, kinsmen to Jerijah and heads of families, as overseers of the Reubenites, the Gadites and the half-tribe of Manasseh in all the business of God and of the king.

Military and civil organisation^a 27 The sons of Israel; their enumeration.

The heads of families, the commanders of thousands and hundreds, their scribes, these performed their duties among the people. The orders played their part in all royal business. There was one on duty for a month, every month of the year.^b Each order was made up of twenty-four thousand men.

11:11 The commissioner for the first order detailed for the first month was Jashobeam 2
||2S23:8-39 son of Zabdiel. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men. •He was 3 a son of Perez and chief of all the officers of the group detailed for the first month.

11:12 The commissioner for the order for the second month was Dodai the Ahohite.^c 4
He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

12:28 The officer of the third group detailed for the third month was Benaiah son 5 of Jehoiada, the chief priest. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men. •This was the Benaiah who was champion of the Thirty, and who was 6 commissioner for the Thirty and for his order. Ammizabad was his son.

2S2:18-23 The fourth, detailed for the fourth month, was Asahel, the brother of Joab; 7 his son Zebadiah succeeded him. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The fifth, detailed for the fifth month, was the officer Shamhuth the Izrahite. 8
He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The sixth, detailed for the sixth month, was Ira son of Ikkesh of Tekoa. 9
He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The seventh, detailed for the seventh month, was Helez the Pelonite, one 10 of the sons of Ephraim. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The eighth, detailed for the eighth month, was Sibbecai of Hushah, a Zerahite. 11
He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The ninth, detailed for the ninth month, was Abiezer of Anathoth, a Benja- 12 minite. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The tenth, detailed for the tenth month, was Maharai of Netophah, a Zerahite. 13
He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The eleventh, detailed for the eleventh month, was Benaiah of Pirathon, a son 14 of Ephraim. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

The twelfth, detailed for the twelfth month, was Heldai from Netophah, of 15
Othniel. He had charge of an order of twenty-four thousand men.

Commissioners for the tribes of Israel:^d Eliezer son of Zichri was chief officer 16

17 for the Reubenites, Shephatiah son of Maacah for the Simeonites, •Hashabiah
 18 son of Kemuel for the Levites, Zadok for the Aaronites, •Elihu, one of David's 26:30
 19 brothers, for the Judaeans, Omri son of Michael for the Issacharites, •Ishmaiah son of Obadiah for the Zebulunites, Jeremoth son of Azriel for the Naphtalites, 20 Hoshea son of Azariah for the Ephraimites, Joel son of Pedaiah for the half-tribe
 21 of Manasseh, •Iddo son of Zechariah for the half-tribe of Manasseh in Gad, 22 Jaasiel son of Abner for the Benjaminites, •Azarel son of Jeroham for the Danites. These were the officials for the tribes of Israel.

23 David took no census of those who were twenty years old and under, since 21
 24 Yahweh had promised to make Israel as numerous as the stars of heaven. •Joab son of Zeruiah began a census, though he did not finish it. That is why the wrath came on Israel, and the figure never reached the figure found in the Annals of King David.^e

25 Commissioner for the king's stores: Azmaveth son of Adiel. Commissioner 2Ch27:10 for the stores in provincial towns, villages, castles: Jonathan son of Uzziah.

26 Commissioner for the agricultural workers employed on the land: Ezri son of 27 Chelub. •Commissioner for the vineyards: Shimei of Ramah. Commissioner for Qo 2:4
 those in the vineyards who looked after the wine cellars: Zabdi of Shepham.

28 Commissioner for the olives and sycamores in the lowlands: Baal-hanan of 29 Geder. Commissioner for the stores of oil: Joash. •Commissioner for cattle in pasture at Sharon: Shitrai of Sharon. Commissioner for cattle in the valleys:
 30 Shaphat son of Adlai. •Commissioner for camels: Obil the Ishmaelite. Commis-31 sioner for donkeys: Jehdeiah of Meranath. •Commissioner for flocks: Jaziz the Hagrite. All these were bailiffs for King David's property.^f

32 Jonathan, David's uncle, who was a councillor, a shrewd man and a scribe, 33 had charge of the royal children, with Jehiel son of Hachmoni. •Ahithophel was 34 the king's counsellor. Hushai the Archite was Friend of the King. •Jehoiada son 2S15:31f; of Benaiah, and Abiathar^g succeeded Ahithophel. Joab was commander of the 16:17 king's armies.

David's instructions for the Temple^a

1 28 David held a meeting in Jerusalem of all the officials of Israel, the commissioners for the tribes, and the officials of the orders in the royal service, the commanders of thousands, the commanders of hundreds, the bailiffs for all the property and livestock of the king and his sons, together with the eunuchs 2 and champions and all the stout fighting men. •Then King David rose to his feet and said:

“My brothers and my people, listen to me. I had set my heart on building Ps132:3-7 a settled home for the ark of the covenant of Yahweh, as a footstool for our 3 God. I have made preparations for building, •but God has said to me, “You are not to build a house for my name, for you have been a man of war and have 22:8 shed blood”.

j. The office existed in Nehemiah's day, Ne 11:16. Ezekiel uses the term 'outside' for outside the sanctuary, cf. Ezk 40:17f, 31; 44:1; the reference here is therefore to ceremonial functions performed outside the sanctuary, such as carrying the ark; but there may also be a reference to levitical jurisdiction in the countryside, cf. 2 Ch 19:4f.

27 a. In Ezekiel and in the 'Priestly' documents (e.g. Nb 27:22) we find, besides the sacred functions, others that do not rest with the Levites (commissioners for the tribes, for the royal treasury, etc., privy councillors); to these the Chronicler extends his system of orders, thus imposing a scheme on the data of 2 S 23; cf. 1 Ch 11. The underlying principle is already found in Solomon's twelve prefectures or commissions, 1 K 4:7-19.

b. The translation follows the Greek.

c. The text adds 'and his group and Migloth the chief officer'

d. As well as the Solomonic division into prefectures the Chronicler retains the old tribal division, cf. Nb 1.

e. These two observations refer to ch. 21; their purpose is apparently to solve two difficulties: what precisely David's sin was, 21:3, and why the figures of 1 Ch 21 are lower than those of 2 S 24:9.

f. This list, modelled on 2 S 8:16f; 20:23-26; 1 K 4:2f, is at variance with the data of 1 Ch 26:20f. It makes David appear more a great landowner than a king.

g. Probably the priest of that name, 1 S 22:20f. The Chronicler does not however refer to his priesthood: in the tradition of Ezk 44:15f he regards the line of Zadok, cf. 1 K 1:7f, as the one assurance that the worship is genuine.

28 a. This chapter, it seems, takes up the narrative where 23:2 left it.

17:12f;
22:10f
2 S 7:12f
 'Of all my father's House it was I whom Yahweh, the God of Israel, chose 4 to be king over Israel for ever. He chose Judah for leader, my family within the House of Judah, and of my father's sons myself, in his good pleasure, he gave to all Israel as king. •Of all my sons—and many sons Yahweh has granted 5 me—he has chosen my son Solomon to sit on the sovereign throne of Yahweh over Israel. •He said to me, "Solomon your son is the man to build my house 6 and my courts, for I have chosen him to be a son to me and I will be a father to him. •I will make his sovereignty secure for ever if he sturdily maintains my 7 commandments and my ordinances, as they are now."

De 4:5
 'So now in the sight of all Israel and of the assembly of Yahweh, and in the 8 hearing of our God, observe and make sure you understand all the commandments of Yahweh your God, so that you may possess this prosperous land and leave 9 it to your children after you as an inheritance for ever.

'And you, Solomon my son, know the God of your father, serve him with 9 an undivided heart and a willing mind; for Yahweh searches every heart, and knows every plan it devises. If you seek him, he will let you find him; once forsake him, and he casts you off for ever. •Think at this moment how Yahweh has 10 chosen you to build a house for his sanctuary. Be strong and set to work.'^b

Ezk 42
26:20
 David gave his son Solomon the plans for the vestibule,^c the buildings, the 11 treasuries, the upper rooms, the inner apartments and the room for the throne of mercy; •he also gave him a description of all he had in mind^d for the courts 12 of the Temple of Yahweh, all the surrounding apartments, the treasuries of the Temple of God and the treasuries of votive offerings; •also of the orders of 13 priests and Levites, the liturgical duties in the Temple of Yahweh, •the gold 14 bullion, gold for every article for whatever function, the silver bullion for all the silver articles, for every article for whatever function, •the bullion for the 15 golden lamp-stands and their lamps, the gold bullion for each lamp-stand^e and its lamps, the bullion for the silver lamp-stands, for the lamp-stand and its lamps according to the requirements for each lamp-stand, •gold bullion for the tables 16 on which the rows of bread were set, for each of these tables, the silver for the silver tables,^f •the forks, the sprinkling bowls, basins of pure gold, the gold 17 bullion for the bowls, for each of the bowls, •the bullion of refined gold for the 18 altar of incense. He gave him the plans for the chariot,^g for the golden cherubs with wings outspread covering the ark of the covenant of Yahweh—all this in 19 accordance with what Yahweh with his hand had written in order to make the whole work clear for which he was providing the plans.

2 Ch 3:6
Ex 27:3
Nb 4:14
 Then David said to his son Solomon, 'Be strong, stand firm; be fearless, be 20 dauntless and set to work, because Yahweh God, my God, is with you. He will not fail you or forsake you before you have finished all the work to be done for the house of Yahweh. •Here are the orders of priests and Levites for all the 21 duties of the house of God; every willing man of any aptitude will help you in all this work; the officials and all the people are entirely at your command.'

The voluntary offerings

29 Then King David said to the whole assembly, 'Solomon my son, whom 1 alone Yahweh has chosen, is young, of tender years, and the work is great;
 this palace is not for man but for Yahweh God. •With all the resources I have, 2
 I have provided for the house of my God, adding gold to gold, silver to silver, bronze to bronze, iron to iron, wood to wood, onyx, inlaid stones, coloured and striped stones, precious stones of every kind, masses of alabaster. •What is 3 more; what gold and silver I have in my own treasury I give out of love for the house of my God, over and above what I have provided already for the holy Temple—•three thousand talents of gold, gold of Ophir, seven thousand talents 4 of refined silver for plating the walls of the buildings. •Whatever gold you have, 5 whatever silver, or workmanship of the craftsman's hand, which of you today will undertake to consecrate it to Yahweh?'

- 6 Then the heads of families, the officials for the tribes of Israel, the commanders 2Ch35:13 of thousands and of hundreds, and those who managed the king's affairs, 7 undertook •to give for the service of the house of God five thousand talents of Nb 7 gold, ten thousand darics, ten thousand talents of silver, eighteen thousand 8 talents of bronze, a hundred thousand talents of iron. •All this, with what there were in the way of stones, they paid into the treasury of the house of Yahweh, 9 for Jehiel the Gershonite to administer. •The people rejoiced at what these had given so readily, since their generous gift to Yahweh had been made whole-10 heartedly. King David too was filled with joy. •In sight of the whole assembly
David blessed Yahweh and said:^a Tb 13:1
Dn 3:26
- May you be blessed, Yahweh, the God of Israel our ancestor, for ever and 11 for ever! •Yours, Yahweh, is the greatness, the power, splendour, length of days, Ps145:11 glory, for all that is in the heavens and on the earth is yours. Yours is the 12 sovereignty, Yahweh; you are exalted over all, supreme. •Riches and honour go before you, you are ruler of all, in your hand lie strength and power; in your 13 hand it is to give greatness and strength to all. •At this time, our God, we give you 14 glory, we praise the splendour of your name. •For who am I and what is my people to have the means to give so generously? All comes from you; from your 15 own hand we have given them to you. •For we are strangers before you, settlers Ws 6:3
only, as all our ancestors were; our days on earth pass like a shadow, and there is 16 no hope. •Yahweh our God, this store we have provided to build a house for 17 your holy name, all comes from your hand, all is yours. •O my God, you search the heart, I know, and delight in honesty, and with honesty of heart I have 18 willingly given all this; and now with joy I have seen your people here offer you their gifts willingly.^b •Yahweh, God of our ancestors, of Abraham, of 19 Isaac, of Israel, watch over this for ever, shape the purpose of your people's heart and direct their hearts to you. •Give Solomon my son a heart determined to keep your commandments, your decrees, your statutes; may he practise them all, and build this palace I have prepared for you.
- 20 Then David said to the whole assembly, 'Bless now Yahweh your God!' And Dn 3:26 the whole assembly blessed Yahweh, the God of their ancestors, and went on their knees to do homage to Yahweh and to the king.

The accession of Solomon and the end of the reign of David

- 21 On the day following this, the Israelites offered sacrifices and holocausts to Yahweh: a thousand bulls, a thousand rams, a thousand lambs with their libations, Ex 24:5 22 as well as many sacrifices for the whole of Israel. •They ate and drank^c that day Ex 24:11 in Yahweh's presence with great joy. Then having made Solomon son of David their second king, they anointed him leader in the name of Yahweh, and anointed 23 Zadok as priest. •Solomon took his seat on the throne of Yahweh, to reign in 24 succession to David his father. He prospered, and all Israel obeyed him. •All the officials, all the champions, and even all the sons of King David, pledged allegiance 25 to King Solomon. •Yahweh brought Solomon's greatness to its height in the sight of all Israel, and gave him a reign of such splendour as none that had reigned over Israel before him had ever known.
- 26 David son of Jesse had reigned over the whole of Israel. •His reign over Israel had lasted forty years; he had reigned in Hebron for seven years, and in Jerusalem for thirty-three. •He died in happy old age, with his fill of days, of riches, of honour. Then his son Solomon succeeded him. •The history of King David, from first to last, is not all this recorded in the Annals of Samuel the seer, the Annals of Nathan the prophet, and the Annals of Gad the seer, •with his entire reign, his prowess, and the turns of fortune that came to him and to Israel and to all the kingdoms of the other countries?

THE SECOND BOOK OF CHRONICLES

III. SOLOMON AND THE BUILDING OF THE TEMPLE^a

Solomon's gift of wisdom^b

1 Solomon son of David made himself secure on the throne. Yahweh his God was with him and brought his greatness to its height. •Solomon then spoke to all Israel, to the commanders of thousands and of hundreds, to the judges, and to all the princes of all Israel, the heads of families. •Then Solomon, and with him the whole assembly, went to the high place of Gibeon, where God's Tent of Meeting was, which Moses, the servant of God, had made in the wilderness;^c •David, however, had brought the ark of God from Kiriath-jearim to the place he had prepared for it, having pitched a tent for it in Jerusalem. The bronze altar that Bezalel son of Uri, son of Hur, had made stood there in front of the tabernacle of Yahweh; to this went Solomon, with the assembly. •And there Solomon, in Yahweh's presence, ascended the bronze altar that was by the Tent of Meeting, and on it he offered a thousand holocausts.^d

That night, God appeared to Solomon and said, 'Ask what you would like me to give you'. •Solomon replied to God, 'You showed great kindness to David my father; and you have made me king in succession to him. •Yahweh God, the promise you made to David my father has now been fulfilled, since you have made me king over a people like the dust of the earth for number. Therefore now give me wisdom and knowledge to act as leader of this people, for who could govern a people so great as yours?'

'Since that is what you want,' God said to Solomon 'since you have asked, not for riches, treasure, honour, the lives of your enemies, or even for a long life, but for wisdom and knowledge to govern my people of whom I have made you king, •therefore wisdom and knowledge are granted you. I give you riches too, and treasure, and honour such as none of the kings had that were before you, nor shall any have that come after you.'

Solomon left the high place of Gibeon for Jerusalem, away from the Tent of Meeting. He reigned over Israel. •Solomon built up a force of chariots and horses; he had one thousand four hundred chariots and twelve thousand horses; these he stationed in the chariot towns and with the king in Jerusalem. •In Jerusalem the king made silver common as pebbles, and cedars plentiful as the sycamores of the lowlands. •Solomon's horses were imported from Cilicia;^e the king's agents took delivery of them from Cilicia at a fixed rate. •They imported chariots from Egypt at six hundred shekels apiece, and horses at one hundred and fifty shekels. These men acted in a similar capacity for all the kings of the Hittites and the kings of Aram.

The final preparations. Hiram of Tyre

Solomon decided to build a house for the name of Yahweh and another for himself and his court.

- ² He impressed seventy thousand men for carrying loads, eighty thousand to quarry in the hill country, and three thousand six hundred overseers in charge of them. •Solomon then despatched this message to Hiram king of Tyre, 'Deal with me as you dealt with my father David when you sent him cedars for him to build a house to live in. •I am now building a house for the name of Yahweh my God, to acknowledge his holiness, by burning incense of scented spices in his presence, by the loaves that are perpetually set out, by offering holocausts morning and evening, on the sabbath, New Moon, and the solemn festivals^a of Yahweh our God—and this for ever in Israel. •The house I am building will be large, for our God is greater than all gods. •Who would have the means to build him a house when the heavens and their own heavens cannot contain him? And I, for what purpose could I build him a house other than to burn incense in his presence?^b •So send me a man skilled in the use of gold, silver, bronze, iron, scarlet, crimson, violet,^c and the art of engraving too; he is to work with my skilled men here in Judah and Jerusalem, men my father David provided. From Lebanon send me cedar wood, juniper and alghummim,^d since I know your servants know the art of felling the trees of Lebanon. My servants will work with yours. •They will prepare wood in bulk for me, since the house I wish to build is to be of astounding size. •For the woodmen who are to fell the trees I assign twenty thousand kors of grain, twenty thousand kors of barley, twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil—this is for the maintenance^e of your servants.'
- ¹⁰ In a letter sent to King Solomon, Hiram king of Tyre replied, 'Because Yahweh loves his people he has made you king. •Blessed be Yahweh, the God of Israel' Hiram went on to say. 'He has made the heavens and the earth, and given King David a wise son, endowed with discretion and discernment, who is going to build a house for Yahweh and another for himself and his court. •And I am also sending you a skilled craftsman, Hiram-abi, •the son of a Danite woman by a Tyrian father. He is skilled in the use of gold, silver, bronze, iron, stone, wood, scarlet, violet, fine linen, crimson, in engraving of all kinds, and in the execution of any design suggested to him. Let him be put to work with your craftsmen and those of my lord David, your father. •So now let my lord send his servants the wheat, barley, oil and wine, as already suggested.
- ¹⁵ 'For our part, we will fell all the wood you need from Lebanon, and bring it you in rafts by sea to Joppa, and it will be your responsibility to transport it to Jerusalem.'

The construction^f

- ¹⁶ Solomon took a count of all the aliens resident in the land of Israel, following the census that David his father had taken; it was found there were a hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred. •He impressed seventy thousand of these for carrying loads, eighty thousand for quarrying in the hill country, and three thousand six hundred as overseers to make sure the people worked.

1 Ch 22:2+

1 a. David has laid the foundations of God's worshipping society; it is for his successors to complete the work, and in this Solomon's part is unique, as builder of the Temple.

b. Of the intrigues for the succession, cf. 1 K 1-2, the Chronicler says nothing, restricting himself to religious considerations: all the glory of Solomon springs from the wisdom granted him at Gibeon.

c. In this way the Chronicler relates the Temple worship to the Mosaic institutions of Ex.

d. The deuteronomist author of Kings found these sacrifices somewhat odd, offered as they were outside Jerusalem's holy place, 1 K 3:2,4, cf. Dt 12. But Ezekiel had shown that God's presence is not restricted to one place, Ezk 1, etc.; and to the Chronicler this presence is all that matters. Cf. Jn 4:21-24+.

e. The text reads 'Egypt' (Misraim) in place of 'Cilicia' (Musur).

2 a. In the 'priestly' texts these expressions are used of the tabernacle ceremonial.

b. The Temple is only the 'footstool' of God whose dwelling is in the heavens, cf. 6:21.

c. These materials are mentioned in the description of the tabernacle, e.g. Ex 28:5, not in that of Solomon's Temple, 1 K 6:7.

d. 'almuggim' in 1 K 10:11.

e. 'maintenance' corr.

1 Ch 21:15f
29:7
Ezk 40:5+ 3 Solomon then began to build the house of Yahweh in Jerusalem on Mount 1
Ezk 40:48 Moriah where David his father had a vision. It was the place prepared by 2
Ezk 41:1 David, the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite. •Solomon began building in 3
the second month of the fourth year of his reign, on the second day. •Now the 4 structure of the house of God founded by Solomon was sixty cubits long—cubits of the old standard—and twenty cubits wide. •The Ulam in front of the Hekal 5 of the Temple was twenty cubits long across the width of the house, and its 6 height was a hundred and twenty cubits. He plated it on the inside with pure 7 gold. •The Great Hall he faced with juniper which he plated with pure gold, 8 and on it set palms and festoons. •He adorned the hall with precious stones 9 of great beauty; the gold was gold from Parvaim, •and with this he faced the 10 hall, the rafters, thresholds, walls and doors; on the walls he carved cherubs. 11
1 K 6:15f
Ezk 41:3 He then built the hall of the Holy of Holies;^a its length, across the width of 12
the Great Hall, was twenty cubits, and its width twenty cubits. He plated it with 13 six hundred talents of fine gold; •the gold nails weighed fifty shekels. He also 14 1 K 6:23f plated the upper rooms with gold. •In the hall of the Holy of Holies he made 15
two cherubs of wrought metal work and plated them with gold. •The total span 16 of the cherubs' wings was twenty cubits, each being five cubits long, with one 17 wing touching the wall of the hall, while the other touched that of the other 18 cherub. •One wing of a cherub, five cubits long, touched the wall of the apartment; 19
the second, five cubits long, touched the wing of the other cherub. •The spread 20 of these cherubs' wings was twenty cubits. They stood on their feet, facing the 21
Hall. 22

He made the Veil^b of violet, scarlet, crimson and fine linen; he worked 23
cherubs on it. 24

11 K 7:15-22
Ezk 40:49 In front of the hall he made two pillars thirty-five cubits high, and on the 25 top of each a capital measuring five cubits. •In the Debir he made festoons, 26 setting them at the tops of the pillars, and a hundred pomegranates which he 27 placed on the festoons. •He set up the pillars in front of the Hekal, one on the 28 right, the other on the left; the one on the right he called Jachin, the one on the 29

1 K 7:23-26
Ezk 43:13 4 He made an altar of bronze, twenty cubits long, twenty cubits wide and ten 1 high. •He made the Sea of cast metal, ten cubits from rim to rim, circular 2 in shape and five cubits high; a cord thirty cubits long gave the measurement 3 of its girth. •Under it and completely encircling it were animals shaped like oxen; 4
they went round the Sea over a length of thirty cubits; the oxen were in two 5
rows, of one and the same casting with the rest. •It rested on twelve oxen, three 6 facing north, three facing west, three facing south, three facing east; on these, 7 their hindquarters all turned inwards, stood the Sea. •It was a hand's breadth 8 in thickness, and its rim was shaped like the rim of a cup, like a flower. It could 9 hold three thousand baths. 10

11 K 7:38-39
Ezk 40:38 He made ten basins, arranging five on the right-hand side, five on the left-hand 11
side, for washing the victim for the holocaust which was purified there; but the 12
Sea was for the priests to wash in. •He made the ten golden lamp-stands in the 13 way prescribed and placed them in the Hekal, five on the right and five on the 14 left. •He made ten tables and placed them in the Hekal, five on the right and 15 five on the left. He made a hundred golden sprinkling bowls. 16

1 K 7:12
1 K 7:39 He made the court of the priests^a and the great court with its gates and plated 17
the gates with bronze. •He placed the Sea some distance from the right-hand 18 side, to the south-east. 19

1 K 7:40-51 Hiram made the ash containers, the scoops and the sprinkling bowls. He 20 finished all the work that he did for King Solomon on the Temple of God: 21
the two pillars; the two mouldings of the capitals surmounting the pillars; 22
the two sets of filigree to cover the two mouldings of the capitals surmounting 23
the pillars; •the four hundred pomegranates for the two sets of filigree; the 24 pomegranates of each set of filigree were in two rows;^b 25

- 14 the ten^c stands and the ten basins on the stands;
 15 the one Sea and the twelve oxen beneath it;
 16 the ash containers, the scoops, the forks, and all their accessories made by Hiram-abi of burnished bronze for King Solomon, for the Temple of Yahweh.
 17 The king made them by the process of sand casting, in the Jordan area between 18 Succoth and Zeredah. •Solomon made all these articles in great quantities, no reckoning being made of the weight of bronze.
 19 Solomon placed all the furnishings he had made in the Temple of God:
 20 the golden altar and the tables for the loaves of offering; •the lamp-stands with 21 their lamps to burn, as prescribed, in front of the Debir, of pure gold; •the floral 22 work, the lamps, the extinguishers, of gold (and it was pure gold^d); •the knives, the sprinkling bowls, incense boats, of fine gold; the door of the Temple, the inner doors (for the Holy of Holies) and the Temple doors (for the Hekal), of gold.

1 5 So all the work that Solomon did for the Temple of Yahweh was 1 K 7:51 completed, and Solomon brought what his father David had consecrated, the silver and the gold and the vessels, and put them in the treasury of the Temple of God.

The ark is brought to the Temple

||1K8:1-9

- 2 Then Solomon called the elders of Israel together in Jerusalem to bring the ark of the covenant of Yahweh up from the Citadel of David, which is Zion.
 3 All the men of Israel assembled round the king in the seventh month, at the time
 4 of the feast. •All the elders of Israel came, and the Levites^a took up the ark 35:3
 5 and the Tent of Meeting with all the sacred vessels that were in it; the levitical priests brought them up.
 6 King Solomon, and all the community of Israel gathering with him in front
 7 of the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, countless, innumerable. •The priests brought the ark of the covenant of Yahweh to its place, in the Debir of the 8 Temple, that is, in the Holy of Holies, under the cherubs' wings. •For there where the ark was placed the cherubs spread out their wings and sheltered the 9a ark and its shafts. •These were long enough for their ends to be seen from the 10 Holy Place^b in front of the Debir, but not from outside. •There was nothing in the ark except the two tablets that Moses had placed in it at Horeb, where Yahweh had made a covenant with the Israelites when they came out of Egypt;
 9b they are still there today.

The Lord takes possession of his Temple^c

||1K8:10-1

11a Now when the priests came out of the sanctuary, •a cloud filled the sanctuary, 13b the Temple of Yahweh.

- 11b Now all the priests present, whatever order they belonged to, had sanctified 12 themselves. •The entire body of levitical cantors, Asaph, Heman and Jeduthun 1 Ch 24 with their sons and brothers, was stationed to the east of the altar, robed in fine linen and playing cymbals, harps, and lyres. A hundred and twenty priests 13a accompanied them on the trumpet. •All those who played the trumpet, or who sang, united in giving praise and glory to Yahweh. Lifting their voices to the 7:3

3 a. For the 'Debir' (cf. v. 16) of 1 K the Chronicler uses 'Holy of Holies'. The older name suggested the word (dabar) of Yahweh speaking from the ark of the covenant, Nb 7:89. The more recent term suggests the pre-eminent sanctity of the priesthood and of the high priest who alone, and once in the year, enters this chamber, Lv 16:17.

b. The veil is that of the tabernacle, Ex 26:31. Solomon's Temple had a door instead, 1 K 6:31.

4 a. The inner court of Solomon's Temple. It was not reserved to the priests until the time of Ezekiel, Ezk 42:13.

b. As in 1 K 7:42 the text adds a doublet of the preceding verse.

c. 'ten' corr.; 'he made' Hebr.

d. Meaning uncertain.

5 a. 1 K speaks of priests here, but the Chronicler is thinking of Nb 1:50f, cf. 1 Ch 15:2. The deuteronomic expression 'the levitical priests' at the end of the verse combines the two traditions. Cf. 23:18; 30:27.

b. 'Holy (Place)' corr.; 'ark' Hebr.

c. Elaboration of the narrative in 1 K. The Chronicler emphasises the part played in the ceremonies by psalms and music.

sound of the trumpet and cymbal and instruments of music, they gave praise to Yahweh, 'for he is good, for his love is everlasting'.

7:2 Because of the cloud the priests could no longer perform their duties: the glory of Yahweh filled the Temple of God. 14

6 Then Solomon said: 1

'Yahweh has chosen to dwell in the thick cloud.
Yes, I have built you a dwelling,
a place for you to live in for ever.' 2

||1K8:14-21 Solomon addresses the people

Then the king turned and blessed the whole assembly of Israel, while the whole assembly of Israel stood. •He said, 'Blessed be Yahweh, the God of Israel, who has carried out by his hand what he promised with his mouth to David, my father, when he said, •"From the day I brought my people out of the land of Egypt I chose no city, in any of the tribes of Israel, to have a house built where my name might make its home, and chose no man to be prince of my people Israel; •but I chose Jerusalem for my name to make its home there, and I chose David to rule over Israel my people". •My father David had set his heart on building a house for the name of Yahweh, the God of Israel, •but Yahweh said, "You have set your heart on building a house for my name, and in this you have done well; •and yet, you are not the man to build the house; your son, born of your own body, shall build the house for my name". •Yahweh has kept the promise he made: I have succeeded David my father and am seated on the throne of Israel, as Yahweh promised; I have built the house for the name of Yahweh, the God of Israel, •and have placed in it the ark containing the covenant that Yahweh made with the sons of Israel.' 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11

Then in the presence of the whole assembly of Israel Solomon stood before the altar of Yahweh and stretched out his hands. •Now Solomon had made a bronze pedestal and had placed it in the middle of the court; it was five cubits long, five cubits wide and five cubits high. Solomon mounted it, and knelt down on it in the presence of the whole assembly of Israel;^a he stretched out his hands to heaven, •and said, 'Yahweh, God of Israel, not in heaven nor on earth is there such a God as you, true to your covenant and your graciousness towards your servants when they walk wholeheartedly in your way. •You have kept the promise you made to your servant David my father; what you promised with your mouth, today you have carried out by your hand. •And now, Yahweh, God of Israel, keep the promise you made your servant David when you said, "You shall never lack for a man seated before me on the throne of Israel, if only your sons are careful how they behave, following my law as you yourself have done". •So now, God of Israel, let the words come true which you spoke to your servant David my father. •Yet will God really live with men on the earth? Why, the heavens and their own heavens cannot contain you! How much less this house that I have built! •Listen to the prayer and entreaty of your servant, Yahweh my God; listen to the cry and to the prayer your servant makes to you. Day and night let your eyes watch over this house, over this place in which you have promised to make a home for your name. Listen to the prayer that your servant will offer in this place. 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20

||1K8:30-51 Solomon's prayer for the people

'Hear the entreaties of your servant and of Israel your people as they pray in this place. From heaven where your dwelling is, hear; and, as you hear, forgive. 21

'If a man sins against his neighbour, and the neighbour calls down^b a curse on him and makes him swear an oath before your altar in this Temple, •hear from 22 23

heaven, and act; decide between your servants: punish the wicked one, bringing his conduct down on his own head; and vindicate the innocent, rewarding him as his innocence deserves.

24 'If Israel your people are defeated by the enemy because they have sinned against you, if they return to you and praise your name and pray to you and 25 entreat you in this Temple, •hear from heaven; forgive the sin of your people Israel, and bring them back to the land you gave to them and their ancestors.

26 'When the heavens are shut and there is no rain because they have sinned against you, if they pray in this place and praise your name and, having been 27 humbled by you, repent of their sin, •hear from heaven and forgive the sin of your servant and of your people Israel; show them the good way they ought to follow; and send rain on your land which you have given your people as an inheritance.

28 'Should there be famine in the land or pestilence, blight or mildew, locust or caterpillar, should this people's enemies lay siege to one of its city gates,
29 if there is any plague or sickness, •if any one man, or all Israel your people, should feel remorse and sorrow and pray or make entreaty, stretching out his
30 hands towards this Temple, •hear from heaven where your home is; forgive, and deal with each as his conduct deserves, for you know each heart—you 31 alone know the hearts of all mankind—that they may come to revere you and follow your ways as long as they live in the land you gave to our ancestors.

32 'And the foreigner too, not belonging to your people Israel, if he comes from a distant country for the sake of your name and of your mighty hand and 33 outstretched arm, if he comes and prays in this Temple, •hear from heaven where your home is, and grant all the foreigner asks, so that all the peoples of the earth may come to know your name and, like your people Israel, revere you, and know that your name is given to the Temple I have built. 1 K 8:41f

34 'If your people go out to war against their enemies on the way you send them, and if they turn towards the city you have chosen and towards the Temple
35 I have built for your name and pray to you, •hear from heaven their prayer and their entreaty, and uphold their cause.

36 'If they sin against you—for there is no man who does not sin—and you are angry with them and deliver them to the enemy, and they are led away captive
37 to a land far or near, •if in the land of their exile they come to themselves and repent, and in the country of their captivity they entreat you saying, "We have sinned, we have acted perversely and wickedly", •and if they turn again to you with all their heart and soul in the country of their captivity to which they have been deported, and pray, turning towards the land you gave their ancestors, towards the city you have chosen, and towards the Temple I have built for your 39 name, •hear from heaven where your home is, hear their prayer and their entreaty, uphold their cause, and forgive your people the sins they have committed against you.

7 When Solomon had finished his prayer, fire came down from heaven and 1 consumed the holocaust and the sacrifices; and the glory of Yahweh filled 2 the Temple. •The priests could not enter the house of Yahweh, because the glory 3 of Yahweh filled the house of Yahweh. •All the sons of Israel, seeing the fire 4 come down and the glory of Yahweh resting on the Temple, bowed down on 5 the pavement with their faces to the earth; they worshipped and gave praise to 6 Yahweh, 'for he is good, for his love is everlasting'. •Then the king and all the 7 people offered sacrifice before Yahweh. •King Solomon offered twenty-two 8 thousand oxen and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep in sacrifice; and so 9 the king and all the people dedicated the Temple of Yahweh. •The priests stood 10 in their places, while the Levites gave praise to Yahweh^a on the instruments 11 that David had made to accompany the canticles of Yahweh, 'for his love is 12 everlasting'. These performed the hymns of praise that David had composed. 13
By their side were the priests sounding the trumpet, while all Israel stood. 14

Solomon consecrated the middle of the court that is in front of the Temple 15 of Yahweh; he offered the holocaust there and the fatty parts of the communion 16 sacrifices, since the bronze altar Solomon had made could not hold the holocaust, 17 the oblation and the fatty parts. •Solomon then celebrated the feast for seven 18 days and all the Israelites gathered together with him in enormous numbers 19 from the Pass of Hamath to the wadi of Egypt. •On the eighth day they held 20 a propitiation ceremony,^b for they had been seven days dedicating the altar 21 and seven days celebrating the feast. •On the twenty-third day^c of the seventh month 22
Solomon dismissed the people to their homes, rejoicing and with happy hearts for 23 the goodness Yahweh had shown to David and to Solomon and to his people Israel. 24

1K9:1-9 Yahweh appears and gives a warning^d

Solomon finished the Temple of Yahweh and the royal palace and successfully 25 concluded all he had set his heart on doing in the house of Yahweh and in his 26
own. •Then Yahweh appeared to Solomon in the night and said, 'I grant your 27 prayer. I choose this place for myself to be a house of sacrifice. •When I close 28 the skies and there is no rain, when I command the locust to devour the land, 29 when I send pestilence among my people, •then if my people who bear my name 30 humble themselves, and pray and seek my presence and turn from their wicked 31 ways, I myself will hear from heaven and forgive their sins and restore their 32 land. •Now and for the future my eyes are open and my ears attentive to the 33 prayer that is offered in this place. •Now and for the future I have chosen and 34 consecrated this house for my name to be there for ever; my eyes and my heart 35 will be there for ever. •For your part, if you walk before me as David your father 36 did, if you do all that I order you and keep my statutes and my ordinances, 37
I will make your royal throne secure, according to the compact I made with 38
David your father when I said: You shall never lack for a man to rule in Israel. 39
But if you turn away from me and forsake the commandments and statutes 40
I have set before you, and go and serve other gods and worship them, •then 41
I will tear the Israelites from the land I have given them, and I will reject from 42 my presence this Temple that I have consecrated for my name and make it a 43 proverb and a byword among all the nations. •As for this Temple, now so 44 exalted, all who pass by will be astounded; they will whistle and say, "Why has 45 Yahweh treated this country and this Temple like this?" •And the answer will be, 46
"Because they forsook Yahweh, the God of their ancestors, who brought them 47 out of the land of Egypt, and they adopted other gods and worshipped them 48 and served them; that is why he has brought all these disasters on them". ' 49

1K9:10-25 Conclusion. The completion of the building programme

8 At the end of the twenty years which it took Solomon to build the Temple 1 of Yahweh and his own palace, •he rebuilt the towns that Hiram^a had given 2

3 him and settled Israelites in them. •He then went to Hamath of Zobah,^b which 4 he captured; •he rebuilt Tadmor in the wilderness^c and all the garrison towns
5 he had built in Hamath. •He rebuilt Upper Beth-horon and Lower Beth-horon, 6 fortified towns with walls and gates and bars, •also Baalath and all the garrison towns owned by Solomon, all the towns for his chariots and horses, and all it 7 pleased Solomon to build in Jerusalem, in Lebanon and in all the countries
8 subject to him. •All those who survived of the Hittite, Amorite, Perizzite, Hivite
9 and Jebusite peoples, who were not Israelites •and whose descendants were left 10 in the country after them, and not exterminated by the Israelites, these Solomon 11 levied for forced labour, as they are levied still. •On the Israelites, however, 12 Solomon did not impose slave-labour; these served as fighting men: they were 13 officers of his equeries and his chariot and cavalry commanders. •These were 14 the administrators' officials in the service of King Solomon: two hundred and 15 fifty in charge of the people.

1 K 9:20f

16 Solomon brought Pharaoh's daughter from the Citadel of David up to the 17 house he had built for her. 'It is not for me' he said 'to let a woman live in the palace
18 of David king of Israel; these are holy places, where the ark of Yahweh has been.'^d

1 K 9:24

19 Solomon then offered holocausts to Yahweh on Yahweh's altar which he had 20 built in front of the porch.^e •Observing the daily rule for holocausts laid down 21 in the commandment of Moses for sabbath, New Moon and the three annual 22 feasts: the feast of Unleavened Bread, the feast of Weeks and the feast of 23 Tabernacles, •he maintained the regulations of his father David, as also the 24 priestly orders in their duties, the rules affecting the Levites who offered praise
25 and served with the priests according to the daily ritual, and the different orders 26 of gatekeepers at each gate, for such had been the commandments of David, 27 the man of God. •They did not deviate in anything, not even in the matter of 28 the treasures, from the royal ordinances applying to the priests and the Levites.

1 K 9:25

29 And all Solomon's work which, until the day when the foundations of the Temple 30 of Yahweh were laid, had been only in preparation, was completed when the 31 Temple of Yahweh was finished.

7 a. The Chronicler makes the levitical performance of the psalmody (outward expression of inward worship, Am 5:21-23) go back to the days of David, and seems to think that it was accompanied by the priestly trumpets of ancient times, Nb 10:1-10.

b. The Chronicler makes the eighth day of the feast, Lv 23:36; Nb 29:35-38, a propitiation ceremony, cf. 2 S 24:21, as in Ne 8:18, a form of thanksgiving for the festivities that have taken place.

c. This figure implies that the feast of Tabernacles of that year (from the fifteenth to the twenty-second of the month) was added to the feast of Dedication (from the eighth to the fourteenth).

d. It is also God's answer to the king's admirable prayer, Vv. 12b-16 are peculiar to the Chronicler.

8 a. According to 1 K it was Solomon who gave them to Hiram (Huram).

b. This campaign is not mentioned in Kings. The Books of Kings and Samuel make a distinction between Hamath and Zobah. To embellish Solomon's reputation the Chronicler may have credited him with the victory of David referred to in 2 S 8:3; 10:8. Cf. 1 Ch 18:3f; 19:16.

c. The Chronicler has taken the Tamar of 1 K for the great city of Tadmor, i.e. Palmyra.

d. This explanation is absent from 1 K. After the Exile, fear of abuses led to strict regulations governing the presence of women in the Temple.

e. The Chronicler completely transforms 1 K 9:25. In his eyes the Temple worship is the exact carrying out of the Mosaic ritual and of David's regulations.

staff and the way they were dressed, his cupbearers and the holocausts he offered^a in the Temple of Yahweh, it left her breathless, •and she said to the king, 'What 5 I heard in my own country about you and your wisdom was true, then! •Until 6 I came and saw it with my own eyes I could not believe what they told me, but evidently what they told me was less than half the real extent of your wisdom; you surpass the report I heard. •How happy your wives are! How happy these 7 servants of yours who wait on you always and hear your wisdom! •Blessed be 8 Yahweh your God who has granted you his favour, setting you on his throne as king in the name of Yahweh your God.^b Because your God loves Israel and means to uphold him for ever, he has made you king over them to administer law and justice.' •And she presented the king with a hundred and twenty talents 9 of gold and great quantities of spices and precious stones. There never were spices like those the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon. •Similarly the servants 10 of Hiram and the servants of Solomon, who carried gold from Ophir, brought alummim wood and precious stones. •Of the alummim wood the king made 11 floorboards for the Temple of Yahweh and for the royal palace, and lyres and harps for the musicians; the like of them had never been seen before in the land of Judah. •And King Solomon, in his turn, presented the queen of Sheba with 12 everything she expressed any wish for, besides returning what she had brought to the king. Then she went home, she and her servants, to her own country.

1K10:14-15 The weight of gold coming to Solomon in one year was six hundred and 13 sixty-six talents of gold, •not counting the merchants' dues that the import 14 agents brought in; all the kings of Arabia and the governors of the country also 1K10:16-17 brought gold and silver to Solomon. •King Solomon made two hundred great 15 shields of beaten gold, and plated each shield with six hundred shekels of gold. Also three hundred small shields of beaten gold, and plated each of these with 16 three hundred shekels of gold; and he put them in the Hall of the Forest of 1K10:18-20 Lebanon. •The king also made a great ivory throne, and plated it with purest 17 gold. •The throne had six steps, and at the back of it a lamb in gold,^c and arms 18 at either side of the seat; two lions stood beside the arms, •and twelve lions stood 19 on either side of the six steps. No throne like this was ever made in any other kingdom.

1K10:21-25 All King Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the furnishings in 20 the Hall of the Forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; silver was thought little of in the time of Solomon. •And the king also had ships that went to Tarshish 21 with Hiram's men, and once every three years the ships of Tarshish would come back laden with gold and silver, ivory, apes and baboons. •For riches and for 22 wisdom King Solomon outdid all the kings of the earth. •All the kings of the 23 earth sought audience of Solomon to hear the wisdom God had implanted in his heart, •and each would bring his own present: gold vessels, silver vessels, 24 robes, armour, spices, horses and mules; and this went on year after year.

1K11:41-43 The death of Solomon

The rest of the history of Solomon, from first to last, is not all this recorded 29 in the History of Nathan the prophet, in the Prophecy of Ahijah of Shiloh, and in the Vision of Iddo the seer concerning Jeroboam son of Nebat? •Solomon 30 reigned in Jerusalem for forty years over all Israel. •Then Solomon slept with 31 his ancestors and was buried in the Citadel of David his father; his son Rehoboam succeeded him.

IV. FIRST REFORMS OF THE MONARCHICAL PERIOD

A. REHOBAM AND THE REGROUPING OF THE LEVITES

The schism

[1 K 12:1-19]

1 10 Rehoboam went to Shechem, for it was to Shechem that all Israel had 2 gone to proclaim him king. •As soon as Jeroboam son of Nebat heard the 3 news—he was still in Egypt, where he had taken refuge from King Solomon—he 4 returned from Egypt. •They sent and summoned him, and he came, with the 5 whole assembly.^a

6 And they said this to Rehoboam, •‘Your father gave us a heavy burden to 7 bear; lighten your father’s harsh tyranny now, and the weight of the burden he 8 laid on us, and we will serve you’. •He said, ‘Come back to me in three days’.
 9 And the people went away.

10 King Rehoboam consulted the elders, who had been in the service of his 22:4
 11 father Solomon while he was alive. ‘What reply’ he asked ‘do you advise me 12 to give to this people?’ •‘If you are kind to these people,’ they said ‘if you are 13 pleasant to them and treat them fairly, then they will be your servants for ever.’
 14 But he rejected the advice given him by the elders and consulted the young men
 15 who had grown up with him and were in his service. •‘How do you advise us’ 16 he asked ‘to answer these people who have said to me, “Lighten the burden your 17 father imposed on us”?’ •The young men who had grown up with him replied, 18 ‘Give this answer to these people who have said, “Your father gave us a heavy 19 burden to bear, you must lighten it for us”, say this to them, “My little finger is 20 thicker than my father’s loins! •So then, my father made you bear a heavy 21 burden; I will make it heavier still! My father beat you with whips; I am going 22 to beat you with loaded scourges!”’

23 On the third day all the people came to Rehoboam in obedience to the king’s 24 command: ‘Come back to me on the third day’. •The king gave them a harsh 25 answer. King Rehoboam, rejecting the advice of the elders, •spoke to them as 26 the young men had recommended. ‘My father made^b you bear a heavy burden,’ 27 he said ‘but I will make it heavier still. My father beat you with whips; I am 28 going to beat you with loaded scourges!’ •The king in fact took no notice of the 29 people’s wishes, and this was brought about by God to carry out the promise 30 Yahweh had spoken through Ahijah of Shiloh to Jeroboam son of Nebat.
 31 When all Israel saw that the king took no notice of their wishes, they gave 32 him this answer:

‘What share have we in David?
 We have no inheritance in the son of Jesse.
 To your tents, Israel, each one of you.
 Henceforth look after your own House, David!’

33 And all Israel went off to their tents. •Rehoboam however ruled over those 34 sons of Israel who lived in the towns of Judah. •King Rehoboam sent Adoram 35 who was in charge of forced labour, but the Israelites stoned him to death;
 36 whereupon King Rehoboam was obliged to mount his chariot and escape to 37 Jerusalem. •And Israel has remained separated from the House of David until 38 the present day.

9 a. Text corr.; Hebr. ‘his upper rooms by which he went up to the Temple’.

b. Lit. ‘for Yahweh your God’. The Chronicler emphasises the fact that Yahweh remains the king of Israel.

c. Probably the Chronicler’s misgivings about

Canaanite idolatry make him substitute the lamb of sacrifice for the bull of 1 K.

d. ‘Cilicia’ (Musur) corr.; ‘Egypt’ Hebr., cf. 1:16.

10 a. ‘assembly’ Greek; ‘Israel’ Hebr.

b. ‘My father made’ corr.; ‘I shall make’ Hebr.

The activities of Rehoboam

11 Rehoboam went to Jerusalem and mustered the House of Judah with Benjamin, a hundred and eighty thousand picked warriors, to fight the House of Israel and win back the kingdom of Rehoboam. •But the word of Yahweh came to Shemaiah the man of God, •‘Say this to Rehoboam son of Solomon, king of Judah, and to all the Israelites in Judah and Benjamin, “Yahweh says this: Do not set out to fight against your brothers; let everyone go home, for what has happened is my doing”’. They obeyed Yahweh’s command and went back instead of marching against Jeroboam.

Rehoboam lived in Jerusalem and built fortified towns in Judah. •He rebuilt Bethlehem, Etam, Tekoa, •Beth-zur, Soco, Adullam, •Gath, Mareshah, Ziph, Adoraim, Lachish, Azekah, •Zorah, Aijalon, Hebron; these were fortified towns in Judah and Benjamin. •He fortified them strongly and put commanders in them with stores of food, oil and wine. •In each of these towns were shields and spears. He made them very strong to keep Judah and Benjamin under control.

Rehoboam’s relations with the priests and Levites^a

The priests and the Levites throughout Israel left their districts to take up residence near him. •The Levites, indeed, abandoned their pasture lands and their holdings, and came to Judah and Jerusalem, since Jeroboam and his sons had excluded them from the priesthood of Yahweh, •and had set up for himself a priesthood of the high places, for the satyrs and the calves he had made. Members of all the tribes of Israel, men wholeheartedly devoted to the worship of Yahweh the God of Israel, followed them and came to Jerusalem to sacrifice to Yahweh, the God of their ancestors. •These added strength to the kingdom of Judah, and gave their support to Rehoboam son of Solomon for three years, because during three years he followed the example of David and Solomon.

1K11:1-13 Rehoboam turns unfaithful^b

Rehoboam took as wife Mahalath the daughter of Jerimoth son of David, and of Abihail, daughter of Eliab^c son of Jesse, •and she bore him sons: Jeush, Shemariah and Zaham. •After her, he married Maacah daughter of Absalom, who bore him Abijah, Attai, Ziza and Shelomith. •Rehoboam loved Maacah, daughter of Absalom, more than all his other wives and concubines. He had in fact a total of eighteen wives and sixty concubines and had twenty-eight sons and sixty daughters. •Rehoboam appointed Abijah, Maacah’s son, as head of the family, to be prince among his brothers, with a view to making him king. •He built more and demolished more than any of his descendants throughout the territories of Judah and Benjamin and in all the fortified towns, which he equipped with numerous granaries.

But he consulted the many gods of his wives,^d 12 and no sooner was his royal authority securely consolidated than he, and all Israel with him, abandoned the Law of Yahweh. •In the fifth year of Rehoboam, Shishak the king of Egypt marched on Jerusalem, since it had been unfaithful to Yahweh. •With twelve hundred chariots and sixty thousand horses and a countless army of Libyans, Sukkiim and Ethiopians who came from Egypt with him, •he captured the fortified towns of Judah and reached Jerusalem. •Rehoboam and the Judaeans, at the advance of Shishak, had mustered near Jerusalem; to them came Shemaiah the prophet. ‘Yahweh says this’ he said to them. “‘You have abandoned me, now I have abandoned you into the hands of Shishak.’” •Then the Israelite captains and the king humbled themselves. ‘Yahweh is just!’ they said. •When Yahweh saw that they had humbled themselves, the word of Yahweh came to Shemaiah. ‘They have humbled themselves,’ it said ‘I will not destroy them. In a little while I will grant them deliverance; my wrath shall not fall on Jerusalem through the power of Shishak. •Nevertheless they shall become his slaves, so that they may come to understand the difference between serving me and serving the kingdoms of foreign countries.'

9 Shishak the king of Egypt marched on Jerusalem. He took all the treasures from the Temple of Yahweh and the treasures from the royal palace, he took 10 everything, including the golden shields that Solomon had made; •in place of them King Rehoboam had bronze shields made, entrusting them to the care
11 of the officers of the guard who guarded the king's palace gate. •Whenever the king went to the Temple of Yahweh, the guards would come out carrying them, and return them to the guardroom afterwards.

12 Since he had humbled himself, the wrath of Yahweh turned away from him and did not destroy him altogether. Indeed, things went well in Judah, •and King Rehoboam was able to strengthen his position in Jerusalem and to govern. Now Rehoboam was forty-one years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city chosen by Yahweh out of all the tribes of Israel, in which to give his name a home. His mother's name was 14 Naamah the Ammonitess. •He did evil, because he had not set his heart on seeking Yahweh.

15 The history of Rehoboam, from first to last, is not all this recorded in the Annals of Shemaiah the prophet and of Iddo the seer concerning the grouping of the Levites^a and the incessant warfare between Rehoboam and Jeroboam?
16 Then Rehoboam slept with his ancestors and was buried in the Citadel of David; his son Abijah succeeded him.

B. ABIJAH AND LOYALTY TO THE LEGITIMATE PRIESTHOOD

War

1 13 In the eighteenth year of King Jeroboam, Abijah^a became king of Judah
2 and reigned for three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Micaiah,^b
3 daughter of Uriel, from Gibeah. Abijah and Jeroboam were at war. •Abijah went into battle with an army of brave fighters, four hundred thousand picked men, while Jeroboam drew up his battle line against him with eight hundred thousand picked men, stout fighters.

Abijah addresses the Israelites^c

4 Abijah took his stand on Mount Zemaraim, in the highlands of Ephraim.
5 'Jeroboam and all Israel' he cried 'listen to me! •Do you not know that Yahweh the God of Israel has given the sovereignty of Israel to David for 6 ever? It is an inviolable covenant^d for him and for his sons. •Yet Jeroboam son of Nebat, a servant of Solomon son of David, has risen in revolt against 7 his lord; •worthless men, scoundrels, have rallied to him and forced their will on Rehoboam the son of Solomon, on Rehoboam, then a young man and timid,
8 powerless to resist them. •Now you talk of resisting the sovereignty of Yahweh,

11 a. The Chronicler is of the opinion that, in accordance with Jos 21, the Levites had their own towns scattered throughout the country; he gives the list of these in 1 Ch 6. Where Jeroboam rules they find true worship impossible and emigrate to Judah. A similar emigration occurred after the fall of Samaria.

b. 1 K 11 blamed Solomon for his many wives and for the idolatrous practices into which they had led him. The Chronicler passes over this, but taxes Rehoboam with similar conduct. Convinced of the doctrine of individual retribution, Ezk 14:12+, he is always anxious to show how each king suffers for his own sins.

c. 'daughter' Greek; 'son' Hebr. According to the Hebr., Abihail was Rehoboam's wife.

d. Lit. 'he consulted the multitude of his wives'. The Chronicler apparently shrinks from calling these alien deities 'gods'.

12 a. 'Levites' is not in the text.

13 a. The Abijah of 1 K 14:31; 15:1,7,8.

b. She is called Maacah in the Greek and in 1 K, and represented as Absalom's daughter. Cf. 11:20. But 1 K 15:10, followed by 2 Ch 15:16, has a Maacah daughter of Absalom who is the mother of Asa, and therefore wife of Abijah.

c. This discourse, similar to those composed by ancient historians, elaborates one of the Chronicler's favourite themes: there is no legitimate priesthood but that of the priests and Levites. God favours only those who worship him in accordance with the 'Priestly' legislation of the Pentateuch with its Aaronic priesthood, v. 10, cf. Lv 8, its holocausts and incense, Lv 1f, its loaves of offering. The golden lamp-stand, cf. Ex 37:17; Lv 24:2, is substituted for the candlesticks of Solomon's Temple, 1 K 7:49; 2 Ch 4:7.

d. Lit. 'covenant of salt', cf. Lv 2:13.

which belongs to the sons of David, and you stand there in a great horde, with your golden calves that Jeroboam made you for gods! •Have you not driven out the priests of Yahweh, the sons of Aaron and the Levites, to make priests of your own like the peoples of foreign countries? Anyone who comes with a bull and seven rams to get himself consecrated can become priest of what is no god at all! •But for our part, our God is Yahweh, and we have not abandoned him: our priests are sons of Aaron who minister to Yahweh, and those who serve are Levites. •Every morning, every evening, we burn holocausts to Yahweh our God; we have the incense of sweet spices, the loaves set out in rows on the pure table, the golden lamp-stand with its lamps that burn each evening; for we observe the ritual of Yahweh our God, but you have abandoned him. •See how God is with us, at our head; see his priests with the trumpets, who will sound them to raise the war cry against you. Sons of Israel, do not fight against Yahweh, the God of our ancestors, for you will not succeed.'

The battle

Jeroboam outflanked the Judaeans by setting an ambush in their rear; the Judaeans were facing the Israelites with the ambush in their rear. •The Judaeans, turning about, found themselves attacked in front and rear. They called on Yahweh, the priests sounded the trumpets, •and the men of Judah raised the war cry, and as they raised the cry God scattered Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah. •The Israelites fled before Judah and God delivered them into the power of the Judaeans. •Abijah and his army inflicted a crushing defeat on them: five hundred thousand of Israel's chosen men fell killed. •So the sons of Israel were humbled on that occasion, and the sons of Judah reassured since they had relied on Yahweh, the God of their ancestors.

The end of the reign of Abijah

Abijah pursued Jeroboam and captured certain towns from him: Bethel with its outlying villages, Jeshanah with its outlying villages and Ephron with its outlying villages.^e •So in the lifetime of Abijah, Jeroboam could no longer maintain his power; and Yahweh struck him down, and he died. •But Abijah grew in strength; he took fourteen wives and had twenty-two sons and sixteen daughters. •The rest of the history of Abijah, his conduct and his deeds, is not all this recorded in the Midrash of the prophet Iddo? •Then Abijah slept with his fathers and they buried him in the Citadel of David; his son Asa succeeded him.

C. ASA AND HIS REFORM OF PUBLIC WORSHIP

Peace under Asa

In his time the country was at peace for ten years.

14 Asa did what is good and right in the eyes of Yahweh. •He abolished the foreign altars and the high places, broke the pillars, cut down the sacred poles, •and urged the Judaeans to look to Yahweh, the God of their ancestors, and to observe law and commandment.^a •He abolished the high places and the altars of incense in every town of Judah. The kingdom was at peace under his rule. •He rebuilt the fortified towns of Judah, since the country was at peace and free of war during those years, Yahweh having granted him peace.

'Let us rebuild these towns,' he told Judah 'let us surround them with wall and tower, with gate and bar; we shall be left in this land, since we have looked to Yahweh our God; and he has looked to us and given us peace on every side.'

They built and prospered. •Asa had an army of three hundred thousand Judaeans armed with buckler and spear, and two hundred and eighty thousand Benjaminites bearing shield and wielding the bow, all of them valiant champions.

Zerah's invasion^b

⁸ Zerah the Cushite and an army one million strong with three hundred chariots made an incursion, and penetrated to Mareshah. •Asa marched out to intercept him and drew up his battle line in the Valley of Zephathah, at Mareshah. ⁹ He called on Yahweh, his God. 'Yahweh,' he said 'no one but you can stand up for the powerless against the powerful. Come to our help, Yahweh our God! We rely on you, and confront this horde in your name. Yahweh, you are our God. Let man leave everything to you!' ¹⁰ ¹¹ ¹² ¹³ ¹⁴ ¹⁵

They collected great quantities of booty, •they conquered all the towns in the area of Gerar, for the terror of Yahweh had fallen on these; they plundered them all since they were full of loot. •They also set on the enclosures of livestock and carried off great numbers of sheep and camels; then they returned to Jerusalem.

The prophecy of Azariah and the oath of fidelity

¹ ² 15 The spirit of God came on Azariah son of Oded; •he went out to meet Asa and said, 'Listen to me, Asa, and all you of Judah and of Benjamin. Yahweh is with you so long as you are with him. When you seek him, he lets you find him; when you desert him, he deserts you. •Many a day Israel will spend without a faithful God, without priest to teach, without law; •but in their distress they will return to Yahweh, the God of Israel; they will seek him, and he will let them find him. •When that time comes no grown man will know peace, for many troubles will afflict all the inhabitants of the country. •Nation will be shattered by nation, city shattered by city, since God will afflict them with every kind of distress. •But for your part, take courage, do not let your hands weaken, for your deeds will be rewarded.' ³ ⁴ ⁵ ⁶ ⁷ ⁸ ⁹ ¹⁰ ¹¹ ¹² ¹³ ¹⁴ ¹⁵

e. The conquest proved not to be conclusive.

14 a. The Chronicler credits Asa with measures like those taken by Josiah, 2 K 22:4f.

b. Apparently an invasion of nomads from the Negeb.

15 a. The Hebr. adds 'Oded the prophet', thus referring what precedes to him and not, unlike v. 1, to his son.

b. 'in the highlands' versions; 'from the highlands' Hebr.

c. It was Hezekiah who restored the altar which Ahaz had removed, 2 K 16:11,14, and whose reforms were prompted, according to Jr 26:18-19, by the words of the prophet Micah. It was Hezekiah, too, who welcomed the N. Israelites into Jerusalem, 2 Ch 30:25. Doubtless by the time of the Chronicler these recollections had been connected with the name of Asa.

d. Lit. 'They entered into the covenant'.

of queen mother for making an obscenity for Asherah; Asa cut down her obscenity and burnt it in the wadi Kidron. •Though the high places were not abolished in Israel,^c the heart of Asa was blameless all his life. •He deposited the offerings dedicated by his father and his own offerings too, in the Temple of God, silver and gold and furnishings.

Up to the thirty-fifth year of Asa's reign there was no war. 16 In the thirty-sixth year of Asa's reign, Baasha king of Israel marched on Judah and fortified Ramah to blockade Asa king of Judah. •Asa then took the silver and gold from the treasuries of the Temple of Yahweh and the royal palace, and sent this with the following message to Ben-hadad king of Aram who lived in Damascus, 'An alliance between myself and you, as between my father and your father! With this I send you silver and gold. Come, break off your alliance with Baasha king of Israel, and he will have to retire from my territory.' •Ben-hadad agreed, and sent his generals against the towns of Israel; he conquered Ijon, Dan, Abel-maim and all the garrison towns of Naphtali. •When Baasha heard this he gave up fortifying Ramah, abandoning this work. •King Asa then brought all Judah; they took away the stones and timber with which Baasha had been fortifying Ramah, and the king used them to fortify Geba and Mizpah.

It was then that Hanani^a the seer came to Asa king of Judah and said, 'Since you have relied on the king of Aram and not on Yahweh your God, the army of the king of Aram will slip through your fingers. •Did not the Cushites and Libyans form a vast army with great numbers of chariots and horses? And were they not delivered into your power because you relied on Yahweh? •Since the eyes of Yahweh rove to and fro across the whole world to display his might on behalf of those whose hearts are wholly his, you have acted on this occasion like a fool; and from now on you will have war.' •Enraged with the seer, Asa had him put in the stocks in prison, he was so angry with him for this; at the same time Asa began treating part of the population harshly too.

The end of the reign of Asa

The history of Asa, from first to last, is recorded in the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel. •A disease attacked Asa from head to foot^b in the thirty-ninth year of his reign; and, what is more, he turned in his sickness, not to Yahweh, but to doctors.^c •Then Asa slept with his ancestors, dying in the forty-first year of his reign. •They buried him in the tomb^d he had ordered to be dug for himself in the Citadel of David. They laid him on a couch entirely covered with spices and varied ointments, products of the perfumer's skill, and lit a huge fire for him.^e

D. JEHOSEPHAT AND HIS GOVERNMENT

His power^a

17 His son Jehoshaphat succeeded him and consolidated his power over Israel. He put troops in all the fortified towns in Judah, and appointed governors in the land of Judah and in all the towns of Ephraim captured by his father Asa.

His observance of the Law

Yahweh was with Jehoshaphat because he followed the example of his father's^b earlier days and did not have recourse to the Baals; •he sought the God of his father, following his commandments and not following the example of Israel. Yahweh made the kingship secure in his hands; all Judah paid tribute to Jehoshaphat, and ample riches and honour were his. •His heart advanced in the ways of Yahweh, and once again he did away with the high places and sacred poles in Judah.

In the third year of his reign he sent his officers: Ben-hail, Obadiah, Zechariah,

8 Nethanel and Micaiah, to give instruction in the towns of Judah. •With them
 9 went the Levites: Shemaiah, Nethaniah, Zebadiah, Asahel, Shemiramoth, 10 Jehonathan, Adonijah and Tobijah, the Levites, together with the priests, 11 Elishama and Jehoram.^c •They gave instruction in Judah, having with them the 12 book of the Law of Yahweh, and went round all the towns of Judah instructing
 13 the people. •The terror of Yahweh fell on all the kingdoms of the land 14 surrounding Judah; they did not make war on Jehoshaphat. •Some of the 15 Philistines brought him gifts and silver in tribute; the Arabs^d themselves brought 16 him, in small stock, seven thousand seven hundred rams and seven thousand 17 seven hundred he-goats. •Jehoshaphat became more and more powerful.
 18 He built fortresses and garrison towns in Judah. 19:8
Ezr 7:25
Is 16:1

The army

13 He had strong formations in the towns of Judah and a garrison of valiant 14 champions in Jerusalem. •This was their disposition by families: for Judah, 15 commanders of thousands: Adnah, the commanding officer, with three hundred 16 thousand valiant champions; •under his command, Jehohanan with two hundred 17 thousand; •under his command, Amasiah son of Zichri, who had 18 volunteered for Yahweh's service, with two hundred thousand valiant champions.
 19 From Benjamin: the valiant champion Eliada with two hundred thousand, 20 armed with bow and shield; •under his command, Jehozabad with a hundred 21 thousand and eighty thousand equipped for war. 1 Ch 8:40
 22 These were the men who served the king, not counting those the king had 23 put in the fortified towns throughout Judah.

The alliance with Ahab; the prophets' attitude

||1K22:1-35

1 18 Jehoshaphat, then, enjoyed great wealth and honour, and allied himself
 2 by marriage to Ahab.^a •After some years he went to visit Ahab in Samaria.
 3 Ahab slaughtered for him and for his retinue great numbers of sheep and oxen^b
 4 to induce him to attack Ramoth-gilead. •‘Will you come with me to Ramoth-
 5 gilead?’ Ahab king of Israel asked Jehoshaphat king of Judah. Jehoshaphat 6 answered the king of Israel, ‘I am as ready for battle as you, my men as your 7 men’.

The spurious prophets predict success

4 Jehoshaphat, however, said to the king of Israel, ‘First, please consult the 5 word of Yahweh’. •So the king of Israel called the prophets together, four hundred 6 of them. ‘Should we march to attack Ramoth-gilead,’ he asked ‘or should 7 I refrain?’ ‘March,’ they replied ‘Yahweh will deliver it into the power of the 8 king.’ •But Jehoshaphat said, ‘Is there no other prophet of Yahweh here for 9 us to consult?’ •The king of Israel answered Jehoshaphat, ‘There is one more 10 man through whom we can consult Yahweh, but I hate him because he never 11 has a favourable prophecy for me, always unfavourable ones; he is Micaiah son 12 of Imlah’. ‘The king should not say such things’ Jehoshaphat said. •Accordingly

e. The Chronicler follows 1 K without troubling to harmonise it with 2 Ch 14:4.

16 a. His reproach is the same as that of Isaiah to Ahaz, Is 7:13f. The prophets could never tolerate civil war in the nation God had chosen.

b. Alternative translation ‘a malignant disease attacked his feet’.

c. In those days medicine and magic were often confused. The Hebr. word for ‘doctor’ is also used for spirits of the underworld, consulted in crises, 1 S 28:6f; cf. 2 K 1:2f.

d. Hebr. ‘the tombs’.

e. Possibly cremation, more probably a reference to the burning of spices, cf. 21:19.

17 a. The Chronicler sees Asa as a type of the peaceful, Jehoshaphat of the strong king. The king's name means

b. Hebr. ‘his father David's’.

c. No doubt this was also a military mission but the Chronicler takes its primary purpose to be instruction in the Law, like the mission of Ezra when he was sent by Artaxerxes, Ezr 7:25; teachers of the Law and synagogue instructions were already features of the Chronicler's times.

d. Not all the Arabian tribes but a nomadic group which had infiltrated into Edom and Moab, cf. 21:16.

18 a. His son Joram married Athaliah, Ahab's daughter.

b. In violation of Lv 17 the sacrifice was offered outside the accredited sanctuary and would prove disastrous.

the king of Israel summoned one of the eunuchs and said, 'Bring Micaiah son of Imlah immediately'.

The king of Israel and Jehoshaphat king of Judah were both sitting on their 9 thrones in full regalia; they sat at the threshing-floor outside the gate of Samaria, with all the prophets raving in front of them. •Zedekiah son of Chenaanah had 10 made himself iron horns. 'Yahweh says this' he said. "“With these you will gore the Aramaeans till you make an end of them.”" •And all the prophets 11 prophesied the same. 'March to Ramoth-gilead,' they said 'and conquer. Yahweh will deliver it into the power of the king.'

The messenger who had gone to summon Micaiah said, 'Here are all the 12 prophets as one man in speaking favourably to the king. Try to speak like one of them and foretell success.' •But Micaiah answered, 'As Yahweh lives, what 13
my God says, that will I utter!' •When he came to the king, the king said, 14
'Micaiah, should we march to attack Ramoth-gilead, or should I refrain?' He answered, 'March and conquer. They will be delivered into your power.' •But 15 the king said, 'How often must I put you on oath to tell me nothing but the truth in the name of Yahweh?' •Then Micaiah spoke: 16

'I have seen all Israel scattered on the mountains
like sheep without a shepherd.
And Yahweh said, "These have no master, let each one go home unmolested".'

At this the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, 'Did I not tell you that he 17 never gives me favourable prophecies, but only unfavourable ones?' •Micaiah 18 went on, 'Listen rather to the word of Yahweh. I have seen Yahweh seated on his throne; all the array of heaven stood to his right and to his left. •Yahweh 19 said, "Who will trick Ahab king of Israel into marching to his death at Ramoth-gilead?" At which some answered one way, and some another. •Then the spirit 20 came forward and stood before Yahweh. "I," he said "I will trick him." "How?"
Yahweh asked. •He replied, "I will go and become a lying spirit in the mouths 21 of all his prophets". "You shall trick him," Yahweh said "you shall succeed.
Go and do it." •Now see how Yahweh has put a lying spirit into the mouths 22 of your prophets here. But Yahweh has pronounced disaster on you.'

Then Zedekiah son of Chenaanah came up and struck Micaiah on the jaw. 23
'Which way' he asked 'did the spirit of Yahweh leave me, to talk to you?'
'This is what you will find out,' Micaiah retorted 'the day you flee to an inner 24 room to hide.' •The king of Israel said, 'Seize Micaiah and hand him over to 25 Amon, governor of the city, and to Prince Joash, •and say, "This is the king's 26 order: Put this man in prison and feed him on nothing but bread and water until I come back safe and sound" '. •Micaiah said, 'If you come back safe 27 and sound, Yahweh has not spoken through me'.

The king of Israel and Jehoshaphat king of Judah went up against Ramoth- 28 gilead. •The king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, 'I will disguise myself to go 29 into battle, but I want you to wear your royal uniform.' The king of Israel disguised himself, and they went into battle. •The king of Aram had given his 30 chariot commanders the following order: 'Do not attack anyone of whatever rank, except the king of Israel'. •When the chariot commanders caught sight 31 of Jehoshaphat, they said, 'That is the king of Israel'. And they wheeled to the attack. But Jehoshaphat gave a shout and Yahweh came to his help, God drew them away from him, •for the chariot commanders, realising that he was not 32
the king of Israel, called off their pursuit.

35:23 Now one of the men, drawing his bow at random, hit the king of Israel 33 between the corslet and the scale-armour of his breastplate. 'Turn about,' the king said to his charioteer 'get me out of the battle;^d I have been hurt.' •But 34 the battle grew fiercer as the day went on; until evening the king held himself upright in his chariot facing the Aramaeans, and at sunset he died.^e

- ¹ 19 Jehoshaphat came back safe and sound to Jerusalem. •Jehu, son of Hanani the seer, went to meet him and said to King Jehoshaphat, 'Should a man give help to the wicked?^a Should you love those who hate Yahweh and so bring his wrath on you? •There is some good in you, however, since you have removed the sacred poles from the land and have set your heart on seeking God.'

Measures taken to spread the true religion of Yahweh

- ⁴ After a stay in Jerusalem, Jehoshaphat made another progress through his people, from Beersheba to the highlands of Ephraim, to bring them back to Yahweh, the God of their ancestors. •He appointed judges in the country in every one of all the fortified towns of Judah. •He said to these judges, 'Give due thought to your duties, since you are not judging in the name of men but in the name of Yahweh, who is with you whenever you pronounce sentence. •May the fear of Yahweh now be on you. Keep the Law,^b apply it, for Yahweh our God has no part in fraud or partiality or the taking of bribes.'
- ⁸ In addition, Jehoshaphat appointed priests, Levites and heads of Israelite families^c in Jerusalem to pronounce the verdicts of Yahweh and to judge disputed cases. They lived in Jerusalem^d and Jehoshaphat gave them the following instructions, 'You are to perform these duties in the fear of Yahweh, faithfully and with all your heart. •Whatever dispute comes before you from your brothers living in their towns: a question of blood-vengeance, of the Law, of some commandment, of statute, or of ordinance, you are to clarify these matters for them so that they do not incur guilt before Yahweh, whose wrath will otherwise come on you and your brothers. Do this and you will incur no guilt.'
- ¹¹ 'Amariah, the chief priest, will preside over you in all religious matters,^e and Zebadiah son of Ishmael, controller of the House of Judah, in all matters affecting the king.^f The Levites will serve as your scribes. Be resolute, carry out these instructions, and Yahweh will be there to bring success.'

An act of faith and song of praise in the war against Edom

- ¹ 20 After this the Moabites and Ammonites, with some of the Meunites^a started to make war on Jehoshaphat. •Jehoshaphat received the following intelligence, 'A vast horde is advancing against you from Edom, from the other side of the sea; they are already at Hazazon-tamar, that is, En-gedi'.
- ³ Jehoshaphat was alarmed and resolved to have recourse to Yahweh; he proclaimed a fast for all Judah. •Judah assembled to seek help from Yahweh; they came seeking Yahweh from every single town in Judah.
- ⁵ At this assembly of the people of Judah and Jerusalem in the Temple of Yahweh, Jehoshaphat stood before the new court •and said,^b 'Yahweh, God of our ancestors, are you not the God who dwells in the heavens? Do you not rule over all the kingdoms of the nations? Such power and might are in your hands that no one can resist you. •Are you not our God, you who have dispossessed the inhabitants of this land for Israel your people, and given it to the descendants of Abraham whom you will love for ever? •They have settled in it and built a sanctuary there for your name, •saying, "Should calamity befall us, or war, punishment, pestilence, or famine, then we shall stand before this Temple and before you, for your name is in this Temple. From the depths of our distress we shall cry to you, and you will hear and save us.”

Dt 2:4f,9f, 18f. ‘Here now are the Ammonites and Moab and the mountain folk of Seir; 10 when Israel came out of the land of Egypt you would not let Israel invade them; instead, Israel turned away from them and did not destroy them; •and this 11 is how they reward us, by coming to drive us out of the possessions you have given us as our inheritance. •Will you our God not execute judgement on them, 12 since we are helpless against this vast horde attacking us? We ourselves do not know what to do; we look to you.’

Is 8:10 Jehoshaphat bent his head, his face to the ground, and all Judah with those 18 who lived in Jerusalem fell down before Yahweh, worshipping him. •Then the 19 Levites—Kohathites and Korahites—began praising Yahweh the God of Israel at the tops of their voices.

Is 7:9b They rose early in the morning and left for the wilderness of Tekoa. As they 20 were setting out, Jehoshaphat stood and said, ‘Listen to me Judah and all who live in Jerusalem! Have faith in Yahweh your God and you will be secure; have 21 faith in his prophets and you will be successful.’ •Then, having held a conference with the people, he set the cantors of Yahweh in sacred vestments at the head of 22 the army, to sing praises to him. ‘Give praise to Yahweh,’ they sang ‘for his love is everlasting.’ •As they began to sing their joy and their praise, Yahweh laid an 23 ambush for the Ammonites and Moab and the mountain folk of Seir who had come to attack Judah, and routed them. •The Ammonites and Moabites turned 24 on the mountain folk of Seir to inflict the ban on them and destroy them altogether, but they only helped each other to their own undoing.

Ps 136:1 When the men of Judah reached the spot that looks out on the wilderness 24 and turned to face the horde, they found only corpses lying on the ground; no one had escaped. •Jehoshaphat came with his troops to plunder them, and 25 found quantities of cattle, goods, clothing and valuables;^e they collected more than they could take away; the booty was so plentiful they were three days gathering it. •On the fourth day they mustered in the Valley of Beracah; 26 and there they did indeed bless Yahweh,^f hence the name of the Valley of Beracah by which the place is still called today. •Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin, 27 with Jehoshaphat at their head, went back joyfully to Jerusalem, for Yahweh had given them cause to rejoice over their enemies. •To the music of harp and 28 lyre and trumpet they came to Jerusalem and to the Temple of Yahweh, •and 29 the Terror of God came on all the kingdoms of foreign countries when they came to hear how Yahweh had fought against the enemies of Israel. •The kingdom 30 of Jehoshaphat was calm, his God granting him peace on all his frontiers.

Jehoshaphat reigned over Judah. He was thirty-five years old when he came 31 to the throne and he reigned for twenty-five years in Jerusalem. His mother’s name was Azubah, daughter of Shilhi. •He followed the example of his father Asa 32

33 undeviatingly, doing what is right in the eyes of Yahweh. •The high places, ^{17:6} however, were not abolished; the people had still not turned their hearts to the 34 God of their ancestors. •The rest of the history of Jehoshaphat, from first to last, is recorded in the Annals of Jehu son of Hanani which have been transcribed into the Book of the Kings of Israel.

35 After this, Jehoshaphat king of Judah allied himself with Ahaziah king of 36 Israel, who led him into evil ways. •He combined with him to build ships that 37 would sail to Tarshish; they built them at Ezion-geber. •Eliezer son of Dodavahu of Mareshah then made a prophecy against Jehoshaphat. 'Because you have allied yourself with Ahaziah,' he said 'Yahweh has broken your work.' The ships broke up and were never fit to sail for Tarshish.

1 21 Jehoshaphat slept with his ancestors and was buried in the Citadel of David; his son Jehoram succeeded him.

E. IMPIETY AND DISASTERS UNDER JEHORAM, AHAZIAH, ATHALIAH AND JOASH

The accession and crime of Jehoram

2 Jehoram had six brothers, sons of Jehoshaphat: Azariah, Jehiel, Zechariah, Azariahu, Michael and Shephatiah; these are all the sons of Jehoshaphat king
 3 of Israel.^a •Their father had made them many gifts of silver, gold and jewels, and of fortified towns in Judah, but he bequeathed the throne to Jehoram since
 4 he was the first-born. •Jehoram, having maintained his hold over his father's kingdom and secured his own position, put all his brothers to the sword and some officials of Israel too.

5 Jehoram was thirty-two years old when he came to the throne and he reigned ||2K8:17-19
 6 for eight years in Jerusalem. •He followed the example of the kings of Israel as the family of Ahab had done, having married one of Ahab's daughters;
 7 and he did what is displeasing to Yahweh. •Yahweh however did not intend to destroy the House of David, because of the covenant^b he had made with David, and was faithful to the promise he had made to leave a lamp for him 1K11:36+ and his sons for ever.

The punishment

8 In his time Edom threw off the domination of Judah and set up a king for ||2K8:20-22
 9 itself. •Jehoram crossed the frontier with his commanders and all his chariots. He rose during the night and broke through the Edomites encircling him and 10 his chariot commanders. •Thus Edom threw off the domination of Judah, and has remained free to the present day. Libnah threw off Jehoram's domination at the same time.

11 He had indeed deserted Yahweh, the God of his ancestors. •He also set up high places in the highlands of Judah and caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem
 12 to prostitute themselves, and Judah to go astray. •Then something written by the prophet Elijah^c came into his hands. It ran, 'This is the word of Yahweh, the God of David your ancestor. "Since you have not followed the example of 13 your father Jehoshaphat or of Asa king of Judah, •but the example of the kings of Israel, and have caused Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to prostitute themselves, just as the House of Ahab did, and since you have also murdered your brothers, your own family, better men than yourself, •Yahweh will strike you^d with a great calamity, your people, your descendants, your wives and all your property. •You yourself shall suffer dire^e diseases, and a disease of your bowels so severe that within two years^f it will make your bowels drop out.”

But the Chronicler speaks of a prophetic document, not of the prophet in person.

Am 1:6 Yahweh roused against Jehoram the hostility of the Philistines, and of the 14:8+ Arabs bordering on the Cushites. •They attacked Judah, invading it and carrying off all the property they found belonging to the king's household, including his sons and his wives; the only son left him was Ahaziah, the youngest of them. And after all this, Yahweh struck him down with an incurable disease of the bowels; •it lasted for more than one year, and when two years were over and his last hour had come, his bowels dropped out with disease and he died in great pain. The people did not light a fire for him as they had for his father.

16:14 He was thirty-two years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for eight years in Jerusalem. He passed away with no one to regret him, and he buried him in the Citadel of David, though not in the tombs of the kings.

Ahaziah and his policy

2K8:24-29

22 The population of Jerusalem made his youngest son Ahaziah king in succession to him, since the armed band that had broken into the camp with the Arabs had killed all the elder sons. That was why Ahaziah son of Jehoram became king of Judah. •Ahaziah was twenty^a years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Athaliah, daughter of Omri. •He too followed the example of Ahab's family, since his mother gave him wicked advice. •He did what is displeasing to Yahweh as Ahab's family had done, for these were his advisers after his father's death, to his undoing. •He also put their policy into practice and went with Jehoram son of Ahab, king of Israel, to fight against Hazael king of Aram at Ramoth-gilead. But the Aramaeans^b wounded Jehoram, •who returned to Jezreel to recover from the wounds that he had received at Ramoth, fighting against Hazael king of Aram. Ahaziah^c son of Jehoram, king of Judah, went down to Jezreel to visit Jehoram son of Ahab because he was ill. •Through this visit to Jehoram Yahweh brought ruin to Ahaziah. On his arrival he went out with Jehoram to meet Jehu son of Nimshi whom Yahweh had anointed to make an end of the House of Ahab. •While Jehu was busy executing justice on the House of Ahab, he came across the officials of Judah and the nephews of Ahaziah who were in the king's service; he killed them, •and then went in search of Ahaziah. The latter was captured while trying to hide in Samaria, and taken to Jehu who put him to death. But they gave him burial. 'This was a son of Jehoshaphat,' they said 'who sought Yahweh with all his heart.'

The crime of Athaliah

There was no one left in the House of Ahaziah strong enough to reign. •As soon as Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah learned that her son was dead, she promptly did away with^d all the royal stock of the House of Judah. •But Jehosheba, daughter of the king, secretly took away Joash, her brother's son, from among the sons of the king who were being murdered, and put him with his nurse in the sleeping quarters; in this way Jehosheba the daughter of King Joram and wife of Jehoiada the priest (a sister, too, of Ahaziah) hid him from Athaliah, and prevented her from killing him. •He stayed with them for six years, hidden in the Temple of God, while Athaliah governed the country.

The ministers of the Temple oppose Athaliah

23 In the seventh year Jehoiada took strong measures. He sent for the commanders of hundreds, Azariah son of Jeroham, Ishmael son of Jehohanan, Azariah son of Obed, Maaseiah son of Adaiah and Elishaphat son of Zichri,

2 and made a pact with them. •They went through Judah, gathering the Levites from all the towns of Judah, and the heads of the Israelite families.^a They came
3 to Jerusalem. •and this whole assembly made a pact with the king in the Temple of God. 'Here is the son of the king' Jehoiada told them. 'Let him reign, as 4 Yahweh has promised of the sons of David! •This is what you must do: one third of you,^b priests, Levites and keepers of the gate, must come in for the
5 sabbath, •one third must be at the royal palace, one third at the Gate of Foundation, and all the people will be in the court of the Temple of Yahweh. •Let no
6 one enter the Temple of Yahweh except the priests and the Levites on duty, since they are consecrated and may enter. The people must all observe the 7 injunctions of Yahweh. •The Levites must surround the king, each with his weapons in his hand; anyone who tries to enter the Temple is to be put to death. Wherever the king comes or goes, you must escort him.'

8 The Levites and all Judah carried out all the orders of Jehoiada the priest. Each brought his men, those coming off duty on the sabbath together with those mounting guard on the sabbath, for Jehoiada the priest had exempted none of 9 the orders.^c •Then Jehoiada the priest issued the commanders of hundreds with King David's spears and large and small shields, which were in the Temple
10 of God. •He drew all the people up, each man with his weapon in his hand, from the south corner to the north corner of the Temple, surrounding the altar
11 and the Temple, to form a circle round the king. •Then Jehoiada brought out the king's son, crowned him, and imposed the Law^d on him; and they proclaimed him king. Jehoiada and his sons^e then anointed him and shouted, 'Long live the king!'

12 Athaliah, on hearing the shouts of the people rushing to the king and 13 acclaiming him, made for the Temple of Yahweh where the people were. •When she saw the king standing there at the entrance beside the pillar, with the captains and trumpeters at the king's side, and all the country people rejoicing and sounding trumpets, and the cantors with their musical instruments leading the 14 hymns,^f Athaliah tore her garments and shouted, 'Treason, treason!' •Then Jehoiada the priest called out the military officers. 'Take her outside the precincts,' he ordered 'and put anyone to the sword who follows her.' For the priest had 15 said, 'You must not put her to death in the Temple of Yahweh'. •They seized her, and when she had reached the palace at the entry to the Gate of the Horses, they put her to death there.

The reforms by Jehoiada

||2K11:17-20

16 Jehoiada made a covenant between the king and all the people, by which 17 they undertook to be the people of Yahweh. •All the people then went to the temple of Baal and demolished it; they smashed his altars and his images and killed Mattan, priest of Baal, in front of the altars.

18 Jehoiada posted sentries to guard the Temple of Yahweh under the authority of the levitical priests. David had given the Temple of Yahweh to these as their

23 a. From 'Azariah son of Jeroham' to here is the Chronicler's own composition. It assumes an initial agreement with Israelite army officers, whereas 2 K implies foreign guards. Ezk 44:9 had forbidden foreigners access to the sanctuary. On the other hand, the Chronicler had to bear in mind the part that had to be played by the Levites in all the Temple liturgy, Nb 1-4, and 8:1 Ch 15:28: hence the great assembly of vv. 2-3 of which 2 K says nothing. The Chronicler sees the coup d'état more as a liturgical act than as a political conspiracy.

b. The Chronicler has adjusted the text of 2 K so that only the priests and Levites enter, while the guards stay at the gates or in the palace (where Athaliah was) and the people occupy the court as on solemn feasts.

c. The Chronicler turns the relief of the guard mentioned in 2 K into an observance of the Davidic regulations concerning the priestly groups, 1 Ch 24:19.

d. Lit. 'the Testimony'; but by the times of the Chronicler the word had come to mean 'covenant', i.e. the 'Law', and the writer is here thinking of Dt 17:18 which required the king to write out a copy of the Law.

They entered the royal palace through the middle arch of the Upper Gate and seated the king on the royal throne. •All the country people were delighted, and the city made no move. Athaliah was put to death.

2K12:1-17 Joash repairs the Temple

24 Joash was seven years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zibiah of Beersheba. Joash did what is pleasing to Yahweh throughout the lifetime of Jehoiada the priest. •Jehoiada found him two wives and he had sons and daughters. •Subsequently, Joash made up his mind to repair the Temple of Yahweh.

Calling the priests and the Levites together, he said, 'Go out to the towns of Judah,^a and collect enough money from all the Israelites to make possible annual repairs to the Temple of Yahweh. Do this quickly.' But the Levites were in no hurry, •so the king summoned Jehoiada their leader, and said, 'Why have you not insisted on the Levites collecting from Judah and Jerusalem what Moses the servant of Yahweh levied from the community of Israel^b for the Tent of the Testimony? •Athaliah and her sons, whom she perverted, not only damaged the Temple of God but even assigned the sacred revenues of the Temple of Yahweh to the Baals.' •The king ordered them to make a chest and to place it outside the gate of the Temple of Yahweh. •Proclamation was then made in Judah and in Jerusalem that what Moses the servant of God had levied from Israel in the wilderness should be brought to Yahweh. •All the officials and all the people came joyfully with their contribution, dropping it into the chest until all was paid.

When the chest was taken to the royal office of control, run by the Levites, these would check the amount of money in it; then the king's secretary would come with a representative of the chief priest; they would take up the chest, carry it away, and later return it to its place. They did this every day, and collected a large sum of money. •The king and Jehoiada handed it over to the master of works attached to the Temple of Yahweh. The hired men, masons and carpenters, set about restoring the Temple of Yahweh; craftsmen in iron and bronze also worked on the repairing of it. •The masters of works having once made a start, the repairs went ahead under their supervision; they rebuilt the Temple of God to its former state and strengthened the fabric. •When they had finished, they brought the balance of the money to the king and Jehoiada, and with this furnishings were made for the Temple of Yahweh, vessels for the liturgy and for the holocausts, incense boats and objects of gold and silver.

So, for as long as Jehoiada lived they offered perpetual holocaust in the Temple of Yahweh. •Then Jehoiada, growing old, had his fill of days and died. He died at the age of a hundred and thirty years, •and they buried him with the kings in the Citadel of David because he had served God and his Temple well in Israel.

Joash falls away and is punished

After the death of Jehoiada, the officials of Judah came to pay court to the king, and the king now turned to them for advice. •The Judeans abandoned the Temple of Yahweh, the God of their ancestors, for the worship of sacred poles and idols. Because of their guilt, God's anger fell on Judah and Jerusalem. He sent them prophets to bring them back to Yahweh, but when these gave their message, they would not listen. •The spirit of God took possession of

- Zechariah son of Jehoiada the priest. He stood up before the people and said, 'God says this, "Why do you transgress the commandments of Yahweh to 21 no good purpose? You have deserted Yahweh, now he deserts you." ' •They then plotted against him and by order of the king stoned him in the court 22 of the Temple of Yahweh. •King Joash, forgetful of the kindness that Jehoiada, the father of Zechariah, had shown him, killed Jehoiada's son who cried out as he died, 'Yahweh sees and he will avenge!'
- 23 When a year had gone by, the Aramaean army made war on Joash. They reached Judah and Jerusalem, and executed all the officials among the people, sending back to the king at Damascus all that they had plundered from them.
- 24 Though the Aramaean army had by no means come in force, Yahweh delivered into its power an army of great size for having deserted him, the God of their ancestors.
- 25 The Aramaeans treated Joash as he had deserved, •and when they retired they left him a very sick man; and his officers, plotting against him to avenge the death of the son^c of Jehoiada the priest, murdered him in his bed. So he died, and they buried him in the Citadel of David, though not in the tombs of 26 the kings. •These were the conspirators: Zabad son of Shimeath the Ammonite 27 woman, and Jehozabad son of Shimrith the Moabitess. •As regards his sons, the heavy tribute imposed on him, and the restoration of the Temple of God, this is all recorded in the Midrash on the Book of the Kings. His son Amaziah succeeded him.

F. THE HALF-HEARTED PIETY AND PARTIAL SUCCESS OF AMAZIAH, UZZIAH AND JOTHAM

The religious policy of Amaziah

- 1 25 Amaziah was twenty-five years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was 2 Jehoaddan of Jerusalem. •He did what is pleasing to Yahweh, though not
 3 wholeheartedly. •Once the kingdom was firmly under his control, he killed 4 those of his officers who had murdered the king his father. •But he did not put their sons to death, in obedience to what is written in the Law, in the book of Moses, where Yahweh has ordered, 'Fathers must not be put to death for sons, nor sons for fathers; each one must be put to death for his own sin'.
 5 Amaziah called the men of Judah together and organised them in families with commanders of thousands and of hundreds for all Judah and Benjamin.
 He took a census of those who were twenty years old and upwards, and found there were three hundred thousand of them, eligible and fit for military service, 6 with spear and shield to hand. •Next, he enrolled one hundred thousand valiant 7 champions from Israel as mercenaries, for a hundred talents of silver. •A man of God then came to him. 'O king,' he said 'the troops of Israel must not march 8 with you, for Yahweh is not with Israel, nor with anyone from Ephraim. •For if they come, no matter how brave your conduct in the fight, God will still bring you down before your enemies, for God's is the power to uphold or to 9 throw down.' •Amaziah answered the man of God, 'And what about the hundred talents I have given the Israelite contingent?' 'Yahweh can give you far more 10 than that' the man of God replied. •At this, Amaziah dismissed from his army the troops that had come to him from Ephraim and sent them home; these men were furious with Judah and went home in a great rage.

His infidelity after the Edomite campaign

||2K 14:7 Amaziah decided to lead out his troops and, having reached the Valley of Salt, defeated ten thousand of the sons of Seir. •The men of Judah took ten thousand captives alive and, taking them to the summit of the Rock, threw them off the top; they were all dashed to pieces. •Then the contingent which Amaziah had dismissed and not allowed to fight with him raided the towns of Judah, from Samaria as far as Beth-horon, beating a force of three thousand strong and capturing great quantities of plunder.

On returning from his defeat of the Edomites, Amaziah brought the gods of the sons of Seir with him; he set these up as gods for himself, bowing down before them and burning incense to them. •The anger of Yahweh blazed out against Amaziah; he sent him a prophet, who said, 'Why do you resort to this people's gods, to gods who could not save their own people from your hands?' He was still speaking when Amaziah interrupted him. 'Have we appointed you a royal counsellor? If you do not want to be hurt, be quiet!' The prophet paused; then he said, 'I know that God has determined to destroy you, since you have behaved like this and have refused to listen to my advice'.

After consulting his advisers, Amaziah king of Judah sent a message to Joash son of Jehoahaz son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, 'Come and make a trial of strength!' •Joash king of Israel sent back word to Amaziah king of Judah, 'The thistle of Lebanon sent a message to the cedar of Lebanon, saying, "Give my son your daughter in marriage"; but the wild animals of Lebanon trampled the thistle down as they passed. •"Look at me, the conqueror of Edom" you say, and now hold your head in the air; boast on, but stay at home. Why challenge disaster, to your own ruin and the ruin of Judah?'

But Amaziah would not listen, and this was God's doing: he intended to hand them over to their enemies for resorting to the gods of Edom. •And at Beth-shemesh, which belongs to Judah, they made their trial of strength, Joash and Amaziah king of Judah. •Judah was defeated by Israel, and everyone fled to his tent. •The king of Judah, Amaziah son of Joash, son of Ahaziah,^a was taken prisoner at Beth-shemesh by Joash king of Israel who led him off to Jerusalem, where Joash demolished the city wall from the Gate of Ephraim to the Gate of the Corner for a distance of four hundred cubits. •He took all the gold and silver, and all the furnishings to be found with Obed-edom in the Temple of God, the treasures of the royal palace, and hostages besides, and then returned to Samaria.

2K 14:17-20 The end of the reign of Amaziah

Amaziah son of Joash, king of Judah, lived for fifteen years after the death of Joash son of Jehoahaz, king of Israel.

The rest of the history of Amaziah, from first to last, is not all this recorded in the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel? •After the time when Amaziah rejected Yahweh, a plot was hatched against him in Jerusalem; he fled to Lachish; but he was followed to Lachish and was put to death there. •He was brought back by horse, and buried with his ancestors in the Citadel of David.^b

The beginning of the reign of Uzziah

||2K 14:21-22 26 All the people of Judah chose Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king in succession to his father Amaziah. •It was he who rebuilt Elath^a and recovered it for Judah, after the king was sleeping with his ancestors.

||2K 15:2-4 Uzziah was sixteen years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for fifty-two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Jecoliah, of Jerusalem. •He did what is pleasing to Yahweh, just as his father Amaziah had done;^b •he sought God devotedly throughout the lifetime of Zechariah,^c who had advanced so far in the fear of God. And for as long as he sought Yahweh, God gave him prosperity.

His military strength

- 6 He went out to fight the Philistines, demolished the walls of Gath, Jabneh and Ashdod, then rebuilt the towns in the area of Ashdod and in Philistine territory. •God helped him against the Philistines, the Arabs, the inhabitants of Gur-baal^a and the Meunites. •The Ammonites paid tribute to Uzziah. His fame spread as far as the approaches of Egypt, since he had become very powerful indeed. Am 1:8
- 9 Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem, at the Gate of the Corner, at the Gate of the Valley and at the Angle; and he fortified these.^c •He built towers in the wilderness too, and dug a great many cisterns, for he had large herds in the lowlands and on the tableland; and he had farmers and vine dressers in the hills and on the fertile lands; he was fond of agriculture. 20:1 + 1Ch 27:25-31
- 11 Uzziah had a professional army ready to go on campaign, divided into contingents manned as detailed by the scribe Jeiel and the registrar Maaseiah, and commanded by Hananiah, one of the king's officers. •The total number of heads of families of these valiant champions was two thousand six hundred.
- 13 Under their command was a trained army of three hundred and seven thousand five hundred fighting men, a powerful force to support the king against the enemy.
- 14 Uzziah provided them with shields, spears, helmets, coats of mail, bows and sling stones, for each campaign. •In Jerusalem he constructed engines, invented by experts, which were mounted on the towers and at the corners to fire arrows and great stones. His fame spread far and wide; he owed his strength to a help nothing short of miraculous.

Pride and its punishment

- 16 But, as his power increased, his heart grew proud, and this was his ruin: he broke faith with Yahweh his God.^f He entered the great hall of the Temple of Yahweh to burn incense on the altar of incense. •Azariah the priest followed King Uzziah in, with eighty brave priests of Yahweh, •to resist him. 'Uzziah,' they said 'it is not for you to burn incense to Yahweh, but for the priests, the sons of Aaron, consecrated for the purpose. Leave the sanctuary; you have broken faith; the glory from Yahweh God, is no longer yours.'^g •Uzziah, censer in hand for the burning of incense, flew into a rage. But while he was raging at the priests, leprosy^h broke out on his forehead in the presence of the priests, 20 in the Temple of Yahweh, there by the altar of incense. •Azariah the chief priest and all the other priests turned towards him and saw the leprosy on his forehead. They quickly hurried him out, and he himself was anxious to go, since Yahweh had struck him. Nb 12:10
- 21 King Uzziah was a leper till his dying day. He lived confined to his room, a leper, excluded from the Temple of Yahweh. Jotham, his son, was master of the palace, and ruled the people of the country. ||2 K 15:5-7
Nb 19:20

25 a. 'Ahaziah'; Hebr. 'Jehoahaz'.

b. 'David'; Hebr. 'Judah'.

26 a. The Chronicler, it seems, wishes to emphasise that this victory was not that of the father whose later life was wicked. Uzziah also began well but finished badly.

b. The sentence, taken from 2 K, is hardly reconcilable with 2 Ch 25.

c. Unknown personage, evidently not a prophet but one whose wisdom was rooted in true piety, lit. 'who understood in the fear of God' Greek; 'in seeing God' Hebr. He was to Uzziah what Jehoiada was to Joash.

d. Possibly this name, 'Dwelling of Baal', here indicates Samaria; certainly the list is like that of the enemies of Nehemiah, Ne 4:1.

e. Uzziah repairs the damage from the late war.

f. 2 K speaks of the punishment but not of the sin. This is the sin for which Nb 16 blames the laymen Dathan and Abiram: the king has usurped a right which the Chronicler (and Ezekiel before him) reserves to the priests, 1 Ch 23:13.

g. The glory of God that descended on the sanctuary, cf. Ex 40:34f, now fills the Temple, 2 Ch 7:2.

h. Miriam was punished in the same way for laying claim to the privileges of Moses, Nb 12:10. The leper was impure and was forbidden to enter the sanctuary, Lv 13:45.

The rest of the history of Uzziah, from first to last, has been written⁴ by the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz. •Then Uzziah slept with his ancestors and they buried him with his fathers in the burial ground of the kings,⁷ for they said, 'He is a leper'. His son Jotham succeeded him.

2K15:32-35 The reign of Jotham

27 Jotham was twenty-five years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Jerushah, daughter of Zadok. •He did what is pleasing to Yahweh, just as his father Uzziah had done. But he did not enter the sanctuary of Yahweh.^a As for the people, they were still corrupt.

It was he who built the Upper Gate of the Temple of Yahweh and carried out considerable work on the wall of the Ophel. •He built towns in the highlands of Judah, and fortified places and towers in the arable lands.

He fought against the king of the Ammonites.^b He defeated these, and that year the Ammonites had to give him a hundred talents of silver, ten thousand kors of wheat and ten thousand of barley. This was the amount that the Ammonites had to pay him, and the same for the second and third years. •Jotham became powerful because he kept an even course in the presence of Yahweh his God.

2K15:36-38 The rest of the history of Jotham, all his wars and his policy, are recorded in the Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah. •He was twenty-five years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem. •Then Jotham slept with his ancestors, and they buried him in the Citadel of David; his son Ahaz succeeded him.

V. THE GREAT REFORMS UNDER HEZEKIAH AND JOSIAH

A. THE SINS OF AHAZ, FATHER OF HEZEKIAH

2K16:2-4 Summary of the reign

28 Ahaz was twenty^a years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem. He did not do what is pleasing to Yahweh, as his ancestor David had done. •He followed the example of the kings of Israel, even having idols cast for the Baals; •he offered incense in the Valley of the Sons of Hinnom^b and caused his sons to pass through fire, copying the shameful practices of the nations which Yahweh had dispossessed for the sons of Israel. He offered sacrifices and incense on the high places, on the hills and under every spreading tree.

Lv18:21+

^{2 K 16}
^{Is 7-9} Yahweh his God delivered him into the power of the king of the Aramaeans who defeated him and took great numbers of his people captive, carrying them off to Damascus. He was also delivered into the power of the king of Israel, who inflicted a crushing defeat on him. •In a single day, Pekah son of Remaliah killed a hundred and twenty thousand in Judah, all stout fighting men; this was because they had deserted Yahweh, the God of their ancestors. •Zichri, an Ephraimite champion, killed Maaseiah, son of the king, Azrikam the controller of the palace, and Elkanah the king's second-in-command. •The Israelites took two hundred thousand of their brothers captive, with wives, sons, daughters; they also took quantities of booty, carrying everything off to Samaria.

The Israelites obey the prophet Oded

A prophet of Yahweh was there named Oded, who went out to meet the troops returning to Samaria and said, 'Yahweh, the God of your ancestors, was angry with Judah and so he delivered them into your power, but you have slaughtered with such fury as reaches to heaven. •And now you propose to reduce these children of Judah and Jerusalem to being your serving men and women! And are you not all the while the ones who are guilty before Yahweh your God? •Now listen to me: release the prisoners you have taken of your brothers, for the fierce anger of Yahweh hangs over you.'

Some of the Ephraimite chieftains then protested to those who were returning from the expedition: Azariah son of Jehohanan, Berechiah son of Meshillemoth, Jehizkiah son of Shallum and Amasa son of Hadlai. •'You must not bring the captives in here,' they said 'or we should be guilty before Yahweh. You are proposing to add to our sins and to our guilt, but our guilt is already heavy and the fierce anger of Yahweh is hanging over Israel.' •So in the presence of the officials and of the whole assembly the army gave up the captives and the booty. Men expressly nominated for the purpose saw to the relief of the prisoners. From the booty they clothed all those of them who were naked; they gave them clothing and sandals and provided them with food, drink and shelter. They mounted all those who were infirm on donkeys and took them back to their kinsmen at Jericho, the city of palm trees. Then they returned to Samaria.^d

The sins of Ahaz

It was then that King Ahaz sent asking the kings of Assyria to come to his assistance. ||2 K 16:7
Is 7-8

The Edomites once again invaded and defeated Judah, and carried off prisoners. •The Philistines encroached on the towns in the lowlands and in the Negeb of Judah. They took Beth-shemesh, Aijalon, Gederot, and Soco with its outlying villages, Timnah with its outlying villages, Gimzo with its outlying villages, and they settled in them. •For Yahweh humbled Judah on account of Ahaz king of Israel,^e since he neglected Judah and was unfaithful to Yahweh. ||2 K 16:6

Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria attacked and besieged him but could not overcome him.^f •Ahaz however had to take part of the goods in the Temple of Yahweh and in the palaces of the king and princes, to hand over to the king of Assyria, yet he received no help from him. •During the time he was under siege he made his faithlessness graver still, this King Ahaz, •by offering sacrifices to the gods of Damascus^g who had defeated him. 'Since the gods of the kings of Aram' he said 'have been of help to them, I will sacrifice to them in the hope that they may be of help to me.' But they proved his downfall and that of Israel. ||2 K 16:8

Ahaz collected a number of the furnishings of the Temple of God, and dismantled others;^h he closed the doors of the Temple of Yahweh and put up altars at every street corner in Jerusalem; •he set up high places in every town of Judah to offer incense to other gods, and so provoked the anger of Yahweh, the God of his ancestors. 29:3; 30:14
||2 K 16:17

The rest of his history, his whole policy, from first to last, is recorded in the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel. •Then Ahaz slept with his ancestors, and they buried him in the Citadel, in Jerusalem, though he was not taken into the tombs of the kings of Israel. His son Hezekiah succeeded him. ||2 K 16:19-20

i. Probably a lost midrash on Is 6:1. Uzziah is mentioned in Is only in the headings, Is 1:1; 7:1.

j. In the burial ground, not in the tomb itself.

27 a. This could be praise (contrast the conduct of Uzziah, 26:16f) but is more probably blame.

b. Possibly the Meunites are again meant, cf. 20:1; 26:7.

28 a. Some Greek MSS read 'twenty-five'.

b. Gehenna, valley to the S. of Jerusalem.

c. This narrative of the Syro-Ephraimite war is told from a standpoint very different from that of the other Judaeic sources, 2 K 16 and Is 7-9. The Chronicler seems to have used an Ephraimite source.

d. The Samaritan character rises above their worship and sacrifice. Note the broadmindedness of the Chronicler: the passage anticipates the parable of the Good Samaritan.

e. 'Israel'; Greek: 'Judah'.

f. It was actually Sennacherib, thirty years later, in the reign of Hezekiah. Tiglath-pileser's campaign and the tribute paid to him by Ahaz are regarded by the Chronicler as a divine punishment.

g. From the source, 2 K, the Chronicler selects the one fact that has religious significance: the servility of Ahaz to the victorious gods of the foreigners.

h. Lit. 'Ahaz collected the furnishings of the house of God, he broke up the furnishings of the Temple of God'.

B. REFORM UNDER HEZEKIAH

29 Hezekiah came to the throne when he was twenty-five years old and reigned ¹ for twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name was Abijah, daughter of Zechariah. •He did what is pleasing to Yahweh, just as his ancestor David ² had done.

The Temple is purified

^{28:24} It was he who, in the first month of the first year of his reign, threw open ³ the doors of the Temple of Yahweh and repaired them. •Then he brought the ⁴ priests and the Levites, assembled them in the eastern square, •and said to them. ⁵

‘Listen to me, Levites! Sanctify yourselves now and consecrate the Temple of Yahweh, the God of our ancestors, and eject what is impure from the sanctuary. Your ancestors have been unfaithful^a and done what is displeasing to Yahweh ⁶ our God. They have deserted him; they have turned their faces away from the place Yahweh has made his home, they have turned their backs on him. •They ⁷ have even closed the doors of the Vestibule, they have put out the lamps and offered no incense, no holocaust, to the God of Israel in the holy place. •So the ⁸ anger of Yahweh has fallen on Judah and Jerusalem; he has made them an object of terror, astonishment and derisive whistling, as you can see for yourselves. •This is why our ancestors have fallen by the sword, and our sons, ⁹ our daughters, our wives, been taken captive. •I am now determined to make a covenant with Yahweh, the God of Israel, so that his fierce anger may be turned away from us. •My sons, be negligent no longer, for Yahweh has chosen ¹¹ you to stand in his presence and serve him, to conduct his worship, and offer him incense.’

Jr 25:18

The Levites set to work:^b Mahath son of Amasai and Joel son of Azariah, ¹² of the sons of Kohath; of the Merarites: Kish son of Abdi and Azariah son of Jehallelel; of the Gershonites: Joah son of Zimmah and Eden son of Joah; of the sons of Elizaphan: Shimri and Jeuel; of the sons of Asaph: Zechariah ¹³ and Mattaniah; •of the sons of Heman: Jehiel and Shimei; of the sons of ¹⁴ Jeduthun: Shemaiah and Uzziel. •They gathered their brothers together, they ¹⁵ sanctified themselves, and in obedience to the king's order, in accordance with the words of Yahweh, they began purifying the Temple of Yahweh.

The priests^c went inside the Temple of Yahweh to purify it. They brought ¹⁶ out everything unclean they found in the sanctuary of Yahweh, out into the court of the Temple of Yahweh, and the Levites collected it and carried it outside, ¹⁷ into the wadi Kidron. •They began this consecration on the first day of the first month, and were able to enter the Vestibule of Yahweh on the eighth of the month; they then took eight days to consecrate the Temple of Yahweh, and finished on the sixteenth day of the first month.^d

The sacrifice of Atonement

They then waited on King Hezekiah and said, ‘We have purified the whole ¹⁸ Temple of Yahweh, the altar of holocaust with all its furnishings, and the tables on which the rows of bread are set with all its furnishings. •All the furnishings ¹⁹ King Ahaz cast aside during his sacrilegious reign we have put back and consecrated; they are now in front of the altar of Yahweh.’

King Hezekiah lost no time but called the officials of the city together and ²⁰ went up to the Temple of Yahweh. •They brought seven bulls, seven rams and seven lambs, with seven he-goats as a sacrifice for sin on behalf of the royal house, of the sanctuary, and of Judah. The king then told the priests, the sons of Aaron, to offer the holocaust on the altar of Yahweh. •They slaughtered the ²² bulls and the priests took up the blood and poured it on the altar. They then slaughtered the rams and poured their blood on the altar; and they slaughtered the lambs and poured their blood on the altar. •Then they brought the he-goats, the sacrifice for sin, before the king and the assembly who laid their hands on them. •The priests slaughtered them, and with their blood on the altar offered a sacrifice for sin, to perform the ritual of atonement for all Israel—since the king had ordered the holocaust and the sacrifice for sin on behalf of all Israel.^e

He then positioned the Levites in the Temple of Yahweh with cymbals, harps and lyres, in accordance with the ordinances of David, of Gad the king's seer and of Nathan the prophet; the order had in fact come from Yahweh through his prophets. •When the Levites had taken their places with David's musical instruments, and the priests with their trumpets, •Hezekiah ordered the holocaust to be offered on the altar. And as the holocaust began, the hymns of Yahweh began too, and the trumpets sounded, to the accompaniment of the instruments of David king of Israel. •The whole assembly worshipped, cantors singing, trumpets sounding, until the holocaust was over.

The offering at an end,^f the king and all there with him fell to their knees and worshipped. •Then King Hezekiah and the officials told the Levites to sing praise to Yahweh in the words of David and of Asaph the seer; they sang most fervently and then fell down and worshipped. •Hezekiah spoke again, 'Now you are dedicated to the service of Yahweh. Come forward,^g bring the sacrifices of communion and praise into the Temple of Yahweh.' The assembly brought sacrifices of communion and praise, and every kind of holocaust as votive offerings. •The number of victims for these holocausts was seventy bulls, a hundred rams and two hundred lambs, all as holocausts for Yahweh; •six hundred bulls and three thousand sheep were consecrated. •The priests were too few, however, and could not dismember all the holocausts, so the Levites helped them until the work was done and the priests were sanctified;^h for the Levites had been more conscientious about sanctifying themselves than the priests had. •There was, in addition, an abundant holocaust of fatty parts of the communion sacrifices, and numerous libations in association with the holocaust. And so the liturgy of Yahweh's Temple was restored. •Hezekiah and all the people rejoiced that God had disposed the people to act so promptly.

The Passover assembly

30 Hezekiah sent messengers to all Israel and Judah, and also wrote letters to Ephraim and Manasseh, bidding them come to the Temple of Yahweh in Jerusalem to celebrate a Passover in honour of Yahweh, the God of Israel. The king and his officials and all the assembly in Jerusalem had agreed to celebrate it in the second month, •being unable to celebrate it at the proper time,^a since the priests had not purified themselves in sufficient number, and the people had not assembled in Jerusalem. •This arrangement seemed fitting to the king and to all the assembly. •It was resolved to send a proclamation throughout Israel, from Dan to Beersheba, calling on the people to come to Jerusalem and celebrate a Passover in honour of Yahweh, the God of Israel, for few had observed the prescribed regulations. •Couriers set out with letters from the hands of the king

29 a. What follows is a public confession as in Dn 9:4-19; Ba 1:15-3:8. See also Lm 5 and Jr 3:22-25.

b. This list does not include Zadokite priests but only Levites, divided into the two groups of which Ch speaks: one group headed by Kohath, Merari, Gershon, and the other by Asaph, Heman and Jeduthun. This union of cantors with Levites, portending a new priesthood, is found also in 1 Ch 6:18-32.

c. On the part played by the priests in purification, cf. Lv 13-16.

d. Seven days for the purifications, Lv 14:8f; Nb 19:14, twice seven for Solomon's dedication of the Temple, 2 Ch 7:8-10.

e. This ritual is suggested by Lv 4 (cf. vv. 13-21)

but its ordered precision recalls Nb 29. (cf. vv. 7-11) The oblation of the fatty parts is omitted. The purification of the Temple in the Maccabean period was apparently modelled on this pattern, 1 M 4:42-59.

f. To the ceremonies just described (fashioned on the 'priestly' traditions) the Chronicler adds a second, levitical, ritual which he justifies by reference to David and his seers.

g. The king is addressing the people; the sacred meal is about to begin.

h. By mentioning this sacrificial activity of the Levites, the Chronicler apparently intends to vindicate their priestly character.

30 a. It was usually celebrated in the first month (Nisan).

and his officials for every part of Israel and Judah. They had orders from the king to say, 'Sons of Israel, come back to Yahweh, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, of Israel, and he will come back to those of you who are left and have escaped the grasp of the kings of Assyria. •Do not be like your fathers and brothers who were unfaithful to Yahweh, the God of their ancestors, and whom he handed over to destruction, as you can see. •Do not be stubborn now as your ancestors were. Yield to^b Yahweh, come to his sanctuary which he has consecrated for ever, serve Yahweh your God and he will turn his fierce anger from you. If you come back sincerely to Yahweh, your brothers and your sons will win favour with their conquerors and return to this land, for Yahweh your God is gracious and merciful. If you come back to him, he will not turn his face from you.'^c

The couriers went from town to town through the land of Ephraim and Manasseh, but the people laughed and scoffed at them, •though a few men from Asher and Manasseh and Zebulun were humble enough to come to Jerusalem. It was in Judah, rather, that the hand of God worked to inspire them with a united will to obey the order of the king and the officials as contained in the word of Yahweh. •A great number of people gathered in Jerusalem to celebrate the feast of Unleavened Bread in the second month.^d A very great assembly set to work removing the altars that were in Jerusalem and all the altars for burning incense, and throwing them into the wadi Kidron.

They slaughtered the passover on the fourteenth day of the second month. The priests and the Levites were ashamed; they sanctified themselves and so were able to bring holocausts into the Temple of Yahweh. •Then they took up their positions as ordained for them according to the Law of Moses, the man of God. The priests poured out the blood handed to them by the Levites, •since there were many people in the assembly who had not sanctified themselves; the Levites were given the task of slaughtering the Passover victims^e on behalf of those who lacked the requisite purity to consecrate their victims to Yahweh. In point of fact, most of the people, many from Ephraim, Manasseh, Issachar and Zebulun, had not purified themselves; they had eaten the Passover without observing the prescribed regulations. But Hezekiah interceded for them, saying, 'May Yahweh in his goodness cover up the fault of •anyone who sets his heart to seeking God, Yahweh the God of his ancestors, even if he lacks the purity requisite for holy things'. •Yahweh heard Hezekiah and left the people unharmed.^f

For seven days and with great rejoicing the Israelites in Jerusalem celebrated the feast of Unleavened Bread, while each day the Levites and the priests praised Yahweh with all their might. •The words of Hezekiah encouraged the Levites who all showed how versed they were in the things of Yahweh, and for seven days they ate their portion in the feast, offering communion sacrifices with praise to Yahweh,^g the God of their ancestors. •Then all the assembly agreed to continue the celebrations for a further seven days and made of them seven days of rejoicing, since Hezekiah king of Judah had provided a thousand bulls and seven thousand sheep for the assembly, and the officials another thousand bulls and ten thousand sheep. The priests sanctified themselves in great numbers, •and the whole assembly of Judah rejoiced, the priests too, and the Levites, and all who had come from Israel,^h the refugees who came from Israel and those who lived in Judah. •There was great rejoicing in Jerusalem, for since the time of Solomon son of David, king of Israel, nothing comparable had ever occurred in Jerusalem. •The levitical priests began to bless the people.ⁱ Their voices were heard and their prayer received in heaven, his holy dwelling place.

^{112K 18:4} 31 When all this was over, all the Israelites who were there set off for the towns of Judah to smash the pillars, cut down the sacred poles, wreck the high places and the altars, and so do away with them altogether throughout Judah, Benjamin, Ephraim, and Manasseh.^a Then all the Israelites returned to their towns, each man to his holding.

The reorganisation of the priests and Levites

- 2 Hezekiah re-established the priestly and levitical orders, each man in his proper order according to his duties, whether priest or Levite, whether for holocaust, communion sacrifice, liturgical service, thanksgiving or praise, within the gates of the camp of Yahweh.^b •The king set aside a portion of his own possessions for the morning and evening holocausts, and the holocausts of sabbath, New Moon, and solemn feast, as laid down in the Law of Yahweh. 1 Ch 9:19
3 He then told the people, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, to give the priests and the Levites their share so that they might devote themselves to the Law of Yahweh. 1 Ch 29:3
4 As soon as the order had been promulgated, the Israelites amassed the first fruits of corn, wine, oil, honey, and all agricultural produce, and brought in a generous Ezk 45:17
5 tithe of everything. •The Israelites and Judaeans living in the towns of Judah Nb 28-29
6 also brought in the tithe of cattle and sheep, and the tithe of the holy things Nb 18:8-24
7 dedicated to Yahweh their God,^c piling them up, heap after heap. •They began Dt 14:22+
8 making these heaps in the third month and finished them in the seventh.^d Ne 12:44-47
9 Hezekiah and his officials came to inspect the heaps and blessed Yahweh and 13:10-13 10 his people Israel. •Hezekiah questioned the priests and the Levites about the 11 'Since the contributions were first brought to the Temple of Yahweh,' he said, Lv 25:19-22
12 'we have had enough to eat and still have plenty left over, for Yahweh has blessed his people; this huge pile is what is left.'^e 13 Hezekiah then ordered them to have rooms prepared in the Temple of 14 Yahweh. They did this, •and then brought in the contributions, tithes and 15 consecrated things, to keep them in a safe place. Conaniah the Levite was officer 16 in charge of them, with Shimei his brother as his second. •Jehiel, Azariah, 17 Nahath, Asahel, Jerimoth, Jozabad, Eliel, Ismachiah, Mahath, and Benaiah were appointed overseers under the command of Conaniah and his brother Shimei, by order of King Hezekiah and of Azariah, ruler of the house of God. •Kore son of Imnah the Levite, keeper of the eastern gate, was made responsible for the voluntary offerings to God; he provided the portion set aside for Yahweh and the most holy offerings. •Under his command he had Eden, Miniamin, Jeshua, Shemaiah, Amariah and Shecaniah, who resided permanently in the towns of the priests to carry out the distributions to their kinsmen according to their orders whether more or less important.
16 Further to this,^f there was the organisation by related groups of all those men thirty years^g old and upwards who went to the Temple of Yahweh, by daily 17 rotation, to perform the ritual duties appropriate to their orders. •There was 1 Ch 23:3f

b. Lit. 'give glory to'.

c. This appeal, resembling the exhortations of Dt, reveals a concern for brother Israelites in exile since the fall of Samaria, v. 9. The Chronicler's contemporaries dreamed of the ingathering of all the Jews of the Dispersion.

d. The 'Priestly' texts distinguished the feasts of Unleavened Bread and of Passover, Lv 23:5-8; Nb 28:16-17. The Chronicler, like Dt 16:1-8, combines them.

e. The Chronicler thus augments the sacrificial powers of the Levites, cf. Nb 18:3. It was the duty of the offerer himself to slaughter the victim, of the priests to offer the blood, Lv 1:5.

f. The passage reacts against too rigid an interpretation of the laws of purity, cf. Mt 15:1-20p.

g. The 'communion sacrifice with praise' of Lv 7:12f. The Chronicler gives it new prominence by stressing the devotion of which the chant is the outward expression.

h. Lit. 'the whole assembly that came out of Israel'.

i. Another privilege accredited to the Levites, cf. Dt 10:8; 21:5. In Nb 6:22-27 only the priests give the blessing.

31 a. The Chronicler adopts, for Hezekiah, the procedure of Josiah's reform as described in Kings: successive purification of Temple, Judah, Israel.

b. The Chronicler here repeats the data of 1 Ch 23-25.

c. The tithe is now apparently extended to voluntary offerings.

d. Hence between Pentecost and Tabernacles which closes the harvest season.

e. Apparently Hezekiah fears that the people may have been coerced.

f. The Chronicler proceeds to describe the reform of Hezekiah as a re-establishment of priestly orders and cult on the Davidic pattern, 1 Ch 23-26.

g. 'thirty years' corr., cf. 1 Ch 23:3; 'three years' Hebr. These men are the priests and the Levites.

1Ch23:7-23 also the organisation of priests by families; as also that of Levites twenty years old and upwards, by duties and orders. •There was also the organisation of all their families, wives, sons and daughters for the whole assembly,^h since they had an obligation to sanctify themselves faithfully by means of the holy things. As regards the priests, the sons of Aaron, who lived in the pasture lands belonging to their towns, or in the towns themselves, there were men expressly named for the purpose of distributing portions to every male among the priests.ⁱ Each group was organised by the Levites.

Hezekiah enforced these arrangements throughout Judah. He did what is good and right and loyal before Yahweh his God. •All he undertook in the service of the Temple of God as concerning law or commandments, he performed while seeking God with all his heart, and he prospered.

Sennacherib's invasion

32 After these loyal acts of service came the invasion of Sennacherib king of Assyria. He invaded Judah, pitched camp before the fortified towns and gave orders for them to be taken by storm. •Realising that Sennacherib's advance was the preliminary to an attack on Jerusalem, Hezekiah •and his officers and champions decided to cut off the water supply from the springs situated outside the city. His military staff supported this plan •and numbers of people banded together to block all the springs and cut off the watercourse flowing through the fields. 'Why' they said 'should the kings of Assyria find plenty of water when they arrive?' •Hezekiah strengthened his defences: he had the broken parts of the wall repaired, built towers on it, constructed a second wall on the outer side, strengthened the Millo of the Citadel of David and made quantities of missiles and shields. •He then appointed generals to command the people, summoned them to him in the square by the city gate and spoke as follows to encourage them, •'Be strong and stand firm; be fearless, be undaunted when you face the king of Assyria and the whole horde he brings with him, since he that is with us is stronger than he that is with him. •He has only an arm of flesh, but we have Yahweh our God to help us and fight our battles.' The people took heart at the words of Hezekiah king of Judah.

The blasphemies of Sennacherib

Next, Sennacherib king of Assyria, who was then outside Lachish with all his forces, sent his servants to Jerusalem, to Hezekiah king of Judah, and to all the Judeans who were in Jerusalem. They said, •'Hear the message from Sennacherib king of Assyria, "What gives you the confidence to stay in Jerusalem under siege? •Is not Hezekiah deluding you? Is he not condemning you to die of hunger and thirst when he says: Yahweh our God will save us from the king of Assyria? •Is not Hezekiah the very man who has suppressed his high places and his altars, and given the order to Judah and to Jerusalem: Before one altar only are you to worship, and on that alone offer incense? Do you not know what I have done, I and my ancestors, to all the peoples of other countries? Have the gods of any single nation in those countries ever been able to save them from me? •Of all the gods of those nations devoted to the ban by my father, name a single one who has been able to save his people from me! So how could your god save you? •Do not let Hezekiah deceive you. Do not let him delude you like this. Do not believe him, for no god of any nation or kingdom has been able to save his people from me or from my ancestors'. No more will your god be able to save you from me." ' •The envoys were still maligning Yahweh God, and his servant Hezekiah, •when Sennacherib wrote a letter insulting Yahweh the God of Israel. This is what he said about him, 'Just as the gods of the nations in other countries have failed to save their peoples from me, so will the god of Hezekiah fail to save his people'. •They shouted this out in the language of Judah, to the people of Jerusalem on the ramparts, to confuse and frighten them, and so that they might capture the city; they spoke of the God of Jerusalem as of one of the gods of the peoples of the world, the work of men's hands.

The prayer of Hezekiah is heard

- 20 Faced with this situation, King Hezekiah and the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz 21 prayed and cried out to heaven. •Yahweh sent an angel who massacred all the mighty warriors, commanders and officers in the camp of the king of Assyria.
 Covered with disgrace he retired to his own country. He went into the temple of his god, and there some of his own children struck him down with the sword.
 22 So Yahweh saved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem from the power of Sennacherib king of Assyria and of everyone else, and he gave them peace^a 23 on every side. •Many people brought oblations to Yahweh in Jerusalem and gifts for Hezekiah king of Judah; after what had happened, he stood high in the esteem of all the nations. 14:6 ||2K20:12
 24 In those days, Hezekiah fell ill and was at the point of death. He prayed to 25 Yahweh, who heard him^b and granted him a sign. •But Hezekiah made no return for the benefit he received; his heart grew proud and the wrath came 26 on him and on Judah and Jerusalem. •Hezekiah did however humble the pride of his heart, and so did the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem; hence the wrath 27 of Yahweh did not come on them in the lifetime of Hezekiah. •Hezekiah enjoyed immense riches and honour. He built himself treasuries for gold, silver, precious 28 stones, spices, gems^c and every sort of valuable. •He had storehouses for his returns of corn, wine and oil, buildings for his different sorts of cattle, and 29 sheep-runs for his sheep, •and, further, acquired donkeys^d and enormous herds and flocks. God had indeed given him^e immense possessions. ||2K20:1f

Summary of the reign; its end

- 30 It was Hezekiah who stopped the upper outlet of the waters of Gihon and directed them down to the west side of the Citadel of David. Hezekiah succeeded 31 in all he undertook. •Even in the affair of the messengers from the authorities in Babylon, sent to him to inquire about the extraordinary thing that had taken place in the country, God only deserted him to test him, and to discover the secrets of his heart.^f ||2K20:20-21
 32 The rest of the history of Hezekiah, and his deeds of piety, are recorded in the Vision of the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz, in the Book of the Kings of Judah 33 and Israel. •Then Hezekiah slept with his ancestors, and they buried him on the slope going up to the tombs of the sons of David. At his death, all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem did him honour. His son Manasseh succeeded him.

C. THE SINS OF MANASSEH AND OF AMON

Manasseh undoes the work of Hezekiah

- 1 33 Manasseh was twelve years old when he came to the throne and he reigned 2 for fifty-five years in Jerusalem. •He did what is displeasing to Yahweh, copying the shameful practices of the nations whom Yahweh had dispossessed 3 for the sons of Israel. •He rebuilt the high places that his father Hezekiah^h had demolished, he set up altars to the Baals and made sacred poles, he worshipped

h. The assembly, qahal, always means priests and laity together. At the great Passover celebrated by Josiah, for which the reform of Hezekiah paves the way, the populace, divided in classes, consumes the sacred offerings, 35:12f. In the Chronicler's mind the families are sanctified by consuming what is most sacred, 30:24.

the whole array of heaven and served it. •He built altars in the Temple of Yahweh, 4 the Temple of which Yahweh had said, 'In Jerusalem my name shall be for ever'.

He built altars to the whole array of heaven in the two courts of the Temple 5 of Yahweh. •He caused his sons to pass through the fire in the Valley of Ben- 6 hinnom. He practised soothsaying, magic and witchcraft, and introduced necro-mancers and wizards. He did very many more things displeasing to Yahweh, thus 7 provoking his anger. •He placed the image of the idol he had made in the 7 Temple of which God had said to David and to his son Solomon, 'In this Temple and in Jerusalem, the city I chose out of all the tribes of Israel, I will give my 8 name a home for ever. •I will no longer turn Israel's footsteps away from the 8 land I assigned to their fathers,^a provided they observe all I have ordered them in accordance with the whole Law, the statutes and the ordinances, given 9 through Moses.' •Manasseh led Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem astray, 9 so that they did more evil than those nations Yahweh had destroyed before the sons of Israel. •Yahweh spoke to Manasseh and his people, but they paid no attention. 10

The conversion of Manasseh^b

Jb 36:7 Then Yahweh sent the generals of the king of Assyria against them, who 11
Ezk 19:9 captured Manasseh with hooks, put him in chains and led him away to Babylon.^c
In his distress he sought to appease Yahweh his God, humbling himself deeply 12 before the God of his ancestors; •he prayed to him, and God relented at his prayer, 13 hearing his plea and bringing him back to Jerusalem and his kingdom. Manasseh realised then that Yahweh is God. •After this he rebuilt the outer wall of the 14 Citadel of David, west of Gihon in the wadi, as far as the Fish Gate; it encircled the Ophel, and he increased its height very considerably. He stationed military governors in all the fortified towns of Judah.

Next he removed the alien gods and the idol from the Temple of Yahweh, 15 14:2 and all the altars he had built on the mountain of the Temple of Yahweh and in Jerusalem, and threw them out of the city.^d •He rebuilt the altar of Yahweh 16 and offered sacrifices of communion and of praise on it, and ordered Judah to offer worship to Yahweh the God of Israel; •however, the people continued to 17 sacrifice on the high places, although only to Yahweh their God.

||2K21:17-18 The rest of the history of Manasseh, his prayer to his God,^e and the words 18 of the seers who spoke to him in the name of Yahweh the God of Israel, can be found in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. •His prayer and how God relented 19 at his prayer, all his sins, his unfaithfulness, the sites where he built high places and set up sacred poles and idols before he humbled himself, are recorded in the Annals of Hozai.^f •Then Manasseh slept with his ancestors, and they buried him 20 in his palace. His son Amon succeeded him.

The obduracy of Amon^g

||2K21:19-26 Amon was twenty-two years old when he came to the throne and he reigned 21 for two years in Jerusalem. •He did what is displeasing to Yahweh, as Manasseh 22 his father had done. Amon offered sacrifice and worship to all the idols Manasseh his father had made. •He did not humble himself before Yahweh like Manasseh 23 his father; it was this very Amon who made the guilt of Judah so grave.^h •His 24 officers plotted against him and killed him in his palace. •But the country people 25 struck down all those who had plotted against King Amon and proclaimed his son Josiah as his successor.

D. REFORM UNDER JOSIAH

||2K22:1-2 Summary of the reign

34 Josiah was eight years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for 1 thirty-one years in Jerusalem. •He did what is pleasing to Yahweh, and 2 followed the example of his ancestor David, not deviating from it to right or left.

The first reforms^a

- 3 In the eighth year of his reign, when he was still a youth, he began to seek the God of his ancestor David. In the twelfth year he began to purge Judah and
 4 Jerusalem of high places, sacred poles and carved or cast idols. •He looked on as the altars of the Baals were demolished; he tore down the altars of incense standing on them, he smashed the sacred poles and the carved and cast idols; he reduced them to dust, scattering it over the graves of those who had offered
 5 them sacrifices. •He burned the bones of their priests on their altars, and so
 6 purified Judah and Jerusalem; •he did the same in the towns of Manasseh, Ephraim, Simeon, and even Naphtali, and in the ravaged districts round them.
 7 He demolished the altars and sacred poles, smashed the idols and ground them to powder, and tore down all the altars of incense throughout the land of Israel. Then he returned to Jerusalem.

14:1-4;
31:1

Work on the Temple

||2K22:3-7

- 8 In the eighteenth year of his reign, with the object of purifying land and Temple, he sent Shaphan son of Azaliah, Maaseiah governor of the city and 9 the herald Joah son of Joahaz, to repair the Temple of Yahweh his God. •These went to the high priest Hilkiah and handed over the money that had been brought to the Temple of God and that the Levites, the guardians of the threshold, had collected; the money had come from Manasseh, Ephraim and all the rest of 10 Israel, and from all the Judaeans and Benjaminites who lived in Jerusalem.^b •They handed it over to the masters of works attached to the Temple of Yahweh, and 11 these used it for the repair and restoration of the Temple. •They gave it to the carpenters and builders for buying dressed stone, and wood for the coupling and the rafters of the buildings which the kings of Judah had allowed to fall into ruin.
 12 •The men were conscientious in doing their work; to supervise them they had Jahath and Obadiah, Levites of the sons of Merari; Zechariah and Meshullam of the sons of Kohath, who were masters of works; Levites who were all skilled 13 liturgical musicians; •others who were in charge of the carriers; others who gave instructions to the masters of works of the various undertakings; and lastly a number of Levites who were scribes, clerks and gatekeepers.

24:8f

The Book of the Law discovered

||2K22:8-13

- 14 When they took out the money that had been brought to the Temple of Yahweh, Hilkiah the high priest found the book of the Law given through 15 Moses. •At once Hilkiah told Shaphan the secretary, 'I have found the Book of the Law in the Temple of Yahweh'. And Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan.
 16 Shaphan took the book to the king, and reported to him: 'Your servants' he 33 a. 'their fathers' 2 K; 'your fathers' Hebr.

b. This narrative is peculiar to 2 Ch.

c. A cylinder of Esarhaddon (680-669) names Manasseh of Judah as one of his vassals. Assurbanipal, (668-633) too, lists him as a tributary king. What the Chronicler says here of Manasseh recalls what Ezk 19:9 says of Jehoiachin, another wicked king, 2 K 24:15.

d. The Chronicler describes Manasseh's reform after the pattern of those of Asa, Hezekiah and Josiah.

e. There is an apocryphal work of the Psalm type called 'The Prayer of Manasseh' probably derived from this passage.

f. Unknown prophet; the name means 'seer'.

g. To Amon the Chronicler applies the condemnation of Manasseh in 2 K 21:12. Amon's reign was as short as Manasseh's was long; long life is considered a reward, Pr 4:10; Ps 34:12, etc.

h. 'of Judah' is not in the text. Possibly the Chronicler is thinking primarily of the dynasty.

34 a. Kings spoke only of reforms in the 18th year of the reign, 2 K 22:3, but the Chronicler precedes the discovery of the Law by a reform which he describes in the terms of 2 K 23. For him the great Passover does not initiate the reform but consecrates it.

b. 'who lived in Jerusalem' corr.; 'they returned to Jerusalem' Hebr. The Chronicler makes it clear that the Israelites, through their offerings, had a share in the restoration of the Temple. He always emphasises the unity of the chosen people, cf. Ezk 37:15f.

c. Paragraph peculiar to the Chronicler who ascribes the conduct of the operation to the Levites, especially to the cantors, said 'are carrying out the commissions you gave them: •they have melted down 17 the silver which was in the Temple of Yahweh and have handed it over to the overseers and masters of works,' •after which Shaphan the secretary informed 18 the king, 'Hilkiah the priest has given me a book'; and Shaphan read from it^d in the king's presence.

On hearing the contents of the Law, the king tore his garments, •and gave 19 the following order to Hilkiah, Ahikam son of Shaphan, Abdon son of Micah, 20 Shaphan the secretary and Asaiah the king's minister, •'Go and consult Yahweh, 21 on behalf of me and those left in Israel and Judah, about the contents of the book that has been found. Great indeed must be the anger of Yahweh pouring down on us because our ancestors did not observe the word of Yahweh by practising everything written in this book.'

2 K 22:14-20 Huldah the prophetess is consulted

Hilkiah and the king's men went to Huldah the prophetess, wife of Shallum 22 son of Tokhath, son of Hasrah, the keeper of the wardrobe; she lived in Jerusalem in the new town. They spoke to her about this, •and she replied, 'Yahweh, 23 the God of Israel says this, "To the man who sent you to me say this: Yahweh says this: I am bringing disaster on this place and those who live in it, 24 carrying out all the curses written in the book that has been read in the presence of the king of Judah, •because they have deserted me and sacrificed to other gods, 25 to provoke my anger by everything they did. My anger blazes out against this place; it will not be extinguished. •And you will say to the king of Judah who 26 sent you to consult Yahweh, Yahweh, the God of Israel says this: The words you have heard . . . •But since your heart has been touched and you have humbled 27 yourself before God on hearing what he has threatened against this place and those who live in it, since you have humbled yourself before me and torn your garments and wept before me, I for my part have heard—it is Yahweh who speaks. •I will 28 gather you to your ancestors, you shall be gathered into your grave in peace; your eyes will not see all the disasters that I mean to bring on this place and on those who live in it." ' They took this answer to the king.

2K23:1-3 The covenant renewed

The king then had all the elders of Judah and of Jerusalem summoned, •and 29 the king went up to the Temple of Yahweh, with all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, priests, Levites and all the people, of high or low degree. In their hearing he read out everything that was said in the book of the covenant found in the Temple of Yahweh. •The king stood beside the pillar,^e 31 and in the presence of Yahweh he made a covenant to follow Yahweh and to enforce the terms of the covenant as written in that book with all his heart and soul. •He allotted a station^f to everyone there in Jerusalem or in Benjamin; and 32 the inhabitants of Jerusalem complied with the covenant of God, the God of their ancestors. •Josiah removed all the abominations throughout the territories 33 belonging to the sons of Israel. His whole life long he made sure that every member of Israel served their God. They did not fail to follow Yahweh, the God of their ancestors.^g

The preparation for the Passover

2K23:21 35 Josiah then celebrated a Passover in honour of Yahweh in Jerusalem and 1 they slaughtered the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month.

He re-established the priests in their functions and made it possible for them 2 to discharge the duties of the Temple of Yahweh.^a •Then he said to the Levites, 3 whose understanding^b was at the disposal of all Israel and who were consecrated to Yahweh, 'Place the holy ark in the Temple built by Solomon son of David, 5:4 king of Israel. It is no longer a burden for your shoulders. Now serve Yahweh 1Ch15:5 your God and Israel his people. •Take your places by families according to your 4

orders, in compliance with the written decree of David king of Israel and his son Solomon. •Stand in the sanctuary at the disposal of the family groupings, at the disposal of your brothers the laity; the Levites are to have a portion in the family. •Slaughter the passover, sanctify yourselves, and be at the disposal of your brothers in acting in accordance with the word of Yahweh which was spoken through Moses.' 1Ch24:26

The celebration of the Passover

Josiah then provided^e for the laity lambs and kids from the flocks to the number of thirty thousand, all as Passover victims for all who were present, and three thousand bulls as well; all these animals came from the king's possessions.^d His officials, for their part, made provision for the voluntary offerings on behalf of the people, the priests and the Levites. The senior officials gave the priests of the Temple of God, Hilkiah, Zechariah and Jehiel, two thousand six hundred lambs and kids and three hundred bulls as Passover victims. •The heads of the Levites, Conaniah, Shemaiah and his brother Nathanel, Hashabiah, Jeiel and Jozabad, provided five thousand lambs and kids and five hundred bulls as Passover victims for the Levites. •The order of the service was arranged, the priests at their places and the Levites in their orders, in compliance with the king's order. •They slaughtered the passover, and the priests sprinkled the blood as they received it from the Levites, and the Levites dismembered the victims.^e •They put the holocaust on one side to give it to the family groupings among the laity as each made its offering to Yahweh,^f as is written in the Book of Moses; they did the same with the bulls. •They roasted the passover, as ordained, and the sacred foods^g in pots, dishes, pans, carrying them speedily to the laity. •Afterwards they prepared the passover for themselves and for the priests—the priests, the sons of Aaron, having been busy till nightfall offering the holocaust and the fatty parts; that was why the Levites prepared the passover for themselves and for the priests, the sons of Aaron. •The cantors, the sons of Asaph, were at their places, in accordance with the ordinances of David; neither Asaph, Heman, Jeduthun the king's seer, nor the keepers of each gate, had to leave their duties, since their brothers the Levites made all the preparations for them. So the whole liturgical service of Yahweh was arranged that day to celebrate the Passover and to offer holocausts on the altar of Yahweh, in accordance with the ordinances of King Josiah. •And so it was that the Israelites who were present celebrated the Passover and, for seven days, the feast of Unleavened Bread. No Passover like this one had ever been celebrated in Israel since the days of the prophet Samuel; no king of Israel had ever celebrated a Passover like the one celebrated by Josiah^h with the priests, the Levites, all of Judah and of Israel who were present, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. This Passover was celebrated in the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah.ⁱ ||2K23:23,

d. 2 K 22:10 has 'read it', but the Chronicler takes it to be the Pentateuch—too long for a single reading.

e. 'beside the pillar' (cf. 23:13; 2 K 11:14); Hebr. 'in his place'.

f. The Chronicler regards the covenant as already the charter of a well-ordered liturgical community.

g. The Chronicler briefly sums up the data of 2 K 23:4f which he has reproduced at the beginning of his account, 2 Ch 34:3f.

35 a. As in the case of Hezekiah the ceremony is preceded by the re-establishment of the clergy, cf. 31:2f, on Davidic lines, 1 Ch 24. Here again the Chronicler displays his particular interest in the Levites.

b. 'understanding' in the sense of the wisdom literature: a penetration of divine things.

c. Reference to the contributions of Nb 18:11,26, reserved to the priests. Here the contribution is made for the Levites and layfolk too, v. 8.

d. On this obligation on the king's part, cf. Ezk 45:17; 1 Ch 29:2f (David); 2 Ch 30:24 (Hezekiah).

e. The duty of the layman, according to Lv 1:6.

f. The practice mentioned in Lv 3:5 with regard to communion sacrifices is here, apparently, extended to the Passover, namely the burning of the fat as a holocaust.

g. Not the bitter herbs and unleavened loaves but the communion sacrifice provided for in Dt 12:6-7. The Chronicler perhaps wishes to associate this royal Passover with the messianic banquet of Is 25:6, cf. Mt 22:1-14.

h. Cf. also 30:24; the Chronicler emphasises that these two royal Passovers are an innovation and a departure from the pre-Davidic practice.

i. The Greek here inserts the eulogy on Josiah from 2 K 23:24-27.

After everything had been done by Josiah to set the Temple in order, Neco king of Egypt came up to fight at Carchemish on the Euphrates. When Josiah marched out to intercept him, •Neco sent him messengers to say, 'What quarrel is there between me and you, king of Judah? I have not come today to attack you; my quarrel is with another dynasty, and God has told me to hurry. Do not oppose the God who is with me any more, or else he may destroy you.' •But Josiah continued to challenge him; he was in fact determined to fight him, and would not listen to the words of Neco from God's own mouth. He gave battle in the plain of Megiddo; •the bowmen fired on King Josiah, and the king said to his followers, 'Take me away; I am badly wounded'. •His servants lifted him out of his own chariot, transferred him to another one and took him back to Jerusalem, where he died. He was buried in the tombs of his ancestors. All Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah. •Jeremiah composed a lament for Josiah which all the singing men and singing women still recite today when they lament for Josiah; this has become a custom in Israel; the dirges are recorded in the Lamentations.^k

The rest of the history of Josiah, his deeds of piety conforming to everything written in the Law of Yahweh, •his history from first to last, are recorded in the Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah.

E. ISRAEL IN THE CLOSING YEARS OF THE MONARCHY^a

Jehoahaz

The country people took Jehoahaz son of Josiah and made him king in Jerusalem in succession to his father. •Jehoahaz was twenty-three years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for three months in Jerusalem.^b The king of Egypt carried him off from Jerusalem and imposed a levy of a hundred talents of silver and one talent of gold on the country. •The king of Egypt then made Eliakim, brother of Jehoahaz, king of Judah and Jerusalem, and changed his name to Jehoiakim. Neco took his brother Jehoahaz and carried him off to Egypt.

Jehoiakim

Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for eleven years in Jerusalem. He did what is displeasing to Yahweh his God. Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon attacked him, loaded him with chains and carried him off to Babylon.^c •To Babylon Nebuchadnezzar also carried off part of the furnishings of the Temple of Yahweh and put them in his palace at Babylon. •The rest of the history of Jehoiakim, the shameful things he did and those discovered to his discredit, these are recorded in the Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah. His son Jehoiachin succeeded him.

Jehoiachin

Jehoiachin was eight^d years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for three months and ten days in Jerusalem. He did what is displeasing to Yahweh. At the turn of the year, King Nebuchadnezzar sent for him and had him taken to Babylon, with the precious furnishings of the Temple of Yahweh, and made Zedekiah his brother^e king of Judah and Jerusalem in his place.

Zedekiah

Zedekiah was twenty-one years old when he came to the throne and he reigned for eleven years in Jerusalem. •He did what is displeasing to Yahweh his God. He did not listen humbly to the prophet Jeremiah, accredited by Yahweh himself. He also rebelled against King Nebuchadnezzar to whom he had sworn allegiance by God. He became stubborn, and obstinately refused to return to Yahweh the God of Israel.

The nation as a whole^f

- 14 Furthermore, all the heads of the priesthood, and the people too, added infidelity to infidelity, copying all the shameful practices of the nations and defiling the Temple that Yahweh had consecrated for himself in Jerusalem.
- 15 Yahweh, the God of their ancestors, tirelessly sent them messenger after messenger, <sup>Jr 7:25
Heb 1:1</sup> since he wished to spare his people and his house. •But they ridiculed the messengers of God, they despised his words, they laughed at his prophets, until at last the wrath of Yahweh rose so high against his people that there was no further remedy. ^{Mt23:34-36p}

The end

- 17 He summoned against them the king of the Chaldeans who put their young warriors to the sword within their sanctuary; he spared neither youth nor virgin, <sup>Lm1:15; 5:11-14</sup>
- 18 neither old man nor aged cripple; God handed them all over to him. •All the furnishings of the Temple of God, large and small, the treasures of the Temple of Yahweh, the treasures of the king and his officials, he carried everything off ^{||2K25:14f}
- 19 to Babylon. •They burned down the Temple of God, demolished the walls of Jerusalem, set fire to all its palaces, and destroyed everything of value in it. <sup>||2K25:9f
Lm 2:6</sup>
- 20 The survivors were deported by Nebuchadnezzar to Babylon; they were to
- 21 serve him and his sons until the kingdom of Persia came to power. •This is how the word of Yahweh was fulfilled that he spoke through Jeremiah, 'Until this land has enjoyed its sabbath rest, until seventy years have gone by, it will keep sabbath throughout the days of its desolation'.^g

Looking to the future^h

- 22 And in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, to fulfil the word of Yahweh that was spoken through Jeremiah, Yahweh roused the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia to issue a proclamation and to have it publicly displayed throughout his
- 23 kingdom: •Thus speaks Cyrus king of Persia, "Yahweh, the God of heaven, has given me all the kingdoms of the earth; he has ordered me to build him a Temple in Jerusalem, in Judah. Whoever there is among you of all his people, may his God be with him! Let him go up."^{||Ezr1:1-3}

j. 'continued'; Hebr.: 'disguised himself', cf. 1 K 22:30.

k. The Chronicler seems to have Jr 22:10,15,18 in mind. He may have assumed allusions to Josiah in Lm 2:1,2,3, etc. Zc 12:11-14 seems to refer to a lament for Josiah.

36 a. Summary of the events recorded in 2 K; it introduces the story of the great reform under Ezra and Nehemiah, just as the reign of Ahaz introduced the reform of Hezekiah and the reigns of Manasseh and Amon the reform of Josiah.

b. The Greek adds 2 K 23:31-33.

c. This captivity and the spoliation are not reported elsewhere. It would appear that a later age transferred to the wicked Jehoiakim some of his son Jehoiachin's misfortunes. Cf. Dn 1:1-2.

d. Many MSS and versions correct to 'eighteen', cf. 2 K 24:8.

e. Actually his uncle, 2 K 24:17. But 1 Ch 3:16 mentions a second Zedekiah.

f. The Chronicler is apparently summarising the opening chapters of Jr and Ezk, cf. Ezk 8; Jr 7.

g. Only the last few words of this verse recall Jr, Jr 25:11 and 29:10. What precedes is found in the maledictions of Lv 26:34f. In the Chronicler's day sabbath observance was one of the basic principles of Judaism.

h. The two concluding verses also form the beginning of Ezr but their placing affects their tone: what is a summons to great labours in Ezr becomes here a triumphant cry that the Temple stands again, a guarantee that David's work will never fail.

I. THE RETURN FROM EXILE AND THE REBUILDING OF THE TEMPLE

The return of the exiles

||2 Ch 36: 22-23
Jr 25: 11-12;
29:10
Zc 1:12
Is 45:1
1 Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia,^a to fulfil the word of 1 Yahweh that was spoken through Jeremiah,^b Yahweh roused the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia to issue a proclamation and to have it publicly displayed throughout his kingdom: •Thus speaks Cyrus king of Persia, “Yahweh, the God of heaven, has given me all the kingdoms of the earth; he has ordered me to build him a Temple in Jerusalem, in Judah.^c •Whoever there is among you of all his people,^d may his God be with him! Let him go up to Jerusalem in Judah to build the Temple of Yahweh, the God of Israel—he is the God who is in Jerusalem. •And let each survivor,^e wherever he lives, be helped by the people of that place with silver and gold, with goods and cattle, as well as voluntary offerings for the Temple of God which is in Jerusalem.”^f

Ex 3:22;
11:2;12:35
Then the heads of families of Judah and of Benjamin, the priests and the Levites, in fact all whose spirit had been roused by God, prepared to go and rebuild the Temple of Yahweh in Jerusalem; •and all their neighbours gave them every assistance with silver, gold, goods, cattle, quantities of costly gifts^g and with voluntary offerings of every kind.

King Cyrus took the vessels of the Temple of Yahweh which Nebuchadnezzar had carried away from Jerusalem and dedicated to the temple of his god. •Cyrus, king of Persia, handed them over to Mithredath, the treasurer, who counted them out to Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.^h •The inventory was as follows:
thirty golden bowls for offerings; one thousand and twenty-nine silver bowls for offerings; •thirty golden bowls; four hundred and ten silver bowls; one thousand other vessels.ⁱ •In all, five thousand four hundred vessels of gold and silver. Sheshbazzar took all these with him when the exiles travelled back from Babylon to Jerusalem.

||Ne7:6-72 The list of the returning exiles^a

2 These were the people of the province who returned from captivity and exile.
After being deported to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, they returned to Jerusalem and to Judah, each to his own town. •They arrived with 1 a. The conquest of Babylon by Cyrus dates from the autumn of 539; the first year of his reign (over the Babylonian empire) begins in Nisan (March-April) 538.

b. The 'seventy' years of captivity foretold by Jeremiah is a round number, though it could be understood literally by making the subjection of Judah begin with the reign of Jehoiakim (609), cf. 2 K 24:1. The part played by Cyrus is declared in Is 44:28; 45:1f.

c. The Persian kings were as a whole extremely sympathetic towards the religions of the subjected peoples; they reinstated and actively supported them while keeping a measure of control. Their attitude towards the Jewish religion was no exception. It is possible that Judaism further benefited because of the Persians' special devotion to 'the gods of heaven'. Yahweh, who in the official documents is always referred to as 'the God of heaven', may have been thought of as the supreme god acknowledged by the Persian kings.

d. The expression apparently includes the exiles from the N. Kingdom. But cf. v. 5.

e. Technical term for the faithful nucleus of Israel that had taken shape during the Exile, cf. Is 51:7; 49:13 and Is 4:3+.

f. This edict appears in the form of a proclamation, in Hebr., by public heralds to the exiled Jews and no doubt drawn up by Jews employed in the Persian chancellery. 6:3-5, on the other hand, is a memorandum for the use of Persian officials.

g. Text corr. following 1 Esd 2:9 (The Greek, uncanonical work called 1 Esd here, is in part a compilation from the books of the Chronicler and sometimes provides a useful check on the text of Ezr and Ne.)

h. Leader of the first party of immigrants, see Introduction.

i. Text corr.

2 a. This list, placed here by the author because it is necessary for the narrative that follows, is taken from the Memoirs of Nehemiah, where it is used as a basis for the repopulation of Jerusalem in about 445. Even if the list includes successive parties of immigrants, it still seems that a considerable number returned with Zerubbabel, who heads the list. The text has been corrected with the help of Ne 7:6-72, the Greek version and 1 Esd 5:4-45; these contain variants of the names and figures.

b. Twelve in all; the number of the tribes of Israel.

c. The layfolk are listed by clan for the upper classes, by place of origin for the lower.

d. Not reckoned among the Levites, unlike 3:10. One group only is mentioned, unlike 1 Ch 6:16f.

e. The origin of the Nethinim ('given ones') is the literal meaning of this Hebr. word and of the corresponding Greek) is described in Jos 9:27. The 'sons of Solomon's slaves' (v. 55 and Ne 11:3) are descendants of prisoners of war or of foreigners subject to forced labour. These two groups did the menial work of the Temple (woodcutters, water-carriers). Cf. Ezk 44:7-9. They resemble the 'oblates' of the medieval monasteries.

sons of Hattil, sons of Pochereth-haz-zebaim, sons of Ami. •The total of the 58 oblates and the sons of Solomon's slaves: three hundred and ninety-two.

The following, who came from Tel-melah, Tel-harsha, Cherub, Addan and 59
Immer, could not prove that their families and ancestry were of Israelite origin:
sons of Delaiah, sons of Tobiah, sons of Nekoda: six hundred and fifty-two. 60
And among the priests: sons of Habaiah, sons of Hakkoz, sons of Barzillai, who 61 had married one of the daughters of Barzillai, the Gileadite, whose name he adopted. •These people searched in their ancestral registers but could not be 62 located in them, so they were excluded from the priesthood^f as unclean •and His 63 Excellency^g forbade them to eat the sacred foods^h until a priest could be found for the Urim and Thummim.ⁱ

The whole assembly numbered forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty 64 people, •not counting their slaves and maidservants to the number of seven 65 thousand three hundred and thirty-seven. They also had two hundred male and female singers. •Their horses numbered seven hundred and thirty-six, their mules 66 two hundred and forty-five, •their camels four hundred and thirty-five and their 67 donkeys six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

When they arrived at the Temple of Yahweh in Jerusalem, a certain number 68 of heads of families made voluntary offerings for the Temple of God, for its rebuilding on its site. •In accordance with their means they gave sixty-one 69 thousand gold drachmas, five thousand silver minas and one hundred priestly robes to the sacred funds.

The priests, Levites and part of the people settled in Jerusalem; the gatekeepers, 70 cantors, oblats and all the other Israelites, in their own towns.

The resumption of worship

3 When the seventh month came and the sons of Israel were in their own towns, 1 they all gathered as one man in Jerusalem.^a •Jeshua son of Jozadak, with his 2 brother priests, and Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel, with his brothers,^b began to rebuild the altar of the God of Israel, to offer holocausts there, as it is written in the Law of Moses the man of God. •The altar was set up on its old site,^c 3 despite their fear of the surrounding peoples, and on it they offered holocausts to Yahweh, holocausts morning and evening; •they celebrated the feast of 4 Tabernacles, according to the written Law, with as many daily holocausts as are ordained for each day; •then, in addition to the perpetual holocaust, they offered 5 those prescribed for the sabbaths,^d New Moon feasts and all the solemnities sacred to Yahweh, as well as those voluntary offerings made by individuals to Yahweh.^e •From the first day of the seventh month they began offering 6 holocausts to Yahweh, though the foundations of the sanctuary of Yahweh had not yet been laid.^f

Then they gave money to the masons and carpenters; to the Sidonians and 7 Tyrians they gave food, drink and oil, so that they would bring cedar wood from Lebanon by sea to Jaffa, for which Cyrus king of Persia had given permission.^g
It was in the second month of the second year^h after their arrival at the Temple 8 of God in Jerusalem that Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel and Jeshua son of Jozadak, with the rest of their brothers, the priests, the Levites and all the people who had returned to Jerusalem from captivity, began the work; they appointed the Levites who were twenty years old or more to superintend the work on the Temple of Yahweh.ⁱ •So Jeshua, his sons and his brothers, with Kadmiel, Binnui 9 and Hodaviah,^j agreed to superintend the workmen at the Temple of God.^k
When the builders had laid the foundations of the sanctuary of Yahweh, the 10 priests in fine linen^l came with trumpets, and the Levites, the sons of Asaph, with cymbals, to praise Yahweh according to the ordinances of David king of Israel; •they chanted praise and thanksgiving to Yahweh, 'For he is good, for 11 his love for Israel is everlasting'. And all the people shouted aloud the praises of Yahweh, since the foundations of the Temple of Yahweh had now been laid.

An indictment of the Samaritans: their tactics under Cyrus^a

- 1 4 But when the enemies of Judah and Benjamin heard that the exiles were 2 building a sanctuary for Yahweh, the God of Israel, •they came to Zerubbabel and Jeshua^b and the heads of families and said, 'We would like to build with you, for we seek your God as you do and we have sacrificed^c to him since the
 3 time of Esarhaddon king of Assyria, who brought us here'.^d •Zerubbabel, Jeshua, and the other heads of Israelite families replied, 'It is not right that you should join us in building a Temple for our God; we alone may build for Yahweh, the God of Israel, as we were ordered by Cyrus king of Persia'.
 4 Then the people of the country^e set out to dishearten and frighten the people of 5 Judah from building any further; •they lured counsellors^f against them, to defeat their purpose. This lasted throughout the reign of Cyrus king of Persia and until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

Samaritan tactics under Xerxes and Artaxerxes^g

- 6 At the beginning of the reign of Xerxes^h theyⁱ lodged a complaint against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.
 7 In the time of Artaxerxes,^j Mithredath, Tabeel and the rest of their colleagues denounced Jerusalem^k in writing to Artaxerxes king of Persia. The text of the document was in the Aramaic script and the Aramaic language.
 8 Then Rehum the governor^l and Shimshai the secretary wrote the following 9 letter denouncing Jerusalem to King Artaxerxes—•Rehum the governor and

f. The decision was later reversed, at least for the sons of Hakkoz, Ne 3:4,21; Ezr 8:33.

g. The governor, probably Sheshbazzar at this period, is called by his title of honour, Tirshatha, a Persian word apparently meaning 'His Reverence'; it recurs in Ne 7:65,69; 8:9; 10:2. The governor does not interfere in religious affairs. Ezekiel's instructions have borne fruit, cf. Ezk 45:7-17; 46:1-10,12,16-18.

h. On this priestly privilege see Lv 22:10f; 10:14-15. i. To consult God by means of the sacred lots, cf. 1 S 14:41+. The high priest has not therefore yet been invested; cf. Zc 3.

3 a. The same phrase (corr.) is used to describe this first gathering of the immigrants and the one organized by Ezra, Ne 7:72b-8:1.

b. The mention of Zerubbabel and Jeshua as taking this initiative is editorial. The work has been officially assigned to Sheshbazzar, 5:13-16; 6:3-5.

c. 'on its site' Greek, Syr., cf. 2:68; 'on its foundations' Hebr.

d. 'for the sabbaths' 2 Esd, cf. 2 Ch 2:3; omitted by Hebr.

e. 'Voluntary' sacrifices as opposed to those prescribed by the Law or obligatory as the result of a vow, cf. Lv 7:11+.

f. For the Chronicler this is a resumption of the whole system of worship as laid down by the 'Priestly' texts of the Law.

g. Preparations similar to those made for Solomon's Temple.

h. Hg 1:14; 2:10f and Zc 4:9 put the beginning of the work in the second year of Darius; it actually began under Cyrus, Ezr 5:16, but can have made little progress.

i. It is a characteristic of the Chronicler to give prominence to the Levites.

j. 'Binnui and Hodaviah' corr., cf. 2:40; 'and his sons, the sons of Judah' Hebr.

k. The Hebr. adds 'the sons of Henadad, their sons and their brothers', gloss following Ne 3:18,24;

l. 'in fine linen' corr., cf. 2 Ch 5:12.

m. 'on its foundations' corr.; 'when the foundations were being laid' Hebr., which adds 'that is, of the Temple'.

4 a. Hg 1:2 blamed the delay in building the Temple (from 538 to 520) on the indifference of the Jews. The Chronicler emphasises the Samaritan opposition.

b. 'Jeshua' Greek; omitted by Hebr.

c. 'we have sacrificed' qere, Greek, Syr.; 'we do not sacrifice' Hebr.

d. This deportation should perhaps be related to Esarhaddon's Egyptian campaign and to the capture of Tyre (671); see Is 7:8b (according to the Hebr. reading 'sixty-five years').

e. The expression 'people of the country' ('am ha'arez) means primarily those with landed property, 2 K 23:30,35, as opposed to those who have none (dallath ha'arez). The reference here is to Samaritan settlers, see 10:2,11; Ne 10:31f; the expression is therefore assuming a religious sense, that of common folk ignorant of the Law and in a permanent state of legal impurity.

f. Royal officials resident in Samaria.

g. Here the 'Aramaic source' begins; it ends at 6:18. The Chronicler, however, summarises a section of it, in Hebr., vv. 6-7.

h. End of 486 to beginning of 485.

i. Those mentioned in v. 4.

j. Artaxerxes I (465-424).

k. Lit. 'wrote against Jerusalem' corr.; 'wrote with the agreement (of Mithredath)' Greek, Arab., Syr.; 'bishlam' ('against Jerusalem') is regarded by 1 Esd, Vulg, as the name of the leading plaintiff.

l. Governor of Samaria, cf. v. 17. Samaria was the capital of the province which still included Judah; its governor therefore had supervisory rights over Jerusalem.

Shimshai the secretary and the rest of their colleagues, the judges and legates, Persian officials, the people of Uruk, Babylon and Susa—that is, the Elamites—and the other peoples whom Assurbanipal the Great deported and settled in the towns of Samaria and in the rest of Transeuphrates.^m

This is a copy of the letter they sent:

‘To King Artaxerxes, from your servants, the people of Transeuphrates:

‘Whereas •the king should be informed that the Jews, who have come up from your country to Jerusalem, are now rebuilding that rebellious and wicked city; they are working to restore the walls, and the foundations are already laid,ⁿ and whereas the king should be informed that if this city is rebuilt and the walls are restored, they will refuse to pay tribute, customs or tolls, and that in short this city will damage the authority of the kings, •and whereas, because we eat the salt of the palace, it does not seem proper to us to see this affront offered to the king; we therefore send this information to the king •so that a search may be made in the archives of your ancestors: in which archives you will find it proved that this city is a rebellious city, the bane of the kings and the provinces, and that sedition has been stirred up there from ancient times; which is why this city was destroyed. •We inform the king that if this city is rebuilt and its walls are restored, you will soon have no territories left in Transeuphrates.’

The king sent this reply:

‘To Rehum the governor, to Shimshai the secretary, and to the rest of their colleagues resident in Samaria and elsewhere in Transeuphrates, peace!

‘Whereas •the document you sent to me has been translated and read before me, •and by my orders search has been made, and it has been found that from ancient times this city has risen against kings and that rebellion and sedition have been contrived in it; •and that powerful kings have reigned in Jerusalem, who dominated all Transeuphrates,^o exacting tribute, customs and tolls; •you must now order the work of these men to cease immediately: this city is not to be rebuilt until I give further orders. •Beware of negligence in this matter lest further harm be done to the king’s interests.’

As soon as the copy of King Artaxerxes’ document had been read before

Rehum the governor,^p Shimshai the secretary and their colleagues, they hurried to the Jews in Jerusalem and stopped their work by force of arms.

The building of the Temple (520-515 B.C.)

Thus the work on the Temple of God in Jerusalem was brought to a standstill; it remained interrupted until the second year of the reign of Darius king of Persia.

Hg 1:14-29

5 Then the prophets Haggai and Zechariah son of Iddo began to prophesy to the Jews of Judah and Jerusalem in the name of the God of Israel who was with them. •At this, Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel and Jeshua son of Jozadak started again to build the Temple of God in Jerusalem; the prophets of God were with the people, giving them courage.^a •It was then that Tattenai, satrap of Transeuphrates, Shethar-bozenai and their colleagues came to them and asked, ‘Who gave you authority to build this Temple and to do this woodwork? ^bWhat are the names of the men responsible for this building?’ •But the eyes of their God were on the elders of the Jews; they were not compelled to stop while a report on the matter was sent to Darius and an official edict awaited.

Copy of the letter that Tattenai, satrap of Transeuphrates, Shethar-bozenai and his colleagues, the officials in Transeuphrates, sent to King Darius. •They sent a report to him which ran as follows:

‘To King Darius, all peace! •The king should be informed that we went to the district of Judah, to the Temple of the great God: it is being built of blocks of stone; the walls are being panelled with wood; the work is being done with great care and makes progress in their hands. •Questioning the elders, we asked,

- "Who gave you authority to build this Temple and to do this woodwork?"
 10 We also asked their names so that you might be informed; hence we have been able to list the names of those who are superintending these men.
 11 "They gave us this answer, "We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth; we are rebuilding a Temple which until recently had been standing for 12 many years and which was built and finished by a great king of Israel. •But our ancestors angered the God of heaven and he delivered them into the power of Nebuchadnezzar the Chaldaean, king of Babylon, who destroyed that Temple and 13 deported the people to Babylon. •In the first year of Cyrus king of Babylon, however, King Cyrus authorised the rebuilding of this Temple of God; •furthermore, those vessels of gold and silver belonging to the Temple of God, which Nebuchadnezzar had removed from the sanctuary in Jerusalem and taken to that of Babylon, King Cyrus in turn removed from the sanctuary in Babylon and handed back to a man called Sheshbazzar, whom he appointed high com-
 14 missioner, •with the words: Take these vessels; go and return them to the sanctuary in Jerusalem and let the Temple of God be rebuilt on its original site;
 15 the aforesaid Sheshbazzar therefore came and laid the foundations of the Temple of God in Jerusalem; they have been building it ever since,^c and it is still not finished."
 17 "Wherefore, if it please the king, let search be made in the king's muniment rooms in Babylon, to find out if it is true that King Cyrus gave permission for the rebuilding of this Temple of God in Jerusalem. And let the king's decision on this matter be sent to us."

1 6 Then, on the order of King Darius, a search was made in Babylonia in the 2 muniment rooms where the archives were kept; •at Ecbatana, the fortress situated in the province of Media, a scroll was found which ran thus:

'Memorandum.

3 'In the first year of Cyrus the king, King Cyrus decreed:

'Temple of God in Jerusalem.

"The Temple will be rebuilt as a place at which sacrifices are offered and to which offerings are brought to be burnt.^a Its height is to be sixty cubits, its width
 4 sixty cubits.^b •There are to be three thicknesses of stone blocks and one of wood.^c
 5 The expense is to be met by the king's household. •Furthermore, the vessels of gold and silver from the Temple of God which Nebuchadnezzar took from the sanctuary in Jerusalem and brought to Babylon are to be restored so that everything may be restored to the sanctuary in Jerusalem and be put back in the Temple of God."^d

6 'Wherefore, Tattenai, satrap of Transeuphrates, Shethar-bozenai and you,
 7 their colleagues, the officials of Transeuphrates, withdraw from there; •leave the high commissioner of Judah^e and the elders of the Jews to work on this
 8 Temple of God; they are to rebuild this Temple of God on its ancient site. •This, I decree, is how you must assist the elders of the Jews in the reconstruction of this Temple of God: the expenses of these people are to be paid, promptly and

m. 'the towns' Greek; 'the town' Hebr. The Hebr. adds 'whereas', cf. v. 11c. The list of Samaritan plaintiffs includes the highest authorities in the province, the leading Persian officials and the heads of the various groups of settlers according to their countries of origin.

n. 'the foundations) are laid' cf. 5:16; 'they are assembling [or: repairing] (the foundations)' Hebr.

o. Deliberately exaggerated allusion to the empires of David and Solomon.

q. Editorial verse linking what follows with 4:5.

5 a. These two verses combine information from Hg and Zc. The initial enthusiasm for building the Temple, stimulated by Sheshbazzar, 5:16, had petered out, and in the autumn of 520 there was nothing to show but ruins, Hg 1:4. It may therefore be said that the work only began then. The leading part played by Zerubbabel is stressed by Hg and Zc, but here the 'elders' come to the fore, v. 5.

b. Add. (cf. v. 9b) 'then we asked'; var. 'then, they asked'.

c. The elders embroider the facts, cf. 4:1-5:23-24, to prevent the authorisation of 538 from lapsing.

without fail, from the royal revenue—that is, from the tribute of Transeuphrates. What they need for holocausts to the God of heaven: young bulls, rams and 9 lambs, as also wheat, salt, wine and oil, is to be supplied to them daily, without fail, as required by the priests of Jerusalem, •so that they may offer acceptable 10 sacrifices to the God of heaven and pray for the lives of the king and his sons.^f I also decree this: If anyone disobeys this edict, a beam is to be torn from his 11 house, he is to be pilloried upright on it and his house is to be made into a dung heap for this crime. •May the God who causes his name to live there overthrow 12 any king or people who dares to defy this and destroy the Temple of God in Jerusalem! I, Darius, have issued this decree. Let it be obeyed to the letter!

Then Tattenai, satrap of Transeuphrates, Shethar-bozenai and their colleagues 13 obeyed to the letter the instructions sent by King Darius. •The elders of the Jews, 14 for their part, prospered with their building, inspired by Haggai the prophet and Zechariah son of Iddo. They finished the building in accordance with the order of the God of Israel and the order of Cyrus and of Darius.^g •This 15 Temple was finished on the twenty-third day of the month of Adar; it was the sixth year of the reign of King Darius.^h •The Israelites—the priests, the 16 Levites and the remainder of the exilesⁱ—joyfully dedicated this Temple of God; for the dedication of this Temple of God they offered one hundred bulls, two 17 hundred rams, four hundred lambs and, as a sacrifice for sin for the whole of Israel, twelve he-goats, corresponding to the number of the tribes of Israel. Then they installed the priests according to their orders in the service of the 18 Temple of God^j in Jerusalem, as is written in the Book of Moses.^k

The Passover of 515 B.C.

Ex12:1+ The exiles celebrated the Passover on the fourteenth day of the first month. 19 The Levites, as one man, had purified themselves; all were pure, so they sacrificed 20 the passover for all the exiles, for their brothers the priests and for themselves.^l Ps 47:9 The following ate the passover: the Israelites who had returned from exile and 21 all those who, having broken with the impurity of the surrounding peoples, joined them to seek Yahweh, the God of Israel. •For seven days they joyfully 22 celebrated the feast of Unleavened Bread, for Yahweh had given them cause to rejoice, having moved the heart of the king of Assyria to encourage their work on the Temple of God, the God of Israel.

II. THE ORGANISATION

OF THE COMMUNITY BY EZRA AND NEHEMIAH

The mission and personality of Ezra^a 7 After these events, in the reign of Artaxerxes king of Persia, Ezra son of 1 Seraiah, son of Azariah, son of Hilkiah, •son of Shallum, son of Zadok, son 2 of Ahitub, •son of Amariah, son of Azariah, son of Meraioth, •son of Zerariah, 3 son of Uzzi, son of Bukki, •son of Abishua, son of Phinehas, son of Eleazar, 4 son of the chief priest Aaron,^b •this man Ezra came up from Babylon. He was 5 a scribe versed^c in the Law of Moses, which had been given by Yahweh, the God 6 of Israel. As the favour of his God, Yahweh, was with him, the king gave him all he asked. •A certain number of Israelites, priests, Levites, cantors, gatekeepers 7 and oblates went up to Jerusalem in the seventh year of the reign of King Artaxerxes. •He arrived in Jerusalem in the fifth month: it was the seventh year of 8 the king's reign, •for he had decided to depart from Babylon on the first day of 9 the first month, and he arrived in Jerusalem on the first day of the fifth month; the kindly favour of his God was certainly with him. •For Ezra had devoted 10 himself to the study of the Law of Yahweh, to practising it and to teaching Israel its laws and customs.

The edict of Artaxerxes^d

- 11 This is a copy of the document which King Artaxerxes handed to Ezra, the priest-scribe, the scribe who was especially learned in the text of Yahweh's commandments and his laws relating to Israel:
- 12 'Artaxerxes, king of kings, to the priest Ezra, scribe of the Law of the God of heaven, perfect peace.'
- 13 'Here then are my orders: Anyone in my kingdom who is of the people of Israel, of their priests or their Levites and who freely chooses to go to Jerusalem, may go with you. •For you are sent by the king and his seven counsellors to make an inspection of Judah and Jerusalem according to the Law of your God, which is in your possession, •and also to carry the silver and gold which the king and his counsellors have voluntarily offered to the God of Israel who dwells in Jerusalem, •as well as all the silver and gold you find in the whole province of Babylonia, together with those voluntary offerings given by the people and the priests for the Temple of their God in Jerusalem. •Further, with this money take pains to buy bulls, rams and lambs, as well as the oblations and libations which go with them; you must offer them on the altar of the Temple of your God in Jerusalem. •The gold and silver left over you may spend as you and your brothers think right, according to the will of your God. •Place the vessels that have been given you for the service of the Temple of your God before your God in Jerusalem. For anything else necessary for the Temple of your God, which you may find occasion to provide, you may draw on the royal treasury. •I, King Artaxerxes, give this command to all the treasurers of Transeuphrates: Whatever the priest Ezra, scribe of the Law of the God of heaven, may ask of you must be instantly allowed: •up to one hundred talents of silver, one hundred measures of wheat, one hundred baths of wine, one hundred baths of oil, and salt as requested. Everything that the God of heaven commands must be carried out zealously for the Temple of the God of heaven, lest the wrath should come on the realm of the king and of his sons. •You are also informed that it is forbidden to impose tribute, customs or tolls on any of the priests, Levites, cantors, gatekeepers, oblates; in short, on the servants of this Temple of God.
- 25 'And you, Ezra, by virtue of the wisdom of your God, which is in your possession,^g you are to appoint scribes^h and judges to administer justice for the whole people of Transeuphrates, that is, for all who know the Law of your God.ⁱ You must teach those who do not know it. •If anyone does not obey the Law of your God—which is the law of the king—let judgement be strictly executed on him: death, banishment, confiscation or imprisonment.'

c. Lit. 'rapid scribe', cf. Ps 45:1. Their skill in the art of writing made the scribes indispensable officials in an oriental court. The title of 'scribe' therefore (vv. 12 and 21) indicates that Ezra was a kind of minister for Jewish affairs at the Persian court. But the Chronicler, thinking of Ezra's activity in Jerusalem, Ne 8:8+, gives the official title a religious meaning; the scribe is the man who reads, translates, expounds the Law to God's people. Ezra is the father of these scribes who did much good work in the post-exilic period, which was continued by the scribes (grammatels) of the time of Christ.

The journey of Ezra from Babylonia to Palestine

Blessed be Yahweh, the God of our ancestors, who moved the king's heart in 27 this way to glorify the Temple of Yahweh in Jerusalem •and who won for me 28 7:6 the favour of the king, his counsellors and all the most powerful of the king's officials. For my part, I took courage, for the favour of Yahweh my God was with me, and I gathered the leading men of Israel together to set out with me.

8 These, with their genealogies, are the heads of families who set out from 1
Babylon with me in the reign of King Artaxerxes:^a

Of the sons of Phinehas: Gershom; of the sons of Ithamar:^b Daniel; of the 2 sons of David: Hattush •son of Shecaniah; of the sons of Parosh: Zechariah, 3 with whom one hundred and fifty males were registered; •of the sons of Pahath- 4 moab: Eliehoenai son of Zerahiah, and with him two hundred males; •of the 5 sons of Zattu: Shecaniah son of Jahaziel, and with him three hundred males; of the sons of Adin: Ebed son of Jonathan, and with him fifty males; •of the 6 sons of Elam: Jeshaiab son of Athaliah, and with him seventy males; •of the 7 sons of Shephatiah: Zebadiah son of Michael, and with him eighty males; •of 8 the sons of Joab: Obadiah son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen 9 males; •of the sons of Bani: Shelomith son of Josiphiah, and with him a hundred 10 and sixty males; •of the sons of Bebai: Zechariah son of Bebai, and with him 11 twenty-eight males; •of the sons of Azgad: Johanan son of Hakkatan, and with 12 him a hundred and ten males; •of the sons of Adonikam: the younger sons, 13 whose names are: Eliphelet, Jeiel and Shemaiah, and with them sixty 14 males; •and of the sons of Bigvai: Uthai son of Zabud, and with him seventy 14 males.

I assembled them near the river that runs to Ahava,^c where we camped for 15 three days. Observing them I saw laymen and priests, but no Levites. •So 16
I dispatched Eliezer, Ariel, Shemaiah, Elnathan, Jarib, Elnathan, Nathan, Zechariah and Meshullam, men of judgement, •and sent them to Iddo, the 17 leading man in the region of Casiphia; I told them the words they were to say to Iddo and his kinsmen, living in the region of Casiphia, to provide 7:6
us with servants for the Temple of our God. •Then, thanks to the kindly favour 18 of our God which was with us, they sent us a capable man, of the sons of Mahli son of Levi son of Israel, Sherebiah with his sons and kinsmen: eighteen men; also Hashabiah and with him his brother Jeshaiab of the sons of Merari, as 19
2:43+ well as their sons: twenty men; •and of the oblates whom David and his notables 20 had assigned to serve the Levites: two hundred and twenty oblates. All were registered by name.

There, beside the river of Ahava, I proclaimed a fast: we were to humble 21 ourselves before our God and pray to him for a successful journey for us, our children and our belongings; •since I should have been ashamed to ask the 22 Ne 2:9 king for an armed guard and cavalry to protect us from an enemy on the road, for we had already told the king, 'The hand of our God is held out in blessing over all who seek him, his power and his anger over all who turn away from him'.
So we fasted, pleading with our God for this favour, and he answered our 23 prayers.

I chose twelve of the leading priests, and then Sherebiah and Hashabiah 24 and with them ten of their kinsmen; •I weighed out for them the silver, the gold 25 and the vessels, the offerings that the king, his counsellors, his nobles and all the Israelites present had presented for the Temple of our God. •So I weighed 26 out and handed over to them six hundred and fifty talents of silver, one hundred silver vessels worth two talents,^d one hundred talents of gold, •twenty golden 27 bowls worth a thousand darics and two vessels of fine gilded bronze which were as valuable as gold. •I told them, 'You are consecrated to Yahweh; these 28 vessels are sacred; the silver and gold are voluntary offerings to Yahweh, the God of your ancestors. •Take charge of them and guard them until you weigh them 29

before the leading priests, the Levites and the heads of families of Israel in Jerusalem in the chambers of the Temple of Yahweh.' •The priests and Levites then took charge of the silver, the gold and the vessels thus weighed, to take them to Jerusalem to the Temple of our God.

On the twelfth day of the first month we left the river of Ahava to go to Jerusalem; the favour of our God was with us and protected us on the road from enemies and thieves. •We arrived in Jerusalem and stayed there, resting, for three days. •On the fourth day the silver, the gold and the vessels were weighed in the Temple of our God and handed over to the priest Meremoth son of Uriah and, with him, Eleazar son of Phinehas; with them were the Levites Jozabad son of Jeshua and Noadiah son of Binnui. •Number and weight, all was there. The total weight was put on record.

At that time •those who came back from captivity, the exiles, offered holocausts to the God of Israel: twelve bulls for all Israel, ninety-six rams, seventy-two lambs, twelve he-goats for sin; the whole as a holocaust to Yahweh.

The king's instructions were notified to the king's satraps and the governors of Transeuphrates, who then assisted the people and the Temple of God.

The marriages with foreigners dissolved^a

MI2:10-12

Once this was done, the leaders approached me to say, 'The people of Israel, the priests and the Levites, have not broken with the natives of the countries who are steeped in^b abominations—Canaanites, Hittites, Perizzites, Jebusites, Ammonites, Moabites, Egyptians and Amorites—•but have found wives among these foreign women for themselves and for their sons; the holy race has been mingling with the natives of the countries; in this act of treachery the chief men and officials have led the way'. •At this news I tore my garment and my cloak; I tore hair from my head and beard and sat down, quite overcome. •All who trembled at the words of the God of Israel gathered round me, when faced by this treachery of the exiles.^c For my part, I went on sitting there, overcome, until the evening oblation. •At the evening sacrifice I came out of my stupor and falling on my knees, with my garment and cloak torn, I stretched out my hands to Yahweh my God, •and said:^d

God, if after this kindness we have deserted your commandments, •which, 11 through your servants the prophets, you ordained in these words, “The land you are entering to possess is a land unclean because of the foulness of the natives of the countries and of the abominations with which their impurities^e have infected it from end to end. •So you must not give your daughters to their 12 sons nor take their daughters for your sons; you must not be concerned for their peace or their prosperity, so that you yourselves may grow strong, eat the best of what the country produces and leave it as an inheritance to your sons for ever.”

‘Now after all that has come upon us on account of our evil deeds and our great 13 fault—although you, our God, have rated^f our crimes less than their wickedness and left us this remnant here—•are we to break your commandments again and 14 intermarry with these people who practise such abominations? Would you not be provoked to the point of destroying us, so that not even the smallest remnant would survive? •Yahweh, God of Israel, by your justice^g we survive 15 as the remnant we are today; here we are before you with our sin. And because of it, no one can survive in your presence.’

10 While Ezra, weeping and prostrate before the Temple of God, prayed 1 and confessed, a great crowd of Israelites gathered round him, men, women and children, weeping bitterly too. •Then Shecaniah son of Jehiel, one of the 2 sons of Elam, spoke up and said to Ezra, ‘We have betrayed our God by marrying foreign women, taken from the natives of the countries. But, in spite of this, there is still some hope for Israel. •We will make a solemn promise before our God 3 to put away our foreign wives and the children born to them, as my lord^a and those who tremble at the commandment of our God may advise. Let us act in accordance with the Law. •Up! This is for you to decide, but we will support 4 you. Take courage; to work!’ •Then Ezra stood up and put the leading priests 5 and Levites and all Israel on oath to do what had been said. They took the oath.
Ezra left his place before the Temple of God and went to the room of Jehohanan 6 son of Eliashib, where he spent the night^b without eating bread or drinking water; he was in mourning for the exiles’ treachery.

A proclamation was issued in Judah and in Jerusalem to all the exiles that 7 they were to assemble in Jerusalem: •anyone who did not come within three 8 days—such was the warning of the leaders and elders—would have all his goods seized^c and would himself be excluded from the community of the exiles. •As 9 a result, all the men of Judah and Benjamin assembled in Jerusalem within the three days; it was the ninth month, the twentieth day of the month; all the people gathered in the square before the Temple of God; the occasion itself, and the heavy rain, had them trembling. •Then Ezra the priest stood up and spoke, 10 ‘You have committed treason by marrying foreign women; you have added to the sin of Israel. •But now give thanks to Yahweh, the God of your ancestors, 11 and do his will, by separating from the natives of the country and from your foreign wives.’ •In a loud voice the whole assembly answered, ‘Yes, our duty 12 is to do as you say. •But there are a great many people here and it is the rainy season; we cannot stay out in the open; besides, this is not something that can be dealt with in one or two days, since many of us have sinned in this respect.
Our leaders could represent the full assembly;^d all those from our towns who 14 have foreign wives could come at stated times, accompanied by elders and judges from each town, until we have turned away God’s anger which has been thus roused against us.’ •Only Jonathan son of Asahel and Jahzeiah son of Tikvah, 15 supported by Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite, were opposed to this procedure.^e •The exiles acted on this suggestion. Ezra the priest chose^f as 16 helpers the heads of families for each House, all designated by name. The session for investigating individual cases began on the first day of the tenth month.
And by the first day of the first month they had dealt with all the men who had 17 married foreign women.

NEHEMIAH

The call of Nehemiah: his mission to Judah

1 The words of Nehemiah son of Hacaliah.^a In the month of Chislev, in the twentieth year of King Artaxerxes,^b when I was in the citadel of Susa, •one of my kinsmen, Hanani, arrived with some men from Judah. I asked them about the Jews—the remnant rescued^c from captivity—and about Jerusalem. ‘Those who escaped from captivity,’ they replied ‘who are back there in the province, are in great trouble and humiliation: the walls of Jerusalem are in ruins and its gates burnt down.’^d •On hearing this I sank down and wept; for several days I mourned, fasting and praying before the God of heaven.

Dt 7:9,12 And I said,^e ‘Yahweh, God of heaven, great God who must be feared, Dn 9:1 maintaining covenant and kindness with those who love you and obey your 2 Ch 6:40 commandments, •let your ear be listening, and your eyes open, to hear your servant’s prayer. I am making this to you now day and night on behalf of the sons of Israel, your servants; and I confess the sins of the sons of Israel which we have committed against you: I and my father’s House have sinned. •We have acted very wickedly towards you: we have not kept the commandments, laws and customs you laid down for Moses your servant. •Remember, I beg you, the charge you gave to Moses your servant: “If you prove faithless, I will scatter you among the peoples; •but if you come back to me and keep my commandments and practise them, even if your outcasts were at the very sky’s end, I would gather them from there and bring them back to the place I have chosen for my name to dwell in”. •Now these are your servants, your own people: you have redeemed them with your mighty power and outstretched arm. Dt 9:29 O Lord, let your ear be attentive to your servant’s prayer and to the prayer Psl 118:25 of your servants who delight to reverence your name. I beg you, let your servant be successful today; make him acceptable to this man.’

At that time I was cupbearer to the king.

2 In the month of Nisan, in the twentieth year of King Artaxerxes,^a the wine being my concern, I took up the wine and offered it to the king. Now I had never been downcast before.^b •So the king said, ‘Why is your face so sad? You are not sick, surely? This must be a sadness of the heart.’ A great fear came over me •and I said to the king, ‘May the king live for ever! How could my face be other than sad when the city where the tombs of my ancestors are lies in ruins, and its gates have been burnt down?’ •‘What’ the king asked ‘is your request?’ I called on the God of heaven •and made this reply to the king, ‘If it pleases the king, and if you are satisfied with your servant, give me leave to go to Judah, to the city of my ancestors’ tombs, and rebuild it’. •The king, with the queen sitting there beside him, said, ‘How long will your journey take, and when will you return?’ So I named a date that seemed acceptable to the king and he gave me leave to go. •I spoke to the king once more, ‘If it please the king, could letters be given me for the governors of Transeuphrates to allow me to pass through to Judah? •And also a letter for Asaph, keeper of the king’s park, to supply me with timber for the gates of the citadel of the Temple, for the city walls and for the house I am to occupy?’ This the king granted me, for the kindly favour of my God was with me.

Ezr 7:6 So I travelled to the governors of Transeuphrates, and handed them the king’s Ezr 8:22 letters. The king had given me an escort of army officers and cavalry.

When Sanballat the Horonite and Tobiah the Ammonite slave^c came to know of this, they were much displeased that anyone should come to promote the welfare of the sons of Israel.

The decision to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem

And so I reached Jerusalem and stayed there for three days. •Then I rose 11

- in the night, with a few other men, not having told anyone what work God had inspired me to do for Jerusalem, and having no animal with me but my own mount. •At night, therefore, leaving by the Valley Gate, I went by way of the Well of the Dragon to the Dung Gate; I examined the walls of Jerusalem with their gaps^d and burnt-out gates. •I went on to the Fountain Gate and the King's Pool, but found no further path for my mount. •So I returned, in the dark, through the wadi, still examining the walls, and came in again by the Valley Gate.^e And so I returned •without the officials knowing where I had gone or what I was doing. So far I had said nothing to the Jews: either to the priests, the authorities, the officials or any other responsible persons. •Then I said to them, 'You see the trouble we are in: Jerusalem is in ruins, its gates have been burnt down. Come, let us rebuild the walls of Jerusalem and suffer this indignity no longer.' •And I told them how the kindly favour of God had been with me, and also repeated the words the king had said to me. 'Let us start!' they exclaimed 'Let us build'; and with willing hands they set about the good work.
- 19 When Sanballat the Horonite and Tobiah the Ammonite slave, and Geshem^f the Arab came to know of this, they ridiculed us, and came^g and asked, 'What are you doing? Are you planning to revolt against the king?' •But I gave them this answer, 'The God of heaven will give us success. We, his servants, are going to build; you have neither share nor rights nor memorial in Jerusalem.'

Ezr 7:6

The volunteer builders^a

Is 58:12

- 1 3 Eliashib the high priest and his brother priests set about building the Sheep Gate; they constructed its framework and set its doors, bolts and bars^b in place, and proceeded as far as the Tower^c of Hananel. •The men of Jericho built next to them; Zaccur son of Imri built next to them. •The sons of Hassenaah built the Fish Gate; they constructed its framework and set its doors, bolts and bars in place. •Meremoth son of Uriah, son of Hakkoz carried out repairs next to them; Meshullam son of Berechiah, son of Meshezabel carried out repairs next to him. •The men of Tekoa carried out repairs next to him, though their chiefs refused to bow their necks and work for their lords.^d •Joiada son of Paseah and Meshullam son of Besodeiah repaired the gate of the new quarter:^e they constructed its framework and set its doors, bolts and bars in place. •Next to them repairs were carried out by Melatiah of Gibeon and Jadon of Meronoth, and also by the men of Gibeon and Mizpah, on behalf^f the governors of Transeuphrates. •Next to them repairs were carried out by Uzziel, a member of the goldsmiths' guild, and next to him repairs were carried out

The effect on the Jews' opponents^q

When Sanballat heard that we were rebuilding the walls he flew into a rage,³³ beside himself with anger. He ridiculed the Jews •and in front of his kinsmen³⁴ and the wealthy men of Samaria he exclaimed, 'What are these pathetic Jews² trying to do?...^r Do they expect to finish in one day? Do they think they can put new life into these charred stones, salvaged from the heaps of rubble?

³⁵ Tobiah the Ammonite was standing beside him. 'Let them build,' he said
³⁶ 'a jackal jumping on their wall will soon knock the stones down again.' •See, ³⁷ our God, how we are despised! Make their sneers fall back on their own heads. Give them over to shame in a land of exile. •Do not hide their guilt or let their ³⁸ sin be blotted out before you, for heaping insults on the builders. Jr 18:23

³⁸ Meanwhile we were rebuilding the wall which was soon finished all the way round to mid-height, since the people put their hearts into the work.

² the gaps were beginning to be made good—they were furious, •and conspired together to come and attack Jerusalem and upset my plans.

³ Then we called on our God and set a watch against them, day and night,
⁵ And our enemies were saying, 'We will appear among them before they know or see anything; then we will cut them down and put an end to the business'.
⁷ down behind the wall where the place was clear; I posted the people by families with their swords, spears and bows. •I had seen their fear^d and I stood up and addressed the authorities, the officials and the rest of the people, 'Do not be afraid of them. Keep your minds on the Lord, who is great and to be feared, and fight for your kinsmen, your sons, your daughters, your wives and your homes.' •Learning, however, that we were forewarned, and that God had thwarted their plan, our enemies withdrew,^e and we all went back, everyone to his work on the wall.

¹² And as each builder worked, he wore his sword at his side. Beside me stood a trumpeter. •I addressed the authorities, the officials and the rest of the people, 'The work is important and extensive, and we are deployed along the wall at some distance from each other. •Rally round us wherever you hear the trumpet sounding, and our God will fight for us.' •So we went on with the work^h from break of day till the stars appeared. •Then I spoke to the people again, 'Let each man, with his servant, spend the night inside Jerusalem: in this way we can employ the night in watching and the day in working'. •But none of us, neither

The social problems of Nehemiah. He vindicates his administration

Jr 34:8-22

5 The ordinary people and their wives began complaining loudly against their brother Jews. •Some said, 'We are having to barter^a our sons and daughters to get enough corn to eat and keep us alive'. •Others said, 'We are having to mortgage our fields, our vineyards, our houses to get corn during the famine'. Still others said, 'We have had to borrow money on our fields and our vineyards to pay the king's tax; •and though we are of the same flesh as our brothers, and our children as good as theirs, we are having to sell our sons and our daughters into slavery; some of our daughters have even been raped! We can do nothing about it, since our fields and our vineyards are now the property of others.'^b

Lv 25:48

When I heard their complaints and these words I was very angry. •Having turned the matter over in my mind, I reprimanded the authorities and officials. 'What a burden^c you impose,' I said 'every one of you on his brother!' Summoning a great assembly to deal with them, •I said to them, 'To the best of our power, we have redeemed our brother Jews who had been sold to foreigners, and now you in turn are selling our brothers for us to redeem them!'^d They were silent and could find nothing to say. •'What you are doing' I^e went on 'is wrong. Do you not want to walk in the fear of our God and escape the sneers of the nations, our enemies? •I too, my kinsmen, and my servants have lent them money and corn. Let us cancel this debt. •Return them their fields, their vineyards, their olive groves and their houses forthwith, and remit the debt^f on the money, corn, wine and oil which you have lent them.'^g •'We will make restitution,' they replied 'we will claim nothing more from them; we will do as you say.' At once I summoned the priests and made them swear to do as they had promised. •Then I shook out the lap of my gown with the words, 'May God do this, and shake out of his house and property any man who does not keep this promise; may he be shaken out like this and left empty!' And the whole assembly answered, 'Amen' and gave praise to Yahweh. And the people kept this promise.

Jr 18:1+

What is more,^h from the day the king appointed me governor in the land of Judah, from the twentieth to the thirty-second year of King Artaxerxes, for twelve years, neither I nor my kinsmen ever ate governor's bread.ⁱ •Now the former governors, my predecessors,^j had been a burden on the people, from whom they took forty silver shekels each day as their subsistence allowance,^k while their servants oppressed the people too. But I, fearing God, never did this.

And furthermore I worked on this wall all the time, though I owned no land; 16 and my servants also were all employed on the work.

Leaders^l and officials to the number of a hundred and fifty ate at my table, 17 not to mention those who came to us from the surrounding nations. •Every day, 18 one ox, six fine sheep, and poultry, were prepared at my expense; every ten days skins of wine were brought^m in bulk. But even so, I never claimed the governor's subsistence allowance, since the people already had burden enough to bear.

In my favour, my God, remember all I have done for this people. 19

The intrigues of Nehemiah's enemies. The wall is finishedⁿ

6 When Sanballat, Tobiah, Geshem the Arab and our other enemies heard 1 that I had rebuilt the wall and that not a single gap was left—though at that time I had not fixed the doors to the gates—•Sanballat and Geshem sent me a 2 message, 'Come and meet us at Hac-chepirim in the Vale of Ono'. Now they intended some harm to me. •So I sent messengers to them to say, 'I am engaged 3 in a great undertaking and so cannot come down. The work would come to 4 a halt if I left it to come down to you.' •Four times they sent me the 5 same invitation and I made them the same reply. •The fifth time, with the same 6 purpose in mind, Sanballat sent me his servant bearing an open letter. •It ran,

 'There is a rumour among the nations, so Gashmu^b says, that you and the Jews are thinking of rebelling, which is why you are building the wall; that you 7 yourself are to become their king;^c •that you have even briefed prophets^d in your own interest in Jerusalem to proclaim: "Judah has a king". These rumours will soon be reaching the king; so you had better come and talk things over 8 with us.' •To this, however, I replied, 'As regards what you say, nothing of the 9 sort has occurred; it is a figment of your own imagination'. •For they were trying to frighten us, thinking, 'Their hands will tire of the work, and it will never be finished'. But I meanwhile was making my hands even stronger.^e 10 I had been to visit Shemaiah son of Delaiah, son of Mehetabel, since he was prevented from coming to me.^f He said:

'Let us meet at the Temple of God,
 in the innermost part of the sanctuary;
 let us shut the sanctuary doors,
 for they are coming to kill you,
 they are coming to kill you tonight'.

11 But I retorted, 'Is a man like me to run away? A man in my position to go 12 into the sanctuary to save his life?'^g I will not go.' •I realised that God had not sent him to say this, but that he had pronounced this oracle over me because Tobiah^h 13 was paying him •to frighten me into doing this, and so committing a sinⁱ as a result of which they would have been able to blacken my reputation and ridicule 14 me. •Remember Tobiah, my God, for what he has done; and Noadiah the prophetess, and the other prophets who tried to frighten me.

Jr23:9-40
Zc 13:2f

15 The wall was finished within fifty-two days, on the twenty-fifth of Elul.^j 16 When all our enemies heard about it, and all the surrounding nations had seen it, they were deeply impressed^k and acknowledged that this work had been accomplished by the power of our God.

Ps 118:22-23;
127:1

17 During this same period several of the authorities^l of Judah kept sending letter 18 after letter to Tobiah, and letters from Tobiah kept arriving for them; •for he had many sworn to his interest in Judah, since he was son-in-law to Shecaniah son of Arah, and his son Jehohanan had married the daughter of Meshullam 19 son of Berechiah. •They even cried up his good deeds in my presence, and they reported what I said back to him. And Tobiah kept on sending letters to frighten me.

7 When the wall had been rebuilt and I had set the doors in place, keepers¹ were appointed for the gates (besides cantors and Levites).^a •I entrusted the² administration of Jerusalem to my brother Hanani, and to Hananiah the commander of the citadel, for he was a trustworthy man and God-fearing above the ordinary. •I said to them, 'The gates of Jerusalem must not be opened until³ the sun gets hot; and you are to shut and bar the doors while it is still high;^b and detail guard pickets from the inhabitants of Jerusalem, some for the lookout posts, and others for duty outside their own houses'.

The repopulation of Jerusalem^c

The city was large and spacious but the population was small, and no new⁴ families were growing up.^d •My God therefore inspired me to assemble the⁵ authorities, the officials and the people for the purpose of taking a census by families. I discovered the genealogical register of those who had returned in the first group, and there I found entered:

||Ezr 2:1-70 A list of the first exiles to return

These are the people of the province who returned from captivity and exile.⁶ After being deported by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, they returned to Jerusalem and to Judah, each to his own town. •They arrived with Zerubbabel,⁷ Jeshua, Nehemiah, Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispereth, Bigvai, Nehum, Baanah.

The number of the men of the people of Israel: •sons of Parosh, two thousand⁸ one hundred and seventy-two; •sons of Shephatiah, three hundred and seventy-⁹ two; •sons of Arah, six hundred and fifty-two; •sons of Pahath-moab, that is to say sons of Jeshua and Joab, two thousand eight hundred and eighteen;¹⁰ sons of Elam, one thousand two hundred and fifty-four; •sons of Zattu, eight¹² hundred and forty-five; •sons of Zaccai, seven hundred and sixty; •sons of¹³ Binnui, six hundred and forty-eight; •sons of Bebai, six hundred and twenty-¹⁴ eight; •sons of Azgad, two thousand three hundred and twenty-two; •sons of¹⁵ Adonikam, six hundred and sixty-seven; •sons of Bigvai, two thousand and¹⁶ sixty-seven; •sons of Adin, six hundred and fifty-five; •sons of Ater, that is to say of Hezekiah, ninety-eight; •sons of Hashum, three hundred and twenty-¹⁷ eight; •sons of Bezai, three hundred and twenty-four; •sons of Hariph, one¹⁸ hundred and twelve; •men of Gibeon, ninety-five; •men of Bethlehem and¹⁹ Netophah, one hundred and eighty-eight; •men of Anathoth, one hundred and²⁰ twenty-eight; •men of Beth-azmaveth, forty-two; •men of Kiriath-jearim,²¹ Chephirah and Beeroth, seven hundred and forty-three; •men of Ramah and²² Geba, six hundred and twenty-one; •men of Michmas, one hundred and²³ twenty-two; •men of Bethel and Ai, one hundred and twenty-three; •men of²⁴ Nebo, fifty-two; •sons of another Elam, one thousand two hundred and fifty-²⁵ four; •sons of Harim, three hundred and twenty; •men of Jericho, three hundred²⁶ and forty-five; •men of Lod, Hadid and Ono, seven hundred and twenty-one;²⁷ sons of Senaah, three thousand nine hundred and thirty.²⁸

The priests: sons of Jedaiah, that is to say the House of Jeshua, nine hundred²⁹ and seventy-three; •sons of Immer, one thousand and fifty-two; •sons of³⁰ Pashhur, one thousand two hundred and forty-seven; •sons of Harim, one³¹ thousand and seventeen.³²

The Levites: sons of Jeshua, that is to say of Kadmiel, Binnui, Hodiah,³³ seventy-four.³⁴

The cantors: sons of Asaph, one hundred and forty-eight.³⁵

The gatekeepers: sons of Shallum, sons of Ater, sons of Talmon, sons of³⁶ Akkub, sons of Hatita, sons of Shobai, one hundred and thirty-eight.³⁷

The oblates: sons of Ziha, sons of Hasupha, sons of Tabbaoth, •sons of³⁸ Keros, sons of Sia, sons of Padon, •sons of Lebana, sons of Hagaba, sons of³⁹ Shalmai, •sons of Hanan, sons of Giddel, sons of Gahar, •sons of Reaiah,⁴⁰

51 sons of Rezin, sons of Nekoda, •sons of Gazzam, sons of Uzza, sons of Paseah, 52 sons of Besai, sons of the Meunites, sons of the Nephusites, •sons of Bakbuk, 53 sons of Hakupha, sons of Harhur, •sons of Bazlith, sons of Mehida, sons of 54 Harsha, •sons of Barkos, sons of Sisera, sons of Temah, •sons of Nezhiah, sons 55 of Hatipha.

57 The sons of Solomon's slaves: sons of Sotai, sons of Sophereth, sons of 58 Perida, •sons of Jaala, sons of Darkon, sons of Giddel, •sons of Shephatiah, 59 sons of Hattil, sons of Pochereth-haz-zebaim, sons of Amon. •The total of the 60 oblates and the sons of Solomon's slaves: three hundred and ninety-two.

61 The following, who came from Tel-melah, Tel-harsha, Cherub, Addon and Immer, could not prove that their families and ancestry were of Israelite origin:
 62 sons of Delaiah, sons of Tobiah, sons of Nekoda: six hundred and forty-two.
 63 And among the priests: sons of Hobaiah, sons of Hakkoz, sons of Barzillai—who 64 had married one of the daughters of Barzillai, the Gileadite, whose name he 65 adopted. •These people searched in their ancestral registers but could not be located in them, so they were excluded from the priesthood as unclean, •and His Excellency forbade them to eat the sacred foods until a priest could be found for the Urim and Thummim.

66 The whole assembly numbered forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty 67 people, •not counting their slaves and maidservants to the number of seven thousand three hundred and thirty-seven. They also had two hundred and 68 forty-five male and female singers. •They had (seven hundred and thirty-six horses, two hundred and forty-five mules) four hundred and thirty-five camels and six thousand seven hundred and twenty donkeys.

69 A certain number of heads of families gave offerings for the building. His Excellency contributed one thousand gold drachmas, fifty bowls, thirty priestly 70 robes and five hundred (silver minas)^e to the fund. •And heads of families gave twenty thousand gold drachmas and two thousand two hundred silver 71 minas to the building fund. •The gifts made by the rest of the people amounted to twenty thousand gold drachmas, two thousand silver minas, and sixty-seven priestly robes.

72a The priests, Levites and part of the people settled in Jerusalem; the gatekeepers, cantors, oblates and all the other Israelites, in their own towns.

Judaism is born. Ezra reads the Law. The feast of Tabernacles^f

72b ¹ When the seventh month came,^g 8 all the people gathered as one man on Ezr 3:1
 the square before the Water Gate.^a They asked Ezra the scribe to bring the Book
 2 of the Law of Moses which Yahweh had prescribed for Israel.^b •Accordingly Ezra the priest brought the Law before the assembly, consisting of men, women, and children old enough to understand. This was the first day of the seventh 3 month.^c •On the square before the Water Gate, in the presence of the men and women, and children old enough to understand, he read from the book from early morning till noon; all the people listened attentively to the Book of the Law.

4 Ezra the scribe stood on a wooden dais erected for the purpose; beside him stood, on his right, Mattithiah, Shema, Anaiah, Uriah, Hilkiah and Maaseiah;

on his left, Pedaiah, Mishaël, Malchijah, Hashum, Hashbaddanah, Zechariah, and Meshullam.^a • In full view of all the people—since he stood higher than all the people—Ezra opened the book; and when he opened it all the people stood up. • Then Ezra blessed Yahweh, the great God, and all the people raised their hands and answered, ‘Amen! Amen!’; then they bowed down and, face to the ground, prostrated themselves before Yahweh. • (Jeshua, Bani, Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodiah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabab, Hanan, Pelaiah, who were Levites, explained the Law to the people while the people remained standing.)^e • And Ezra read^f from the Law of God, translating and giving the sense, so that the people understood what was read.

Then (Nehemiah—His Excellency^g—and) Ezra, priest and scribe (and the Levites who were instructing the people) said to all the people, ‘This day is sacred to Yahweh your God. Do not be mournful, do not weep.’ For the people were all in tears as they listened to the words of the Law.

He then said, ‘Go, eat the fat, drink the sweet wine, and send a portion to the man who has nothing prepared ready. For this day is sacred to our Lord. Do not be sad: the joy of Yahweh is your stronghold.’ • And the Levites calmed all the people, saying, ‘Be at ease; this is a sacred day. Do not be sad.’ • And all the people went off to eat and drink and give shares away and begin to enjoy themselves since they had understood the meaning of what had been proclaimed to them.

On the second day the heads of families of the whole people, and the priests and Levites, gathered round Ezra the scribe to study the words of the Law. • And written in the Law that Yahweh had prescribed through Moses they found this, ‘The sons of Israel are to live in shelters during the feast of the seventh month’.^h As soon as they heard this, they issued a proclamationⁱ in all their towns and in Jerusalem: ‘Go into the hills and bring branches of olive, pine, myrtle, palm and other leafy trees to make shelters, as it says in the book’. • The people went; they brought back branches and made themselves shelters, each man on his own roof, in their courtyards, in the precincts of the Temple of God, on the square of the Water Gate and the square of the Gate of Ephraim. • The whole assembly, all who had returned from captivity, put up shelters and lived in them; the sons of Israel had never done such a thing from the days of Joshua son of Nun till the present.^j And there was great merrymaking.

Each day, from the first day to the last, Ezra read from the Book of the Law of God. They celebrated the feast for seven days; on the eighth day, as prescribed, there was a solemn assembly.

Dn 9:1 The ceremony of atonement^a

On the twenty-fourth day of this month the Israelites, in sackcloth and with dust on their heads, assembled for a fast.^b • Those of Israelite stock separated themselves from all those of foreign origin; they stood confessing their sins and the transgressions of their ancestors. • (Standing, each man in his right position, they read from the Book of the Law of Yahweh their God for one quarter of the day; for another quarter they confessed their sins and prostrated themselves before Yahweh their God.)^c • (On the Levites’ platform stood Jeshua, Binnui,^d Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani and Chenani, calling loudly to Yahweh their God; • and the Levites, Jeshua, Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabneiah, Sherebiah, Hodiah, Shebaniah and Pethahiah said, ‘Arise and bless Yahweh our God’).^e

Blessed be you, Yahweh our God,^f from everlasting to everlasting.
And blessed be your name of glory that surpasses all blessing and praise.

Yahweh, you are the only one.

You made the heavens, the heaven of heavens, with all their array,
the earth and all it bears,
the seas and all they hold.
To all of these you give life and the array of the heavens bows down before you.

- 7 Yahweh, you are the God who chose Abram, Gn 12:1
brought him out from Ur in Chaldaea, and gave him the name of Abraham. Gn 17:5
- 8 Finding him faithful of heart before you,
you made a covenant with him, Gn15:18f
to give him the land of the Canaanite, of the Hittite and Amorite,
of the Perizzite, Jebusite, Gergashite,
to him and his posterity.
And you kept your promise
because you are just.
- 9 You saw the distress of our fathers in Egypt, Ex2:23-24;
you heard their cry by the Sea of Reeds. 13:21
- 10 You worked portents and miracles against Pharaoh, Ex 7-12 against his servants and all the people of his land;
for you knew how they treated them with arrogance.
You won a reputation which you keep to this day.

good statutes and commandments;
- 14 you taught them to know Ex20:8+
your holy sabbath, laid down for them commandments (statutes) and Law through Moses your servant.

d. These assessors are prominent laymen.

e. 'who were Levites' 1 Esd. Vulg.; 'and the Levites' Hebr. The verse has been added by the Chronicler who credits the Levites with the ceremonial importance they enjoyed at a later date.

f. 'Ezra read' Greek, cf. v. 3; 'they read' Hebr.

g. 1 Esd omits 'Nehemiah'; Greek omits 'His Excellency'. Both are editorial additions.

h. Lv 23:33-36, 39-43 also puts the feast of Tabernacles in the 7th month; the feast lasts 8 days. But in Lv 23:40 the branches are used in the procession, whereas in Ne 8:15 they are for building shelters. According to Lv 23:27, 34, 39; Nb 29:12-38, the feast begins on the 15th of the 7th month. Our narrative says nothing of the Day of Atonement, Lv 16, which must have been celebrated (being on the 10th of the 7th month Lv 23:27) between the reading of the Law by Ezra and the feast of Tabernacles.

i. Text corr.; 'and they will announce and

j. Ho 12:10 seems to attest this feast in the 8th century. According to 2 Ch 7:8; 8:13 it was celebrated from the time of Solomon.

9 a. For the sin of mixed marriage. The narrative follows on Ezr 10:44. But only vv. 1-2 are part of the Memoirs of Ezra.

b. The penitential liturgy, Jl 1-2, included a lament, cf. Ps 74; 79; 83, and this chapter vv. 5b-37.

c. This gloss makes the gathering resemble the liturgical penitential gatherings of the Chronicler's day.

d. 'Binnui' corr.

e. 'our' Greek; 'your' Hebr. The Chronicler represents the Levites as addressing a liturgical invitation to the people and reciting the psalm that follows (probably taken from the liturgy of his own time). The psalm recalls Si 36:1-17.

And once more they cried to you and from heaven you heard them:
how often are you, so loving, to deliver them?

29 You admonished them to bring them back to your Law;
but they grew proud, they did not obey your commandments, they sinned against your ordinances

they shrugged their shoulders, they were obstinate, they would not obey.

but they would not listen.
You delivered them then into the hands of the natives of the countries.

31 But, greatly loving,
you did not make an end of them,
you did not forsake them,
for you are a gracious and a loving God.

32 Now therefore, our God, great and mighty God who must be feared,
maintaining your covenant and your kindness,

Furthermore, as regards deliveries of wood for burning on the altar of our God as is written in the Law, we have arranged, by drawing lots among the priests, Levites and people, that these deliveries are to be made at the Temple of our God by each family in turn at stated times every year.

We will no longer neglect the Temple of our God.

The repopulation policy of Nehemiah.^a Various lists

- 1 11 ...Then the leaders of the people settled in Jerusalem. The rest of the people drew lots: one man in ten was to come and live in Jerusalem, the holy city,^b while the remaining nine were to stay in their towns. •And the people blessed all those who volunteered to live in Jerusalem.^c

The Jewish population in Jerusalem^e

- 4 In Jerusalem there lived some of the sons of Judah and some of the sons of Benjamin.

Of the sons of Judah: Athaiah son of Uzziah, son of Zechariah, son of Amariah, son of Shephatiah, son of Mehalalel, of the descendants of Perez; Maaseiah son of Baruch, son of Col-hozeh, son of Hazaiah, son of Adaiah, son of Joiarib, son of Zechariah, descendant of Shelah. •The total number of the descendants of Perez living in Jerusalem was four hundred and sixty-eight adult men.

- 7 These are the sons of Benjamin: Sallu son of Meshullam, son of Joed, son of Pedaiah, son of Kolaiah, son of Maaseiah, son of Ithiel, son of Jeshaiiah, and his kinsmen, adult men: nine hundred and twenty-eight.

- 9 Joel son of Zichri was in charge of them, and Judah son of Hassenuah was second in command of the city.

- 10 Of the priests: Jedaiah son of Joiakim, son^f of •Seraiah, son of Hilkiah, son of Meshullam, son of Zadok, son of Meraioth, son of Ahitub, prefect of the Temple of God,^g •and his kinsmen who were responsible for the Temple liturgy: eight hundred and twenty-two; Adaiah son of Jeroham, son of Pelaliah, son of Amzi, son of Zechariah, son of Pashhur, son of Malchijah, •and his kinsmen, heads of families: two hundred and forty-two; and Amashai son of

10 a. There is clearly a relationship between 10:31f and ch. 13. During his second mission, described in ch. 13, Nehemiah must have corrected a certain number of religious abuses. To prevent their recurrence he has appealed to the community as a whole; we have here the official report of the proceedings. The Chronicler has linked this community gesture with the reading of the Law, ch. 8-9.

b. The report is continued in v. 29.

c. The list of signatories, vv. 2-28, interrupts the official report. Some names are corrected.

d. Family name of the high priest, 2 K 25:18f; 1 Ch 5:39f; Ezr 7:1.

e. Less severe than Ezr 10:44.

f. 'fruits of the soil' corr. following Ex 23:10.

g. V. 35 is to be read after v. 40ab.

h. Vv. 36-40 have been adjusted, in v. 37 and especially 38b-39 which harmonise the practice of the levitical tithe with the more recent text of Nb 18:21,24f. Adjustments of this kind are usual in texts concerned with legal usage.

i. The Hebr. adds 'and our contributions'.

11 a. The preparations for the repopulation of Jerusalem have been described in 7:4-72 with the old list of immigrants taken as the basis of the sunolkismos (cf. 7:4+); here the operation itself is briefly described. In Jerusalem there are to remain: the most prominent men, cf. 5:17 (among priests, Levites, laity); one man in ten, chosen by lot, volunteers.

b. The name is given to Jerusalem in Is 48:2; 52:1. Cf. Ne 11:18; Dn 9:24; Tb 13:9; Mt 4:5; 27:53; Ry 11:2. But the notion itself is older, cf. 2 S 5:9+.

c. Continued in vv. 20, 25a; but the Chronicler interrupts the narrative with documents from the archives.

d. V. 3 is a heading for vv. 4-36.

e. This list, taken from the Temple archives, goes back to the time of Nehemiah. A different version of it is given in 1 Ch 9:2f. Some names have been corrected from the versions and 1 Ch.

f. 'Joiakim, son' corr.; 'Joiarib Jachin' Hebr. Joiakim is the ancestor of the Maccabees, 1 M 2:1.

g. A title of the high priest, 2 Ch 31:10,13.

son of Bunni; •Shabbethai and Jozabad, the levitical leaders responsible for 16
the outside work of the Temple of God; •Mattaniah son of Mica, son of Zabdi, 17 son of Asaph,^h who directed the hymnsⁱ and, at prayer, intoned the thanksgiving; Bakbukiah, the second in rank among his kinsmen; Obadiah son of Shammua, son of Galal, son of Jeduthun. •The total number of Levites in the holy city: 18 two hundred and eighty-four.

The gatekeepers: Akkub, Talmon and their kinsmen, who kept watch at the 19 gates: one hundred and seventy-two.^j

Supplementary notes^k

The oblates lived at Ophel; Ziha and Gishpa were in charge of the oblates. 21
—The head of the Levites in Jerusalem was Uzzi son of Bani, son of Hashabiah, 22 son of Mattaniah, son of Mica; he belonged to the sons of Asaph who were responsible for the chanted parts of the liturgy in the Temple of God; •there 23 was a royal decree relating to the cantors, embodying regulations for their attendance day by day.—•Pethahiah son of Meshezabel, belonging to the sons 24 of Zerah son of Judah, was the king's commissioner for all such matters as concerned the people.

The rest of the Israelites, priests and Levites made their homes throughout 20
the towns of Judah, each man in his own inheritance, •and in the hamlets situated 25 in rural districts of their own.

The Jewish population outside Jerusalem^l

Some of the sons of Judah made their homes in Kiriath-arba and its outlying 26 villages, in Dibon and its outlying villages, in Jekabzeel and its outlying hamlets, 27 in Jeshua, Moladah, Beth-pelet, •Hazar-shual, in Beersheba and its villages, 28,29 in Ziklag, in Meconah and its villages, •in Enrimmon, Zorah, Jarmuth, •Zanoah, 30 Adullam and their hamlets, Lachish and its countryside, Azekah and its villages:
thus, they settled from Beersheba as far as the Valley of Hinnom.

Some of the sons of Benjamin made their homes in Geba,^m Michmash, Aija, 31 in Bethel and its villages, •Anathoth, Nob, Ananiah, •Hazor, Ramah, Gittaim, 32
Hadid, Zeboim, Neballat, •Lod and Ono, and the Valley of the Craftsmen. 33

Priests and Levites who returned under Zerubbabel and Jeshua^o

12 These are the priests and the Levites who came back with Zerubbabel son 1 of Shealtiel, and Jeshua:

Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra, •Amariah, Malluch, Hattush, •Shecaniah, Harim, 2 Meremoth, •Iddo, Ginnethoi, Abijah, •Mijamin, Maadiah, Bilgah, •Shemaiah; 3 also: Joiarib, Jedaiah, •Sallu, Amok, Hilkiyah, Jedaiah. 4,5 7a

And the Levites: Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, Mattaniah— 8 this last, with his kinsmen, directed the hymns of thanksgiving •while Bakbukiah, 9 Unno and their kinsmen in their respective orders formed an alternate choir.

These were the heads of the priests and of their kinsmen in the days of Jeshua. 7b

Genealogical list of high priests^b

Jeshua was the father of Joiakim, Joiakim father of Eliashib, Eliashib father 10 of Joiada, •Joiada father of Johanan, and Johanan father of Jaddua. 11

10:3-14; 12:1+ Priests and Levites in the time of the High Priest Joiakim^c

In the days of Joiakim the heads of the priestly families were: family of 12
Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah; •of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, 13

¹⁴ Jehohanan; •of Malluchi, Jonathan; of Shebaniah, Joseph; •of Harim, Adna; ¹⁵ of Meremoth, Helkai; •of Iddo, Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam; •of ¹⁸ of Shemaiah, Jehonathan; •also: of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi; •of ¹⁹ Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber; •of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethanel.

²² In the days of Eliashib, Joiada, Johanan and Jaddua, the heads of the priestly families^d had been recorded in the Book of the Chronicles^e up to the reign of Darius the Persian.^f

²³ The sons of Levi.

The heads of families were recorded in the Book of the Chronicles, but only up to the time of Johanan, grandson of Eliashib.

²⁴ The heads of the Levites: Hashabiah, Sherebiah, Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel; and their kinsmen forming an alternate choir for the hymns of praise and thanksgiving, in accordance with the ordinances of David the man of God, in ²⁵ corresponding groups, •these were: Mattaniah, Bakbukiah and Obadiah. The gatekeepers, Meshullam, Talmon and Akkub stood guard at the storehouses near the gates.^g

²⁶ These lived in the days of Joiakim son of Jeshua, son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor and of Ezra, priest and scribe.^h

The dedication of the wall of Jerusalemⁱ

²⁷ At the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem the Levites were sent for, wherever they lived, to come to Jerusalem: the dedication was to be celebrated joyfully
²⁸ with songs of thanksgiving, with cymbal, lute and lyre. •Accordingly the cantors, sons of Levi,^j assembled from the countryside round Jerusalem, from the villages
²⁹ of the Netophathites, •from Beth-gilgal, from the districts of Geba and Azmaveth; since the cantors had built themselves villages all round Jerusalem.
³⁰ And the priests and Levites purified themselves, then purified the people, the gates and the wall.^k

³¹ I then made the leaders of Judah come on to the top of the wall, and organized two great choirs. The first made its way^l along the top of the wall, right-handed, towards the Dung Gate; •bringing up the rear were Hoshaiiah

³³ Mijamin,^m Shemaiah and Jeremiah, •selected from the priests and carrying

h. The cantors have already become merged with the Levites, v. 22, but so far the gatekeepers have not. The guild of Asaph was probably the only one before the Exile, cf. Ezr 2:41; others were formed later (Heman, Merari).

i. 'the hymns' certain versions; 'the beginning' Hebr.

j. V. 20 is transposed to follow v. 24.

k. The first note about the 'oblates' (nethinim) may be of the same date as the preceding list. The second, concerning Uzzi, and the third, concerning Pethaiah, are more recent.

l. This list, attesting Jewish expansion as far as the Negeb, is probably of a later period, though still perhaps pre-exilic.

m. 'Some of the sons' corr.; 'The sons' Hebr. 'in Geba' corr.; 'from Geba onward' Hebr.

n. 'in Judah as well as in Benjamin' Rec. Luc.; 'groups in Judah (were joined) to Benjamin' Hebr.

12 a. These names, absent from Ezr 2:36-39, are those of priestly families of the line of Joiakim, successor to Joshua, cf. vv. 12-21. By this method of presentation, appealing to antiquity, the rights of the families are established. Some of the names are corrected.

b. From 520 to 405 (Darius II).

c. Therefore after 500. The names listed are found in the later, ch. 10, with three additional families. The list is followed by a note claiming a reliable source.

d. The Hebr. inserts at the beginning 'the Levites'. 'the heads of the priestly families' one MS; 'the heads of families and the priests' Hebr.

e. Official record of the Temple. 'the Book of the Chronicles up to' added by conj.

f. Darius II, died 405.

g. The cantors and gatekeepers are grouped with the Levites, cf. 11:17+.

h. The Chronicler represents these three as contemporaries.

i. Historically, the ceremony took place after 6:16, but the Chronicler makes it match Ezr 6:13-18 (dedication of the Temple). Thus two dedications conclude two epochs, one dominated by the figure of Zerubbabel, the other—as the Chronicler sees it—by Ezra and Nehemiah. One may reconstruct the ceremony thus: after the customary purifications two processions make their way along the top of the wall from the Gate of the Valley, one going S., the other N. They meet at the Temple for the closing ceremony of the feast. Each half of the procession is headed by a choir of priests who are followed by distinguished laymen. The Chronicler has interrupted the narrative with a list of priests of the first (vv. 33-36) and of the second (vv. 40-42) choir. He has also made Ezra figure in the procession.

trumpets; then Zechariah son of Jonathan, son of Shemaiah, son of Mattaniah, son of Micaiah, son of Zaccur, son of Asaph, •with his kinsmen, Shemaiah, 36 Azarel, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethanel, Judah, Hanani, carrying the musical instruments of David the man of God. And Ezra the scribe walked at their head. At the Fountain Gate they went straight on up, near the steps of the Citadel 37 of David, along the top of the wall and along the ascent of the Palaceⁿ of David as far as the Water Gate, on the east.

The second choir made its way left-handed; I followed it, with half the leaders 38 of the people, along the top of the wall, above the Tower of the Furnaces and as far as the wall of the Square,^o •then over the Gate of Ephraim,^p the Fish 39 Gate, the Tower of Hananel,^q as far as the Sheep Gate; they came to a halt at the Watch Gate.^r

The two choirs then took their places in the Temple of God. I had half of 40 the officials with me, •as well as the priests, Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, 41 Micaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, Hananiah, carrying trumpets, •also Maaseiah, 42 Shemaiah, Eleazar, Uzzi, Jehohanan, Malchijah, Elam and Ezer. The cantors sang under the direction of Jezrahiah. •There were great sacrifices offered that 43 day and the people rejoiced, God having given them good cause for rejoicing; the women and children rejoiced too, and the joy of Jerusalem could be heard from far away.

For the chambers intended for the stores, contributions, first-fruits and tithes, 44 supervisors were then appointed whose business it would be to collect in them those portions from the town lands^t awarded by the Law to the priests and Levites. For Judah rejoiced in the officiating priests and Levites. •It was they 45 who performed the liturgy of their God and the duties of purification—and the cantors and gatekeepers too—in accordance with the ordinances of David and his son Solomon. •For from ancient times, from the days of David and Asaph, 46 there had been guilds of cantors and canticles of praise and thanksgiving to God. 47 And so, in the days of Zerubbabel and in the days of Nehemiah, the whole of Israel used to give the cantors and gatekeepers their due portion for each day. They set aside for the Levites their sacred dues, and the Levites would set theirs aside for the sons of Aaron.

13 At that time they were reading from the Book of Moses to the people, 1 when they found this written in it, 'The Ammonite and the Moabite shall never be admitted to the assembly of God, •since they did not come to meet 2 the sons of Israel with bread and water. They hired Balaam against them to curse them,^a but our God turned the curse into a blessing.' •As soon as the people 3 had heard the Law they excluded all of foreign descent from Israel.^b

The second mission of Nehemiah

Now before this,^c Eliashib the priest^d had been appointed supervisor of the 4 chambers^e of the Temple of our God. A connection of Tobiah's, •he had 5 furnished a spacious chamber for him where the oblations, incense, utensils, tithes of corn, wine and oil had previously been kept, that is to say the portions^f of the Levites, cantors and gatekeepers, and what was set aside for the priests. While all this was going on I was away from Jerusalem, for in the thirty-second 6 year of Artaxerxes king of Babylon^g I had gone to see the king. But after some time I asked the king for permission to leave, •and returned to Jerusalem. It was 7 then that I heard the wicked thing that Eliashib had done for Tobiah, furnishing a chamber for him inside the court of the Temple of God. •This made me very 8 angry. I threw all Tobiah's household furniture out of the chamber, •gave 9 orders for the chambers to be purified, and had the utensils of the Temple of God, the oblations and the incense, all put back.

I also discovered that the portions of the Levites were not being delivered 10 and that they, the Levites and the cantors responsible for the liturgy, had all gone off home to their fields. •I reprimanded the officials. 'Why is the Temple of God deserted?' I asked. And I collected them^h together again and sent them back to their duties. •Then the whole of Judah brought the tithe of corn, wine and oil to the storehouses. •As supervisors of the storehouses I appointedⁱ Shelemiah the priest, Zadok the scribe, Pedaiah one of the Levites and, as their assistants, Hanan son of Zaccur, son of Mattaniah, since they were considered reliable; their duty was to make the distributions to their kinsmen. •Remember me for this, my God; do not blot out the pious deed I have done for the Temple of my God and for its liturgy.

In those days I saw people in Judah treading winepresses on the sabbath, and others taking sheaves of corn and loading them on donkeys with wine, grapes, figs and every kind of load which they meant to bring into Jerusalem on the sabbath day. I warned them not to sell the foodstuffs.^j •In Jerusalem itself, Tyrians who lived in the city were bringing in fish and every sort of merchandise to sell them on the sabbath day. •I reprimanded the authorities of Judah, 'What a wicked way to behave, profaning the sabbath day! •Did not your ancestors do just this, with the result that our God brought all this misery on us and on this city? Do you want to bring fresh wrath on Israel, by profaning the sabbath?' •So just before the sabbath^k as the shadows were falling on the gates of Jerusalem, I gave orders for the doors to be shut, and said, 'Do not open them again until the sabbath is over'. I stationed a few of my servants at the gates to see that no load was brought in on the sabbath day. •Once or twice merchants and traders in goods of all kinds spent the night outside Jerusalem, but I gave them this warning, 'Why are you spending the night by the wall? Do it again, and I will punish you.' After that, they did not come on the sabbath any more. •I ordered the Levites to purify themselves and to come and supervise the gates, so that the sabbath day might be kept holy. For this too remember me, my God, and as your mercy is great, so pity me.

At that time I again saw Jews who had married women from Ashdod, Ammon and Moab. •As regards their children, half of them spoke the language of Ashdod^l or the language of one of the other peoples, but could not speak the language of Judah. •I reprimanded them and called down curses on them; I struck several of them and tore out their hair and made them swear by God, 'You shall not give your daughters to their sons or take their daughters either for your sons or for yourselves. •Is this not how Solomon king of Israel sinned? Among all the nations there was never a king like him; he was loved by his God; God made him king of all Israel; and yet for him, foreign women were causes of sin. •Must we then hear it said that you too are committing this grave crime: playing traitor to our God by marrying foreign women?'

INTRODUCTION TO TOBIT, JUDITH AND ESTHER

In the Vulgate, the three Books of Tobit, Judith and Esther are placed after the historical books. Some important manuscripts of the Greek version put them after the wisdom writings. Together they constitute a small literary group with several distinctive characteristics of its own.

1. Their text is difficult to determine. Behind Tobit is a semitic original which is no longer extant. For the Vulgate St Jerome used a 'Chaldaean' (Aramaic) text now lost. A few Hebrew and Aramaic fragments of the book have been recently discovered near the Dead Sea. The Greek, Syriac and Latin translations between them represent four different recensions of the text, of which the two most important are, first, that of the Vaticanus and Alexandrinus codices and, second, that of Codex Sinaiticus and the Old Latin. Our translation follows this second recension, though use is made of the other textual witnesses.

The Hebrew original of Judith is also lost. The Greek texts take three widely divergent forms. The Vulgate presents yet another, very different, text; apparently Jerome merely revised an existing Latin translation with the help of an Aramaic paraphrase.

The Book of Esther has two forms: one short, the Hebrew; one long, in Greek. Of the Greek text there are two principal types: that of the current Greek Bible and that of the widely variant recension of Lucian of Antioch. The Greek version contains the following passages not found in the Hebrew: the dream of Mordecai, 1:1a-r, and its explanation, 10:3a-k; two edicts of Ahasuerus, 3:13a-g and 8:12a-v; the prayer of Mordecai, 4:17a-i, the prayer of Esther, 4:17k-z; a second account of Esther's appeal to Ahasuerus, 5:1a-f and 5:2a-b; an appendix explaining the origin of the Greek version, 10:3l. Jerome placed his translation of these passages after the translated Hebrew text (Vulg. 10:4-16:24); in our own translation they have been left where the Greek text has them, but in italics and with their own system of references.

2. All three books were admitted to the Canon at a late date. Tobit and Judith were not accepted by the Hebrew Bible and are numbered by Protestants among the Apocrypha. They are 'deuterocanonical', that is to say, only recognised by the Church after a certain hesitancy in the patristic period. But they have been read and quoted from early days and appear in the official canonical lists in the West from the time of the Roman Synod of 382 and, in the East, from 682 (the 'in Trullo' Council of Constantinople). The Greek passages of Esther also are deuterocanonical, their history being the same as that of Tobit and Judith. The status of the Hebrew Esther was still being discussed by the rabbis in the 1st century A.D., but the book has subsequently become very popular with Jews.

3. The books all belong to the same type of literature. These stories treat history and geography with a good deal of freedom. According to the Book of Tobit, Tobit was a young man when the kingdom was divided at the death of Solomon (931), Tb 1:4; he was deported with the tribe of Naphtali (734), Tb 1:5 and 10; his son did not die until after the fall of Nineveh (612), Tb 14:5. The same book makes Shalmeneser the immediate successor of Sennacherib, Tb 1:15, saying nothing of the reign of Sargon. Similarly, Rhages is said to be in the hill country, only two days' journey from Ecbatana in the plain, Tb 5:6; in fact the altitude of Ecbatana (over 6000 feet) was much greater than that of Rhages which, moreover, was nearly two hundred miles away. The Book of Esther is somewhat closer to history: the city of Susa is correctly described and certain Persian customs are accurately observed; Ahasuerus (Hebrew transcription of Xerxes) is a well-known historical figure and the delineation of his character agrees with what Herodotus says of him. On the other hand, it is strange that one of the tolerant Achmenid dynasty should agree to sign the order for a Jewish pogrom, and still stranger that he should authorise a massacre of his own subjects and that those 75,000 Persians should offer no resistance. Moreover, at the time indicated by the narrative, the queen of Persia and consort of Xerxes was Amestris; history leaves no room for either Vashti or Esther. And if Mordecai was indeed deported under Nebuchadnezzar, Est 2:6, he would have been one hundred and fifty years old by the reign of Xerxes.

The Book of Judith in particular shows a bland indifference to history and geography. The scene is set in the time of 'Nebuchadnezzar who reigned over the Assyrians in Nineveh', Jdt 1:1; but Nebuchadnezzar was king of Babylonia and Nineveh had been destroyed by Nabopolassar, his father. Despite this, the return from exile under Cyrus is regarded as having taken place already, Jdt 4:3; 5:19. And whereas Holofernes and Bagoas have Persian names, there are also obvious allusions to Greek customs, 3:7-8; 15:13. We may add that the itinerary of the army of Holofernes, 2:21-28, is a geographical impossibility. Even when Holofernes reaches Samaria where we are on more familiar ground, the place-names, though increasing in number, are largely unknown and have an unusual ring. Bethulia itself, the town round which the drama revolves, defies identification despite the apparent concern for details that should help us to locate it.

The only explanation of this surprising indifference is that the authors are not trying to write history. No doubt they build on actual events but we have no means of knowing what these were, since the superstructure conceals them. But it is precisely this superstructure that is the real work of the author and conveys his message. The important thing is to discover the exact purpose of each book and to extract the teaching contained in it.

The Book of Tobit is a domestic story. At Nineveh there lives a man named Tobit, exiled with his tribe of Naphtali, devout, law-abiding, charitable, and now blind. In Ecbatana lives his kinsman Raguel; this man's daughter Sarah has lost seven bridegrooms in succession, killed on the wedding night by the demon Asmodeus. Both Tobit and Sarah beg God to let them die; but God answers their prayers in his own way. He sends his angel Raphael who brings Tobit's son, Tobias, safely to Raguel, marries him to Sarah and gives him a cure for his father's blindness. It is an edifying story, in which the emphasis falls on almsgiving and duties towards the dead; true family life is shown at its best; the ideal of marriage anticipates Christian teaching. The divine benevolence is at once revealed and hidden in the angel Raphael, the agent of God. That this providence is with us, day by day, is the lesson of the book.

Tobit is modelled on biblical narratives, especially on those of the patriarchs in Genesis; as a work of literature its place is between Job and Esther, between Zechariah and Daniel. There are points of contact with the Wisdom of Ahikar (cf. Tb 1:22; 2:10; 11:18; 14:10), an apocryphal work which, basically, goes back at least to the 5th century B.C. The Book of Tobit was written among the Jews of the Dispersion, possibly in Egypt, between the 4th and 5th centuries B.C.

The Book of Judith is the story of a victory won by the chosen people over its enemies, thanks to the intervention of a woman. The tiny Jewish nation faces the mighty army of Holofernes whose ambition is to lay the whole world at the feet of Nebuchadnezzar and to destroy all other religions but that of the deified Nebuchadnezzar. The Jews are besieged in Bethulia; the water supply has failed and they are on the point of surrender. At this stage Judith appears, a beautiful young widow, intelligent, devout, resolute; she first overcomes the cowardice of her own people and finally the Assyrian army itself. She rebukes the leading men of the city for their lack of faith in God; she then falls to prayer and, having duly adorned herself, leaves Bethulia and is led into the presence of Holofernes, on whom she exercises all her charm and wit. Once left alone with this drunken braggart, she cuts off his head. The Assyrians, panic-stricken, take to their heels and the Jews sack their camp. The people sing the praises of Judith and go to Jerusalem for a solemn thanksgiving.

The author seems deliberately to have defied history to distract the reader's attention from the historical context and focus it exclusively on the religious conflict and outcome. The narrative is neatly put together and has a close affinity with apocalyptic writings. Holofernes, the henchman of Nebuchadnezzar, is the incarnation of the powers of evil. Judith (her name means 'the Jewess') represents the cause of God, that is to say, of Jewry. This cause is apparently forlorn, but God makes use of the weak hands of a woman to procure his triumph and his chosen people go in triumph to Jerusalem. This book has clear points of contact with Daniel, Ezekiel and Joel; the action takes place on the plain of Esdraelon near the plain of Armageddon, where St John later places the great eschatological battle of Revelation, Rv 16:16. Judith's triumph is the reward of prayer and exact observance of the rules of legal purity; yet the horizon of the book is not narrowly nationalist: the safety of Jerusalem is assured at Bethulia, in that very Samaria so hated by all 'rightminded' Jews, and the religious significance of the struggle is expressed by Achior, who is an Ammonite, Jdt 5:5-21, and is later converted to the true God, Jdt 14:5-10.

The book was written in Palestine, in the Greek period, at the end of the 2nd, or beginning of the 1st century B.C.

The Book of Esther, like that of Judith, tells of the deliverance of the nation by the actions of a woman. The Jews settled in Persia are threatened with extermination by Aman, a hostile and all-powerful vizir, and are saved by Esther, a young Jewess who has become queen, and who acts on the advice of her uncle, Mordecai. There is a complete reversal of situation: Aman is hanged, Mordecai assumes his position, the Jews massacre their enemies. To commemorate this triumph the feast of Purim is instituted and the Jews are instructed to celebrate it every year.

This story illustrates the hatred which the Jews experienced in ancient times, as a result of their unique way of life which brought them into conflict with their autocratic rulers (compare the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes). Their exaggerated nationalism was no more than a defensive weapon. The blood-thirstiness of the book shocks us, but we should remember that it pre-dates the Christian revelation. We must also remember literary conventions: the harem intrigues and the massacres serve to dramatise a thesis; the thesis is a religious one. The promotion of Mordecai and Esther and the rescue resulting from it recall the story of Daniel, and more particularly that of Joseph, first oppressed and later elevated for the saving of his people. In the Genesis story of Joseph, God makes no outward manifestation of his power, yet directs events. In the Hebrew book of Esther, similarly, though God's name is not mentioned his providence governs every factor in the drama. The actors know it, and trust implicitly in God to work out his saving plan even if his chosen human instruments falter, cf. Est 4:13-17, which gives the key to the book. The Greek additions are more religious in tone (they provide all the passages from Esther found in the liturgy) but they only state explicitly what the Hebrew author left to his reader's intelligence.

The Greek version was in existence in 114 B.C. when it was sent to Egypt to authenticate the feast of Purim, Est 10:3/ and note. The Hebrew text is earlier; in 160 B.C., according to 2 M 15:36, the Palestinian Jews were celebrating a 'Day of Mordecai', which presupposes that the story, and probably the book, of Esther were well known. The book may therefore be assigned to the end of the Persian, or beginning of the hellenistic period. That it was connected with the feast of Purim originally is doubtful: Est 9:20-32 is written in a different style and reads like an addition. The origin of the feast itself is obscure, and it is possible that the book came to be connected with it later (2 M 15:36 does not use the term 'Purim' but 'Day of Mordecai') to give it an historical basis.

TOBIT^a

1 The tale of Tobit^b son of Tobiel, son of Ananiel, son of Aduel, son of Gabael, 2 of the lineage of Asiel and tribe of Naphtali. •In the days of Shalmaneser,^c king of Assyria, he was exiled from Thisbe, which is south of Kedesh-Naphtali in Upper Galilee, above Hazor, some distance to the west, north of Shephat.

I. TOBIT THE EXILE

3 I, Tobit, have walked in paths of truth and in good works all the days of my life.^d I have given much in alms to my brothers and fellow countrymen, exiled 4 like me to Nineveh in the country of Assyria. •In my young days, when I still was at home in the country of Israel, the whole tribe of Naphtali my ancestor broke away from the House of David and from Jerusalem. Yet this was the city chosen out of all the tribes of Israel for their sacrifices; in this the Temple—God's 5 dwelling place—had been built and hallowed for all generations to come. •But all my brothers and the House of Naphtali offered sacrifice to the calf that Jeroboam the king of Israel had made at Dan, on the mountains of Galilee.

6 Often I was quite alone in making the pilgrimage to Jerusalem, fulfilling the law that binds all Israel perpetually. I would hurry to Jerusalem with the first 7 yield of fruits and beasts, the tithe of cattle and the sheep's first shearings. •I would give these to the priests, the sons of Aaron, for the altar. To the Levites ministering at Jerusalem I would give my tithe of wine and corn, olives, pomegranates and other fruits. Six years in succession I took the second tithe in money 8 and went and paid it at Jerusalem. •I gave the third to orphans and widows and to the strangers who live among the Israelites; I brought it them as a gift every three years. When we ate, we obeyed both the ordinances of the Law of Moses and the exhortations of Deborah, the mother of our father Ananiel; for my 9 father had died and left me an orphan. •When I came to man's estate, I married a woman from our kinsmen whose name was Anna; she bore me a son whom I called Tobias.

10 When the banishment into Assyria came, I was taken away and went to 11 Nineveh. All my brothers and the men of my race ate the food of the heathen, 12,13 but for my part I would not eat the food of the heathen.^e •And because I had

1 a. In many places the Vulg. Latin text differs considerably from the Greek which is followed by our translation (see Introduction). The verse numbering is therefore often different. The most important additions from the Vulg. will be mentioned in the notes, and the verse numbering of the Vulg. will be found in the margin whenever it differs from the Greek and when the Vulg. text is in agreement (at least in substance) with the Greek text.

b. The father's name is Tobeith or Tobeit in Greek, written Tobit in English; the son's Tobeias or Tobias.

The other proper names in the book vary considerably in the MSS and versions.

c. A stylised summary of the historical setting. See Introduction.

d. Tobit's piety lies not so much in the thoughtful study of the Law, cf. Ps 119, etc., as in practising the good works the Law inculcates: almsgiving, burial of the dead, pilgrimage, tithe-paying, etc.

e. Prepared without regard for the Law's injunctions.

kept faith with my God with my whole heart, •the Most High granted me the ¹³

 I used to travel to Media, where I transacted business on his behalf; and ¹⁶
 I deposited sacks of silver worth ten talents with Gabael, the brother of Gabrias, at Rhages in Media.

On the death of Shalmaneser his son Sennacherib succeeded; the roads into ¹⁵
 Media were barred, and I could no longer go there. •In the days of Shalmaneser ¹⁸
 Jb31:16-20 I had often given alms to the brothers of my race; •I gave my bread to the hungry ¹⁶ and clothes to the naked; and I buried, when I saw them, the bodies of my ¹⁷ countrymen thrown over the walls of Nineveh. ²⁰

I also buried those who were killed by Sennacherib (for when he retreated ¹⁸ from Judaea in disorder, after the King of heaven had punished his blasphemies, ²¹ in his anger Sennacherib killed a great number of Israelites). So I stole their bodies to bury them; Sennacherib looked for them and could not find them.
 A Ninevite went and told the king it was I who had buried them secretly. When ¹⁹
 I knew that the king had been told about me and saw myself being hunted by ²² men who would put me to death, I was afraid and fled. •All my goods were ²⁰ seized; they were all confiscated by the treasury; nothing was left me but my wife Anna and my son Tobias.

Less than forty days after this, the king was murdered by his two sons, who ²¹ then fled to the mountains of Ararat. His son Esarhaddon succeeded. Ahikar, ²⁴ the son of my brother Anael, was appointed chancellor of the exchequer for the kingdom and given the main ordering of affairs. •Ahikar then interceded for ²² me and I was allowed to return to Nineveh, since Ahikar had been chief cupbearer, keeper of the signet, administrator and treasurer under Sennacherib, king of Assyria, and Esarhaddon had kept him in office. He was a relation of mine;
 he was my nephew.

II. TOBIT BLINDED

Ex23:14+ 2 In the reign of Esarhaddon, therefore, I returned home, and my wife Anna ¹ was restored to me with my son Tobias. At our feast of Pentecost (the feast ² of Weeks) there was a good dinner. I took my place for the meal; •the table ² was brought to me and various dishes were brought. Then I said to my son Tobias, 'Go, my child, and seek out some poor, loyal-hearted man among our brothers exiled in Nineveh, and bring him to share my meal. I will wait until you come back, my child.' •So Tobias went out to look for some poor man ³ among our brothers, but he came back again and said, 'Father!' I answered, 'What is it, my child?' He went on, 'Father, one of our nation has just been murdered; he has been strangled and then thrown down in the market place; he is there still'. •I sprang up at once, left my meal untouched, took the man ⁴ from the market place and laid him in one of my rooms, waiting until sunset to bury him. •I came in again and washed myself and ate my bread in sorrow, ⁵ remembering the words of the prophet Amos concerning Bethel: ⁶

Am 8:10

Your feasts will be turned to mourning, and all your songs to lamentation.

And I wept. When the sun was down, I went and dug a grave and buried him. ⁷
 My neighbours laughed and said, 'See! He is not afraid any more.' (You must ⁸ remember that a price had been set on my head earlier for this very thing.)
 'The time before this he had to flee, yet here he is, beginning to bury the dead again.'

That night I took a bath; then I went into the courtyard and lay down by the ⁹ courtyard wall. Since it was hot I left my face uncovered. •I did not know ¹⁰ that there were sparrows in the wall above my head; their hot droppings fell ¹¹ into my eyes. White spots then formed, which I was obliged to have treated by the doctors. But the more ointments they tried me with, the more the spots blinded me, and in the end I became blind altogether. I remained without sight four years; all my brothers were distressed; and Ahikar provided for my upkeep for two years, till he left for Elymais.^a

¹¹ My wife Anna then undertook woman's work; she would spin wool and take ¹⁹ cloth to weave;^b she used to deliver whatever had been ordered from her and then receive payment. Now on March the seventh she finished a piece of work ²⁰ and delivered it to her customers. They paid her all that was due, and into the ²¹ bargain presented her with a kid for a meal. When the kid came into my house, it began to bleat. I called to my wife and said, 'Where does this creature come from? Suppose it has been stolen! Quick, let the owners have it back; we have ¹⁴ no right to eat stolen goods.' She said, 'No, it was a present given me over and above my wages'. I did not believe her, and told her to give it back to the owners ²² (I blushed at this in her presence). Then she answered, 'What about your own alms? What about your own good works? f. The reference to Ahikar, Tb 1:22; 2:10; 11:18; 14:10 (cf. Jdt 5:5+) connects the story of Tobit with the Book (or Wisdom) of Ahikar, an ancient work known to us in various forms and languages. The story it tells provides a setting for two collections of wisdom sayings which are echoed in Tb and Si. Ahikar the sage, chancellor to Sennacherib and Esarhaddon, kings of Assyria, has educated his nephew Nadab in the hope that he will succeed him; this situation introduces the first series of maxims. The ungrateful Nadab, now chancellor, has his benefactor condemned to death. Ahikar escapes death by a subterfuge and goes into hiding. Esarhaddon, commanded by Pharaoh to produce a sage capable of solving his challenges, regrets the loss of Ahikar. The old chancellor emerges from his hiding place, successfully takes up Pharaoh's challenge, is restored to office and punishes his nephew; his rebuke of Nadab constitutes the second series of maxims.

2 a. A Vulg. addition, vv. 12-18, compares the patience of Tobit with that of Job. Tobit replies to the reproaches of his kinsfolk: 'Do not talk like that, we are sons of the holy ones and we await the life that God will grant to those who never withdraw their faith in him'.

b. 'she would spin... weave' added with Vet. Lat.

c. The Vulg. (v. 23) underlines the parallel between Anna and the wife of Job.

3 a. Om. 'and those of my ancestors'.

I have been reviled without a cause and I am distressed beyond measure.

'Lord, I wait for the sentence you will give to deliver me from this affliction.
Let me go away to my everlasting home;
do not turn your face from me, O Lord.
For it is better to die than still to live in the face of trouble that knows no pity;
I am weary of hearing myself traduced.'

III. SARAH

It chanced on the same day that Sarah the daughter of Raguel, who lived in 7
Media at Ecbatana, also heard insults from one of her father's maids. •You must 8 know that she had been given in marriage seven times, and that Asmodeus,^b that worst of demons, had killed her bridegrooms one after another before ever they had slept with her as man with wife. The servant-girl said, 'Yes, you kill your bridegrooms yourself. That makes seven already to whom you have been given, and you have not once been in luck yet.' •Just because your bridegrooms 9 have died, that is no reason for punishing us. Go and join them, and may we be spared the sight of any child of yours!' •That day, she grieved, she sobbed, and 10 went up to her father's room intending to hang herself. But then she thought, 'Suppose they blamed my father! They will say, "You had an only daughter whom you loved, and now she has hanged herself for grief". I cannot cause my father a sorrow which would bring down his old age to the dwelling of the dead.^a I should do better not to hang myself, but to beg the Lord to let me die and not live to hear any more insults.' •And at this, by the window with outstretched 11 arms she said this prayer:

'You are blessed, O God of mercy!
May your name be blessed for ever,
and may all things you have made bless you everlastingly.

'And now, I lift up my face and to you I turn my eyes.
Let your word deliver me from earth;
I can hear myself traduced no longer.

'O Lord, you know that I have remained pure;
no man has touched me;
I have not dishonoured your name or my father's name
in this land of exile.

'I am my father's only daughter,
he has no other child as heir;
he has no brother at his side,
nor has he any kinsman left for whom I ought to keep myself.

'Already I have lost seven husbands;
why should I live any longer?
If it does not please you to take my life,
then look on me with pity;
I can hear myself traduced no longer.'^c

 25 spots from the eyes of Tobit, so that he might see God's light with his own eyes; and he was to give Sarah, the daughter of Raguel, as bride to Tobias son of Tobit, and to rid her of Asmodeus, that worst of demons. For it was to Tobias before all other suitors that she belonged by right. Tobit was coming back from the courtyard into the house at the same moment as Sarah, the daughter of Raguel, was coming down from the upper room. 4:12-13; 6:12 +

IV. TOBIAS

1 4 The same day, Tobit remembered the silver that he had left with Gabael
 2 at Rhages in Media and thought, 'I have come to the point of praying for 14:3
 death; I should do well to call my son Tobias and tell him about the money 3 before I die'. He summoned his son Tobias and told him:
 'When I die, give me an honourable burial. Honour your mother, and never abandon her all the days of your life. Do all that she wants, and give her no reason 4 for sorrow. Remember, my child, all the risks she ran for your sake when you 14:12 5 were in her womb. And when she dies, bury her at my side in the same grave.
 6 'My child, be faithful to the Lord all your days. Never entertain the will to sin or to transgress his laws. Do good works all the days of your life, never 6 follow ways that are not right; for if you act in truthfulness,^a you will be 13:6 successful in all your actions, as all men are if they practise what is right. Jn 3:21 7 'Set aside part of your goods for almsgiving. Never turn your face from any Ed 4:15
 8 poor man and God will never turn his from you. Measure your alms by what 12:8-10
 9 you have; if you have much, give more; if you have little, give less, but do not Jb 31:16
 10 be mean in giving alms. By doing so, you will lay up for yourself a great treasure Dt 15:7-8, 11
 11 for the day of necessity. For almsgiving delivers from death and saves men Pr 19:17
 12 from passing down to darkness. Alms is a most effective offering for all those Si 4:1-6 who give it in the presence of the Most High. I Jn 3:17
 13 'My child, avoid all loose conduct. Choose a wife of your father's stock. Mt 6:20p
 Do not take a foreign wife outside your father's tribe, because we are the sons of Gn 24:3-4; the prophets. Remember Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, our ancestors from 28:1-2 the beginning. All of them took wives from their own kindred, and they were Jg 14:3 13 blessed in their children, and their race will inherit the earth. You, too, my child, 6:12 + must prefer your own brothers; never presume to despise your brothers, the sons Gn 11:31; 14 and daughters of your people; choose your wife from among them. For pride 25:20; brings ruin and much worry; idleness causes need and poverty, for the mother of 29:15-30 famine is idleness.
 14 'Do not keep back until next day the wages of those who work for you; pay Lv 19:13
 15 them at once. If you serve God you will be rewarded. Be careful, my child, Dt 24:15 16 in all you do, well-disciplined in all your behaviour. Do to no one what you Mt 7:12 would not want done to you. Do not drink wine to the point of drunkenness; Lk 6:31 do not let excess be your travelling companion.

b. 'Asmodeus' probably means 'the destroyer', cf. the destroying angel of 2 S 24:16; Ws 18:25; Rv 9:11. Asmodeus recurs in the Testament of Solomon (where again he is the enemy of the marriage act) and in post-biblical Judaism; some think Asmodeus is related to Aesma, a demon of the Parsees.

c. 'you have not been in luck'; var. 'you have not borne the name of'. Sarah is under an evil spell which brings death on her husbands.

d. A recurring formula in the story of Joseph.

e. The prayer ends rather differently in Vulg.: '18 If I consented to take a husband it was not out of lust but out of awe for you. 19 So then, either I was not worthy of them or perhaps they were not worthy of me. Or else you had another husband in mind for me? 20 Your designs are beyond man's reach, 21 but all who revere you know that if they have been tested they will be crowned; if in distress, delivered; if punished, free to come to your mercy. 22 For you take no pleasure in our fall; but after the storm you bring the calm, after tears and weeping you give abounding joy...'

f. Raphael, the protecting angel sent to Tobit and Sarah, has come from God's presence where he has offered their prayers, 12:12, 15. Cf. 5:4+.

4 a. Lit. 'if you do the truth'; Sin. 'those who do...'. Vv. 7-19 are lacking in the Greek Codex Sinaiticus and have been restored, following Vet. Lat., Vat., and Syr.

V. THE FELLOW TRAVELLER OF TOBIAS

5 Tobias then answered his father Tobit, 'Father, I will do everything you have 1 told me. •But how am I to recover the money from him? He does not know 2 me, nor I him. What token am I to give him for him to believe me and hand me over the silver? And besides, I do not know what roads to take for this journey into Media.' •Then Tobit answered his son Tobias, 'Each of us set his 3 signature to a note which I cut in two, so that each could keep half of it. I took one piece, and put the other with the silver. To think it was twenty years ago I left this silver in his keeping! And now, my child, find some trustworthy man 4 to travel with you—we will pay him for his time until you arrive back—and then go and collect the money from Gabael.'

3:17+ Tobias went out to look for a man who knew the way to go with him to 5
 Dn 3:49; Media. Outside he found Raphael the angel^a standing facing him (though he 6
 6:27 did not guess he was an angel of God). •He said, 'Where do you come from, 7 Heb 1:14 friend?' The angel replied, 'I am one of your brother Israelites; I have come to these parts to look for work'. Tobias asked, 'Do you know the road to Media?'
 The other replied, 'Certainly I do. I have been there many times; I know all 8 the ways by heart. I have often been to Media and stayed with Gabael, one of our kinsmen who lives at Rhages in Media. It usually takes two full days to get from Ecbatana to Rhages; Rhages lies in the mountains, and Ecbatana is in the middle of the plain.'^b •Tobias said, 'Wait for me, friend, while I go and 9 tell my father; I need you to come with me; I will pay you for your time'. •The 10 other replied, 'Good; I will wait; but do not be long'.

Tobias went in and told his father that he had found one of their brother 9 Israelites. And the father said, 'Fetch him in; I want to find out about his family 10 and tribe. I must see if he is going to be a reliable companion for you, my child.'
 So Tobias went out and called him. 'Friend,' he said 'my father wants you.'

The angel came into the house; Tobit greeted him, and the other answered, 10 wishing him happiness. Tobit replied, 'Can I ever be happy again? I am a blind 11 man; I no longer see the light of heaven; I am sunk in darkness like the dead 12 who see the light no more. I am a man buried alive; I hear men speak but cannot see them.' The angel said, 'Take comfort; before long God will heal you. Take 13 comfort.' Tobit said, 'My son Tobias wishes to go to Media. Will you join 14 him as his guide? Brother, I will pay you.' He replied, 'I am willing to go with him; I know all the ways; I have often been to Media, I have crossed all its plains and mountains, and I know all the roads'. •Tobit said, 'Brother, what 11 family and what tribe do you belong to? Will you tell me, brother?' •'What 12 does my tribe matter to you?' the angel said. Tobit said, 'I want to be quite sure 13 whose son you are and what your name is'. •The angel said, 'I am Azarias, son 14 of Tobit'.

14 of the great Ananias, one of your kinsmen'. •'Welcome and greetings, brother!
15 Do not be offended at my wanting to know the name of your family; I find you 16 are my kinsman, of a good and honourable line. I know Ananias and Jathan, the two sons of the great Shemaiah. They used to go to Jerusalem with me;
we have worshipped together there, and they have never strayed from the right path. Your brothers are worthy men; you come of good stock; welcome.'

15 He went on, 'I engage you at a drachma a day, with your expenses, like my 16 own son. Complete the journey with my son, •and I will go beyond the agreed 20 wage.' The angel replied, 'I will complete the journey with him. Do not be afraid.
On the journey outward all will be well; on the journey back all will be well; 17 the road is safe.' •Tobit said, 'Blessings on you, brother!' Then he turned to his son. 'My child,' he said 'prepare what you need for the journey, and set off with 21 your brother. May God in heaven protect you abroad and bring you both back to me safe and sound! May his angel go with you and protect you, my child!'

Gn 24:7,40
Ex 23:20+

22 Tobias left the house to set out and kissed his father and mother. Tobit said, 18 'A happy journey!' •His mother burst into tears and said to Tobit, 'Why must 23 you send my child away? Is he not the staff of our hands, with his errands to 19 and fro for us? •Surely money is not the only thing that matters? Surely it is not 20 as precious as our child?' •The way of life God had already given us was good 25 enough.' •He said, 'Do not think such thoughts. Going away and coming back, 21 all will be well with our child. On the day of his homecoming you will see for yourself how all is still well with him. Do not think such thoughts; do not worry 22 on their account, my sister.^d •A good angel will go with him; he will have a good 27 journey and come back to us well and happy. 6 And she dried her tears.

VI. THE FISH

2 The boy left with the angel, and the dog followed behind. The two walked on,
2 and when the first evening came they camped beside the Tigris. •The boy had gone down to the river to wash his feet, when a great fish leapt out of the water 4 and all but swallowed his foot. The boy gave a shout •and the angel said, 'Catch 3,4 the fish; do not let it go'. The boy mastered the fish and pulled it on to the bank.
5 The angel said, 'Cut it open; take out the gall, the heart and the liver; set these aside and throw the entrails away, for the gall and heart and liver have curative 6 properties'. •The boy cut the fish open and took out the gall and heart and liver.
He fried part of the fish for his meal and kept some for salting. Then they walked on again together until they were nearly in Media.

7 Then the boy asked the angel this question, 'Brother Azarias, what can the 8 fish's heart, liver and gall cure?' •He replied, 'You burn the fish's heart and liver, and their smoke is used in the case of a man or woman plagued by a demon 9 or evil spirit; any such affliction disappears for good, leaving no trace. •As regards the gall, this is used as an eye ointment for anyone having white spots on his eyes; after using it, you only have to blow on the spots to cure them.'

10 They entered Media and had nearly reached Ecbatana •when Raphael said

b. This injunction is taken from Ahikar, cf. 1:21+. But Tobit, apparently, advises his son not to make offerings to the dead (a practice condemned by the Law) but to give alms in memory of them.

c. 'he lifts up' Vet. Lat.

5 a. With the exception of 'the angel of Yahweh' or 'the angel of God', which in the earliest texts are phrases used to express the visible manifestation of God, cf. Gn 16:7+, the angels are creatures distinct from God, members of his heavenly court, called 'sons of God', 'holy ones', 'host of heaven'; 1 K 22:19; Ps 29:1; 148:2; Ne 9:6. The prologue of Job evokes the angelic gathering, Jb 1:6; 8:1, from which God sends his messengers (the meaning of the word 'angel') down to earth. Some are destroying angels, cf. Ex 12:23+; 2 K 19:35; Ezk 9:1; Ps 78:49, others guardian angels, either of nations or of individuals, cf. Ex 23:20+; Dn 10:13+. Raphael is sent as guide to Tobias, cf. Gn 24:7. On the mediatory function of angels in prophecy, see Ezk 40:3+. The doctrine is further developed in Judaism and in the N.T.

b. The geography is inexact, cf. Introduction. The author is not concerned with detail; he merely wishes to set his story in a distant land.

c. One of many translations of this difficult verse.

d. The same term is used of wife or bride in 8:4,7,21 and in Sg 4:9f; 5:1,2; cf. 8:1.

to the boy, 'Brother Tobias'. 'Yes?' he answered. The angel went on, 'Tonight we shall be staying with Raguel, who is a kinsman of yours. He has a daughter called Sarah, •but apart from Sarah he has no other son or daughter. Now you 12 3:17:17:13 are her next of kin;^a she belongs to you before anyone else and you may claim her father's inheritance. She is a thoughtful, courageous and very lovely girl, and her father loves her dearly. ^b •You have the right to marry her. Listen, brother; 13 this very evening I will speak about the girl to her father and arrange for her to be betrothed to you, and when we come back from Rhages we can celebrate the marriage. I assure you, Raguel has no right whatever to refuse you or to betroth her to anyone else. That would be asking for death, as prescribed in the Book of Moses, once he was aware that kinship gives you the pre-eminent right to marry his daughter. So listen, brother. This very evening we will speak about the girl and ask for her hand in marriage. When we come back from Rhages we will fetch her and take her home with us.'

Tobias answered Raphael, 'Brother Azarias, I have been told that she has 14 already been given in marriage seven times and that each time her bridegroom has died in the bridal room. He died the same night as he entered her room; and I have heard people say it was a demon that killed them, •and this makes 15 me a little afraid. He does no harm to her, of course, because he loves her;^c but as soon as a man tries to approach her, he kills him. I am my father's only son, 3:10+ and I have no wish to die; I shrink from causing my father and mother a grief that would bring them to the grave; they have no other son to bury them.' •The 16 4:12-13 angel said,^d 'Are you going to forget your father's advice? After all, he urged you to choose a wife from your father's family. Listen then, brother. Do not worry about the demon; take her. This very evening, I promise, she will be given you as your wife. •Then once you are in the bridal room, take the heart and liver of the fish and lay a little of it on the burning incense. The reek will rise, the demon will smell it and flee, and there is no danger that he will ever be found 18 near the girl again. Then, before you sleep together, first stand up, both of you, and pray. Ask the Lord of heaven to grant you his grace and protection. Do not Gn24:44 be afraid; she was destined for you from the beginning, and it is you who will save her. She will follow you, and I pledge my word she will give you children who will be like brothers to you. Do not hesitate.' And when Tobias heard Raphael say this, when he understood that Sarah was his sister, a kinswoman of his father's family, he fell so deeply in love with her that he could no longer call his heart his own.

VII. RAGUEL

7 As they entered Ecbatana, Tobias said, 'Brother Azarias, take me at once 1 to our brother Raguel's'. And he showed him the way to the house of Raguel, whom they found sitting beside his courtyard door. They greeted him first, and he replied, 'Welcome and greetings, brothers'. And he took them into his house. He said to his wife Edna, 'How like my brother Tobit this young man is!' •Edna 2 3 asked them where they came from; they said, 'We are sons of Naphtali exiled in Nineveh'. •'Do you know our brother Tobit?' 'Yes.' 'How is he?' •'He is 4
 5 still alive and he is well.' And Tobias added, 'He is my father'. •Raguel leapt 6
 Gn 29:4-6; 43:27-30 to his feet and kissed him and wept. •Then finding words, he said, 'Blessings 7
 Gn 33:4; 45:14 Lk 15:20 on you, child! You are the son of a noble father. How sad it is that someone so virtuous and full of good deeds should have gone blind!' He fell on the neck of his kinsman Tobias and wept. •And his wife Edna wept for him, and so did 8 his daughter Sarah. •Raguel killed a sheep from the flock, and they gave them 9 a warmhearted welcome.

They washed and bathed and sat down to table. Then Tobias said to Raphael, 'Brother Azarias, will you ask Raguel to give me my sister Sarah?' •Raguel 10

- overheard the words, and said to the young man, 'Eat and drink, and make the most of your evening; no one else has the right to take my daughter Sarah—no one but you, my brother. In any case I, for my own part, am not at liberty to give her to anyone else, since you are her next of kin. However, my boy, I must
- 11 be frank with you: •I have tried to find a husband for her seven times among our kinsmen, and all of them have died the first evening, on going to her room. But for the present, my boy, eat and drink; the Lord will grant you his grace and peace.' Tobias spoke out, 'I will not hear of eating and drinking till you have come to a decision about me'. Raguel answered,^a 'Very well. Since, as prescribed by the Book of Moses, she is given to you, heaven itself decrees she shall be yours. I therefore entrust your sister to you. From now you are her brother and she is your sister. She is given to you from today for ever. The Lord of heaven favour you tonight, my child, and grant you his grace and peace.'
- 12 Raguel called for his daughter Sarah, took her by the hand and gave her to Tobias with these words, 'I entrust her to you; the law and the ruling recorded in the Book of Moses assign her to you as your wife. Take her; take her home to your father's house with a good conscience. The God of heaven grant you
- 13 a good journey in peace.' •Then he turned to her mother and asked her to fetch
- 16 him writing paper. He drew up the marriage contract, how he gave his daughter as bride to Tobias according to the ordinance in the Law of Moses.
- 14,15 After this they began to eat and drink. •Raguel called his wife Edna and 17,18 said, 'My sister, prepare the second room and take her there'. •She went and 19 made the bed in this room as he had ordered, and took her daughter to it. She
- 20 wept over her, then wiped away her tears and said, 'Courage, daughter! May the Lord of heaven turn your grief to joy! Courage, daughter!' And she went out.

VIII. THE GRAVE

- 1 8 When they had finished eating and drinking and it seemed time to go to bed,
- 2 the young man was taken from the dining room to the bedroom. •Tobias remembered Raphael's advice; he went to his bag, took the fish's heart and liver
- 3 out of it and put some on the burning incense. •The reek of the fish distressed the demon, who fled through the air to Egypt.^a Raphael pursued him there, and bound and shackled him at once.

6 a. In conformity with the patriarchal custom of marriage within the clan, cf. 4:12-13 and the story of the marriage of Isaac in Gn 24. (The levirate law, Dt 25:5+, possibly derives from this custom.) For the tribes settled in Palestine this practice preserved the tribal boundaries established after the conquest of Canaan, cf. Nb 36. In the Dispersion, this survived in the notion of keeping the family goods within the family and the determination to remain true to the ancestral law of Israel.

b. 'loves her dearly'; var. 'is handsome'.

c. Om. 'because he loves her'.

d. The conclusion of the dialogue takes a different form in Vulg. '16 Then the angel Raphael said to him, "Listen and I will show you those whom the demon has power to overcome. 17 They are those who at the time of their marriage put God out of their thoughts and so abandon themselves to their instincts that they have no more reason than horse or mule [Ps 32:9; cf. Rm 1:21-26]; the demon is stronger than these. 18 But when you take your bride, spend three days continently, in praying with her. 19 On the first night, the demon will be put to flight when you burn the liver of the fish. 20 On the second night, you will be admitted to the company of the holy patriarchs. On the third night, you will be so blessed that healthy children will be born to you both. 22 When the third night is over, and with the fear of the Lord in your heart, take the maiden for your own, moved less by passion than by the love of children, so that you may win for your children the blessing of Abraham's line"'.^c

7 a. The Vulg. arrangement is different: Tobias makes his request, v. 10, Raguel shakes his head, making no reply, v. 11, and yields only at Raphael's insistence, v. 12; '...14 "It is my belief that God has sent you to me so that she may have a husband of her own kin, in obedience to the Law of Moses. Do not be afraid; I will give her to you." 15 And taking the right hand of his daughter he put it into the right hand of Tobias, saying, "May the God of Abraham and the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob be with you. May he himself join you together and bless you abundantly."'

8 a. 'through the air to Egypt'; var. 'to the upper parts of Egypt'.

b. The Vulg., in harmony with its 6:18f text, says explicitly that these prayers lasted for three nights.

13:1 and petition our Lord to win his grace and his protection.' •She stood up, and they began praying for protection, and this was how he began: 5 7

Dn 3:26

'You are blessed, O God of our fathers;
blessed, too, is your name for ever and ever.
Let the heavens bless you and all things you have made for evermore.

It was you who created Adam,
you who created Eve his wife to be his help and support;
and from these two the human race was born.

It was you who said,

*"It is not good that the man should be alone;
let us make him a helpmate like himself".*

And so I do not take my sister
for any lustful motive;

I do it in singleness of heart.

Be kind enough to have pity on her and on me and bring us to old age together.'

Gn 2:18

And together they said, 'Amen, Amen',^c and lay down for the night. 8 9

But Raguel rose and called his servants, who came and helped him to dig a grave. •He had thought, 'Heaven grant he does not die! We should be over- 10 whelmed with ridicule and shame.' •When the grave was finished, Raguel went 11 back to the house, called his wife •and said, 'Will you send a maid to the room 12 to see if Tobias is still alive? For if he is dead, we may be able to bury him without 13 anyone else knowing.' •The maid was called, the lamp lit and the door opened; 14 the maid went in. She found the two fast asleep; •she came out again and 15 whispered, 'He is not dead; all is well'. •Then Raguel blessed the God of heaven 16 with these words: 17

'You are blessed, my God,
with every blessing that is pure;
may you be blessed for evermore!

'You are blessed for having made me glad. 16
What I feared has not happened;
instead you have treated us with mercy beyond all measure.

'You are blessed for taking pity 17
on this only son, this only daughter.
Grant them, Master, your grace and your protection;
let them live out their lives in happiness and in grace.'

And he made his servants fill the grave in before dawn broke. 18 20

He told his wife to make plenty of bread; he went to his flock, brought back 19
two oxen and four sheep and gave orders for them to be cooked; and preparations began. •He called Tobias and said, 'I will not hear of your leaving here for 20 a fortnight. You are to stay where you are, eating and drinking, with me. You 21 will make my daughter happy again after all her troubles. •After that, take away 22 a half of all I have, and go without let or hindrance back to your father.^d When 23 my wife and I are dead you will have the other half. Courage, my boy! I am your 24 father, and Edna is your mother. We are your parents in future, as we are your sister's. Courage, my son!'

IX. THE WEDDING FEAST

¹ 9 Then Tobias turned to Raphael. •‘Brother Azarias,’ he said ‘take four servants
² and two camels and leave for Rhages. •Go to Gabael’s house, give him the ³ receipt and see about the money; then invite him to come with you to my wedding ⁴ feast. •You know that my father must be counting the days and that I cannot ⁵ lose a single one without worrying him. •You see what Raguel has pledged ⁶ himself to do; I am bound by his oath.’ So Raphael left for Rhages in Media
⁷ with the four servants and two camels. They stayed with Gabael, and Raphael ⁸ showed him the receipt. He told him about the marriage of Tobias son of Tobit
⁹ and gave him his invitation to the wedding feast. Gabael started counting out ¹⁰ the sacks to him—the seals were intact—and they loaded them on to the camels.
¹¹ Early in the morning they set off together for the feast, and reached Raguel’s ¹² house where they found Tobias dining. He rose to greet Gabael, who burst
¹³ into tears and blessed him with the words, ‘Excellent son of a father beyond
¹⁴ reproach, just and generous in his dealings! The Lord give heaven’s blessing ¹⁵ to you, to your wife, to the father and mother^a of your wife! Blessed be God for ¹⁶ granting me the sight of this living image of my cousin Tobit!’^b

Si 30:4

¹ 10 Every day, meanwhile, Tobit kept reckoning the days required for the ² journey there and the journey back. The full number went by, and still ³ his son had not come. •Then he thought, ‘I hope he has not been delayed there!
⁴ I hope Gabael is not dead! Perhaps no one was there to give him the money.’
⁵ And he began to worry. •His wife Anna kept saying, ‘My son is dead! He is no
⁶ longer among the living!’ And she began to weep and mourn over her son. She ⁷ kept saying, •‘Alas! I let you leave me, my child, you, the light of my eyes.’
⁸ And Tobit would reply, ‘Hush, my sister! Do not think such thoughts. All is well ⁹ with him. Something has happened there to delay them. His companion is ¹⁰ someone we can trust, one of our kinsmen at that. Do not lose heart, my sister.
¹¹ He will be here soon.’ •But she only said, ‘Leave me alone; do not try to deceive ¹² me. My child is dead.’ And every day she would go abruptly out to watch the ¹³ road by which her son had left. She trusted no eyes but her own. Once the sun ¹⁴ had set she would come home again, only to weep and moan all night, unable ¹⁵ to sleep.

Gn 44:8-34
Lk 15:20

Gn 45:26

After the fourteen days of feasting that Raguel had sworn to keep for his ¹ daughter’s marriage, Tobias came to him and said, ‘Let me go now; my father
² and mother must have lost all hope of seeing me again. So I beg you, father, ³ to let me return to my father’s house; I have told you the plight he was in when ⁴ I left him.’ •Raguel said to Tobias, ‘Stay, my son, stay with me. I will send ⁵ messengers to your father Tobit to give him news of you.’ •But Tobias pressed ⁶ him, ‘No. I ask your permission to go back to my father’s house.’ •Without ⁷ more ado, Raguel committed Sarah his bride into his keeping. He gave Tobias ⁸ half his wealth, menservants and maidservants, oxen and sheep, donkeys and ⁹ camels, clothes and money and household things. •And so he let them leave ¹⁰ happily. To Tobias he said these parting words, ‘Good health, my son, and ¹¹ a happy journey! May the Lord of heaven be gracious to you and to your wife ¹² Sarah! I hope to see your children before I die.’ •To his daughter Sarah he said, ¹³ ‘Go now to your father-in-law’s house, since henceforward they are as much ¹⁴ your parents as those who gave you life. Go in peace, my daughter, I hope to

c. In the Vulg., after the prayer of Tobias, vv. 7-9, Sarah also prays, v. 10, invoking the mercy of God.

d. The account of the marriage of Sarah has many details in common with the stories of Rebekah, Gn 24; Rachel, Gn 29; Dinah, Gn 34; the wife of Samson, Jg 14; Michal, 1 S 18. Here, however, there is no mohar (the sum paid by the groom to the bride’s father, Gn 34:12; 1 S 18:25); it is the father who dowers the bride.

9 a. ‘to the father and mother’; var. ‘to your father’.

b. Some authorities omit the blessing of Gabael; the Vulg., on the other hand, gives a fuller form of it, vv. 9-12.

hear nothing but good of you, as long as I live.' He said goodbye to them and let them go.

Edna in her turn said to Tobias, 'Dear son and brother, may it please the Lord to bring you back again! I hope to live long enough to see the children of you and my daughter Sarah before I die. In the sight of the Lord I give my daughter into your keeping. Never make her unhappy as long as you live. Go in peace, my son. Henceforward I am your mother and Sarah is your sister. May we all live happily all the days of our lives!' And she kissed them both and saw them set out happily. 12

Gn 24:21, 40, 42, 56 Tobias left Raguel's house with his mind at ease. In his gladness he blessed the Lord of heaven and earth, the King of all that is, for the happy issue of his travels. He gave this blessing to Raguel and his wife Edna, 'May it be my happiness to honour you all the days of my life!'^a 13

X. TOBIT'S SIGHT RESTORED

Gn 46:28 11 They were nearly at Kaserin, opposite Nineveh, •when Raphael said, 'You 1/2 know the plight in which we left your father; •let us go on ahead of your 3 wife and prepare the house ourselves while she travels behind with the others'. They went on together (Raphael had warned Tobias to take the gall with him) 4 and the dog followed them.^a

Anna was sitting, watching the road by which her son would come. •She was 5/6 sure at once it must be he and said to the father, 'Here comes your son, with his companion'.

Raphael said to Tobias before he reached his father, 'I give you my word 7 that your father's eyes will open. •You must put the fish's gall to his eyes; the 8 medicine will smart and will draw a filmy white skin off his eyes. And your father will be able to see and look on the light.'

Gn 33:4; 45:14; 46:29-30 Lk 15:20 The mother ran forward and threw her arms round her son's neck. 'Now 9 I can die,' she said 'I have seen you again.' And she wept. •Tobit rose to his 10 feet and stumbled across the courtyard through the door. Tobias came on towards him •(he had the fish's gall in his hand). He blew into his eyes and said, steadying 11/13 him, 'Take courage, father!' With this he applied the medicine, left it there 12/14 a while, •then with both hands peeled away a filmy skin from the corners of his 13/14 eyes. •Then his father fell on his neck •and wept. He exclaimed, 'I can see, my son, the light of my eyes!' And he said:

'Blessed be God! 17
Blessed be his great name!
Blessed be all his holy angels!
Blessed be his great name
for evermore!
For he had scourged me 15
and now has had pity on me and I see my son Tobias.'

13:2 Dt 32:39

Tobias went into the house, and with a loud voice joyfully blessed God.^b Then he told his father everything: how his journey had been successful and he had brought the silver back; how he had married Sarah, the daughter of Raguel; how she was following him now, close behind, and could not be far from the gates of Nineveh.

Tobit set off to the gates of Nineveh to meet his daughter-in-law, giving joyful 16 praise to God as he went. When the people of Nineveh saw him walking without a guide and stepping forward as briskly as of old, they were astonished. •Tobit 17 described to them how God had taken pity on him and had opened his eyes. Then Tobit met Sarah, the bride of his son Tobias, and blessed her in these words, 'Welcome, daughter! Blessed be your God for sending you to us, my daughter. Blessings on your father, blessings on my son Tobias, blessings on yourself, my daughter. Welcome now to your own house in joyfulness and in blessedness. Come in, my daughter.' He held a feast that day for all the Jews of Nineveh, and his cousins Ahikar and Nadab came to share in Tobit's happiness.^c

XI. RAPHAEL

- 1 12 When the feasting was over, Tobit called his son Tobias and said, 'My son, you ought to think about paying the amount due to your fellow traveller; give him more than the figure agreed on'. 'Father,' he replied 'how much am I to give him for his help? Even if I give him half the goods he brought back with me, I shall not be the loser. He has brought me back to you safe and sound, he has cured my wife, he has brought the money back too, and now he has cured you as well. How much am I to give him for all this?' Tobit said, 'He has richly earned half of what he brought back'. So Tobias called his companion and said, 'Take half of what you brought back, in payment for all you have done, and go in peace'.
- 6 Then Raphael took them both aside and said, 'Bless God, utter his praise before all the living for all the favours he has given you. Bless and extol his name. Proclaim before all men the deeds of God as they deserve, and never tire of giving him thanks. It is right to keep the secret of a king, yet right to reveal and publish the works of God. Thank him worthily. Do what is good, and no evil can befall you.
- 8 'Prayer with fasting^a and alms with right conduct are better than riches with iniquity. Better to practise almsgiving than to hoard up gold. Almsgiving saves from death and purges every kind of sin. Those who give alms have their fill of days; those who commit sin and do evil, bring harm on themselves.
- 11 'I am going to tell you the whole truth, hiding nothing from you. I have already told you that it is right to keep the secret of a king, yet right too to reveal in worthy fashion the works of God. So you must know that when you and Sarah were at prayer,^b it was I who offered your supplications before the glory of the Lord and who read them; so too when you were burying the dead. When you did not hesitate to get up and leave the table to go and bury a dead man, I was sent to test your faith,^c and at the same time God sent me to heal you and your daughter-in-law Sarah. I am Raphael, one of the seven^d angels who stand ever ready to enter the presence of the glory of the Lord.'
- 16 They were both overwhelmed with awe; they fell on their faces in terror. But the angel said, 'Do not be afraid; peace be with you. Bless God for ever. As far as I was concerned, when I was with you, my presence was not by any decision of mine, but by the will of God; it is he whom you must bless throughout your days, he that you must praise. You thought you saw me eating, but that was appearance and no more.^e Now bless the Lord on earth and give thanks to God. I am about to return to him above who sent me. Write down all that has

10 a. Text corrected following Vet. Lat. and Var.

11 a. 'the dog'; var. 'the Lord'. 'followed them'; var. 'ran before them'. Before Anna addresses Tobit she sees the dog on the road, according to Syr. So also Vulg., v. 9 'Then the dog, which had been with them on the way, ran in front of them and came up, like one who had news to tell, wagging his tail for joy'.

b. 'with a loud voice'; var. 'with all his might'.

c. Add. 'And the celebrations went on for seven days, and many gifts were brought him', or (Vulg.) 'And the celebrations went on for seven days and there was great rejoicing among them all'.

12 a. 'fasting'; var. 'truth'.

b. The angel, cf. 5:4+, now becomes the intercessor. Raphael presents a 'memoir' (mnēmosunon) of Tobit's prayers and good works to God. The term suggests an official abstract; it also has sacrificial overtones, the portion of the victim burnt on the altar as an 'appeasing fragrance' is called the 'memorial' of the sacrifice, Lv 2:2+.

c. Like Satan to Job (Jb 1-2) though with a difference.

d. Only three angels' names appear in the Bible: Gabriel, Michael, Raphael. The apocrypha fill up the list of the Seven in their own extravagant way.

e. Var. 'You observe that I have eaten nothing and that you have had a vision'. Vulg. 'But I have invisible food, and a drink that no man can see'.

XII. ZION

13 And he said:^a

1

'Blessed be God who lives for ever,
for his reign endures throughout all ages!

By turns he punishes and pardons;
he sends men down to the depths of the underworld
and draws them up from supreme Destruction;
no one can escape his hand.

2

Declare his praise before the nations,
you who are the sons of Israel!

3

For if he has scattered you among them, there too he has shown you his greatness.

4

Extol him before all the living;
he is our Master

and he is our God

and he is our Father

and he is God for ever and ever.

'Though he punishes you for your iniquities,
he will take pity on you all;

he will gather you from every nation wherever you have been scattered.

If you return to him

6

with all your heart and all your soul, behaving honestly towards him,

then he will return to you and hide his face from you no longer.

Consider how well he has treated you;

loudly give him thanks.

Bless the Lord of justice and extol the King of the ages.

I for my part sing his praise

7

in the country of my exile;

I make his power and greatness known to a nation that has sinned.

Sinners, return to him;

8

let your conduct be upright before him;
perhaps he will be gracious to you and take pity on you.

I for my part extol God

7

and my soul rejoices

9

in the King of heaven.

Let his greatness •be in all men's mouths,
his praises be sung in Jerusalem.

8

'Jerusalem, Holy City,

God scourged you for your handiwork

yet still will take pity on the sons of the upright.

Thank the Lord as he deserves and bless the King of the ages,

14 The end of the hymns of Tobit.

13 a. The concluding song (cf. Ex 15; Jdt 16) forms in the style of the prophets; it expresses the exiles' two parts. The first, vv. 1-8, is a song of thanksgiving, hopes of an ideal Jerusalem. There are considerable borrowing themes from hymns and psalms of the divergencies among the textual authorities, and some kingdom. The second, vv. 9-17, apostrophises Jerusalem lacunae; the restoration is at times conjectural.

XIII. NINEVEH

Tobit died in peace when he was a hundred and twelve years old and received an honourable burial in Nineveh. •He was sixty-two when he went blind; and after his cure he lived from then on in comfort, practising almsgiving and continually praising God and extolling his greatness. •When he was at the point of death he summoned his son Tobias and gave him these instructions, 'My son, take your children •and hurry away to Media, since I believe the word of God pronounced over Nineveh by Nahum.^a Everything will come true, everything happen that the emissaries of God, the prophets of Israel, have predicted against Assyria and Nineveh; not one of their words shall prove empty. It will all take place in due time.^b You will be safer in Media than in Assyria or in Babylonia. Since I for my part know and believe that everything God has said will come true; so it will be, and not a word of the prophecies shall fail.

'A census will be taken of our brothers living in the land of Israel and they will be exiled far from their own fair country. The entire territory of Israel will become a desert, and Samaria and Jerusalem will become a desert, and the house of God, for a time, will be laid waste and burnt. •Then once again God will take pity on them and bring them back to the land of Israel. They will rebuild his house, although it will be less beautiful than the first, until the time has fully come. But after this, all will return from captivity and rebuild Jerusalem in all her glory, and the house of God will be rebuilt within her as the prophets of Israel have foretold. •And all the people of the whole earth will be converted and will fear God with all sincerity. All will renounce their false gods who have led them astray into error, •and will bless the God of the ages by upright conduct. All the Israelites spared in those days will remember God in sincerity of heart. They will come and gather in Jerusalem and thereafter dwell securely in the land of Abraham, which shall be their own. And those who sincerely love God shall rejoice. And those who commit sin and wickedness shall vanish from the earth.

'And now, my children, I lay this duty on you: serve God sincerely, and do what is pleasing to him. And lay on your children the obligation to behave uprightly, to give alms, to keep God in mind and to bless his name always, sincerely and with all their might.

'So then, my son, leave Nineveh; do not stay here. •As soon as you have buried your mother next to me, go the same day, whenever it may be, and do not linger in this country where I see wickedness and perfidy unashamedly triumphant. Consider, my child, all that Nadab did to his fosterfather Ahikar. Was he not forced to go underground, though still a living man? But God made the criminal pay for his outrage before the eyes of his victim, since Ahikar came back to the light of day, while Nadab went down to everlasting darkness in punishment for plotting against Ahikar's life. Because of his good works^c Ahikar escaped the deadly snare Nadab had laid for him, and Nadab fell into it to his own ruin. •So, my children, you see what comes of almsgiving, and what wickedness leads to, I mean to death. But now breath fails me.'

They laid him back on his bed; he died and was buried with honour.

He lived in Ecbatana with Raguel, his father-in-law. •He treated the aging parents of his wife with every care and respect, and later buried them in Ecbatana in Media. Tobias inherited the patrimony of Raguel besides that of his father Tobit. •Much honoured, he lived to the age of a hundred and seventeen years.^d •Before he died he witnessed the ruin of Nineveh. He saw the Ninevites taken prisoner and deported to Media by Cyaxares king of Media. He blessed God for everything he inflicted on the Ninevites and Assyrians. Before his death he had the opportunity of rejoicing over the fate of Nineveh, and he blessed the Lord God for ever and ever. Amen.

prophecy and he speaks of the future messianic age (when 'the time has fully come' v. 5).

JUDITH^a

I. THE CAMPAIGN OF HOLOFERNES

Nebuchadnezzar and Arphaxad

1 It was the twelfth year of Nebuchadnezzar^b who reigned over the Assyrians 1 Gn10:22 1 in the great city of Nineveh. Arphaxad^c was then reigning over the Medes at Ecbatana. •He surrounded this city with walls of dressed stones three cubits 2 thick and six cubits long, making the rampart seventy cubits high and fifty cubits wide. •At the gates he placed towers one hundred cubits high and, at the 3 foundations, sixty cubits wide, •the gates themselves being seventy cubits high 4 and forty wide to allow his forces to march out in a body and his infantry to parade freely.

Now at this time King Nebuchadnezzar gave battle to King Arphaxad in the 5 great plain lying in the territory of Ragae. •Supporting him were all the peoples 6 from the highlands,^d all from the Euphrates and Tigris and Hydaspes, and those from the plains who were subject to Arioch, king of the Elymaeans.^e Thus many nations had mustered to take part in the battle of the sons of Cheleoud.^f

Nebuchadnezzar king of the Assyrians sent a message to all the inhabitants 7 of Persia, to all the inhabitants of the western countries, Cilicia, Damascus, Lebanon, Anti-Lebanon, to all those along the coast, •to the peoples of Carmel, 8
Gilead, Upper Galilee, the great plain of Esdraelon, •to the men of Samaria 9 and its outlying towns, to those beyond Jordan, as far away as Jerusalem, Bethany, Chelous, Kadesh, the river of Egypt, Tahpanhes, Rameses and the 10 whole territory of Goshen, •beyond Tanis, too, and Memphis, and to all the 11 inhabitants of Egypt as far as the frontiers of Ethiopia.^g •But the inhabitants 11 of these countries ignored the summons of Nebuchadnezzar king of the Assyrians and did not rally to him to make war. They were not afraid of him, since in their view he appeared isolated.^h Hence they sent his ambassadors back with nothing achieved and in disgrace. •Nebuchadnezzar was furious with all these countries.ⁱ 12
He swore by his throne and kingdom to take revenge on all the territories of Cilicia, Damascene and Syria, of the Moabites and of the Ammonites, of Judaea and Egypt as far as the limits of the two seas,^j and to ravage them with the sword.

The campaign against Arphaxad

In the seventeenth year he and his forces gave battle to King Arphaxad and 13 in this battle defeated him. He routed Arphaxad's entire army and all his cavalry and chariots; •he occupied his towns and advanced on Ecbatana; he seized its 14 towers and plundered its market places, reducing its former magnificence to a mockery. •He later captured Arphaxad in the mountains of Ragae and, thrusting 15 him through with his spears, destroyed him once and for all.

He then retired with his troops and all who had joined forces with him: 16 a vast horde of armed men. Then, carefree, he and his army gave themselves up to feasting for a hundred and twenty days.

Est 1:3-4

The campaign in the west

2 In the eighteenth year,^a on the twenty-second day of the first month, a rumour ran through the palace that Nebuchadnezzar king of the Assyrians was to have his revenge on the whole world, as he had threatened. •Summoning his general staff and senior officers he held a secret conference with them, and with his own lips pronounced utter destruction on all these countries. •It was then decreed that everyone should be put to death who had not answered the king's appeal.

4 When the council was over, Nebuchadnezzar king of the Assyrians sent for Holofernes,^b general-in-chief of his armies and subordinate only to himself. 5 He said to him, •Thus speaks the Great King, lord of the whole world:^c "Be on your way; take men of proved valour, about a hundred and twenty thousand foot soldiers and a strong contingent of horse with twelve thousand cavalrymen; •then advance against the western lands, since these people have disregarded my call. •Bid them have earth and water ready,^d because in my rage I am about to march on them; the feet of my soldiers will cover the whole face of the earth, and I will plunder it. •Their wounded will fill the valleys and the torrents and rivers, blocked with their dead, will overflow. •I will lead them captive to the ends of the earth. •Now go! Begin by conquering this whole region for me. If they surrender to you, hold them for me until the time comes to punish them. But if they resist, look on no one with clemency. Hand them over to slaughter and plunder throughout the territory entrusted to you. •For by my life and by the living power of my kingdom, I have spoken. All this I will do indeed. And you, neglect none of your master's commands, act strictly according to my orders without further delay."

14 Leaving the presence of his sovereign, Holofernes immediately summoned all the marshals, generals and officers of the Assyrian army •and detailed the picked troops as his master had ordered, about a hundred and twenty thousand men and a further twelve thousand mounted bowmen. •He organised these in the normal battle formation. •He then secured vast numbers of camels, donkeys and mules to carry the baggage, and innumerable sheep, oxen and goats for food supplies. •Every man received full rations and a generous sum of gold and silver from the king's purse.

19 He then set out for the campaign with his whole army, in advance of King Nebuchadnezzar, to overwhelm the whole western region with his chariots, his horsemen and his picked body of foot. •A composite corps brought up the rear, as numerous as locusts or the grains of sand on the ground; there was no counting their multitude.

The stages of Holofernes' advance^e

21 Thus they set out from Nineveh and marched for three days towards the plain

1 a. The Vulg. text differs considerably from the Greek. Its most important additions will be found in the footnotes, and where its verse numbering is different from the Greek this will be noted.

b. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, was never styled 'king of Assyria', nor was Nineveh his capital. On the liberties the author takes with history, see Introduction to Judith etc. Here Nebuchadnezzar stands for the mighty and irreligious enemy of the people of God.

c. Aphxad is unknown to historians. His name perhaps suggests Phraortes, founder of the kingdom of Media.

d. The high plateaux of W. Iran.

e. The author is probably referring to the kingdom of Elymais, cf. 1 M 6:1.

f. Probably the Chaldaeans.

g. The list mentions all the vassals or allies of Nebuchadnezzar.

h. Lit. 'one man only', i.e. left dependent on any help he can find; though possibly 'a man of straw'.

i. Lit. 'the whole earth'. The phrase, common in Jdt, either means the district referred to in the context (the whole country) or is a hyperbolic expression.

j. The phrase is, perhaps deliberately, obscure. It may be understood 'as far as their western boundaries'.

2 a. Of his reign, i.e. 587, the year he captured Jerusalem. The author presumably intends to contrast that disaster with the victory described here. This chapter preserves a memory of Canaanite confederacies against either Assyria or Babylon.

b. Holofernes and Bagoas, 12:11, are Persian names and two officers of Artaxerxes III Ochus were so named. The author may have wished to include the campaigns of this king too under the (comprehensive) name of Nebuchadnezzar.

c. Official title of the Persian kings.

d. Persian formula for all the facilities required by a conqueror for his march and his occupation.

e. On the place-names and the author's free treatment of geography, see Introduction.

of Bectileth. From Bectileth they went on to pitch camp near the mountains that lie to the north of Upper Cilicia. •From there Holofernes advanced into the highlands with his whole army, infantry, horsemen, chariots. •He cut his way through Put and Lud, stripped all the sons of Rassis and sons of Ishmael living on the verge of the desert south of Cheleon, •marched along the Euphrates, crossed Mesopotamia, razed all the fortified towns controlling the wadi Abron and reached the sea. •Next he attacked the territories of Cilicia, butchering all who offered him resistance, advanced on the southern frontiers of Japheth, facing Arabia, •completely encircled the Midianites, burned their tents and plundered their sheep-runs, •made his way down to the Damascus plain in the time of the wheat harvest,^f set fire to the fields, destroyed the flocks and herds, sacked the towns, laid the countryside waste and put all the young men to the sword. •Fear and trembling seized all the coastal peoples. The populations of Sidon and Tyre, of Sur, Ocina, Jamnia, Azotus, Ascalon, were panic-stricken.

3 They therefore sent envoys to him to sue for peace and say, •‘We are servants of the great King Nebuchadnezzar and we lie prone before you. Treat us as you think fit. •Our cattle farms, all our land, all our wheat fields, our flocks and herds, all the sheep-runs in our encampments are at your disposal. Do with them as you please. •Our towns and their inhabitants, too, are at your service; go and advance against them if such is your good pleasure.’ •These men came to Holofernes and delivered the message as above.

He then made his way down to the coast with his army and stationed garrisons in all the fortified towns, levying outstanding men there as auxiliaries. The people of these cities and of all the other towns in the neighbourhood welcomed him, wearing garlands and dancing to the sound of tambourines. Notwithstanding this, he demolished their shrines^a and cut down their sacred trees, carrying out his commission to destroy all local gods and to force the nations to worship Nebuchadnezzar alone and to compel men of every language and nationality to hail him as a god.^b

Thus he reached the edge of Esdraelon, in the neighbourhood of Dothan, a village facing the great ridge of Judaea. •He pitched camp between Geba and Scythopolis and stayed there a full month to replenish his supplies.

Judaea on the alert

4 When the Israelites living in Judaea heard how Holofernes, general-in-chief of Nebuchadnezzar king of the Assyrians, had treated the various nations, first plundering their temples and then destroying them, •they were thoroughly alarmed at his approach and trembled for Jerusalem and the Temple of the Lord their God. •They had returned from captivity only a short time before, and the resettlement of the people in Judaea and the reconsecration of the sacred furnishings, of the altar, and of the Temple, which had been profaned, were of recent date.^a

They therefore alerted the whole of Samaria, Kona, Beth-horon, Belmain, Jericho, Choba, Aesora and the Salem valley. •They occupied the summits of the highest mountains and fortified the villages on them; they laid in supplies for the coming war, as the fields had just been harvested. •Joakim the high priest, resident in Jerusalem at the time, wrote to the inhabitants of Bethulia and of Betomesthaim,^b two towns facing Esdraelon, towards the plain of Dothan. •He ordered them to occupy the mountain passes, the only means of access to Judaea, for there it would be easy for them to halt an attacking force, the narrowness of the approach not allowing men to advance more than two abreast. •The Israelites carried out the orders of Joakim the high priest and of the people’s Council of Elders in session at Jerusalem.^c

A nation at prayer

All the men of Israel cried most fervently to God and humbled themselves

⁹ before him. •They, their wives, their children, their cattle, all their resident ¹¹ aliens, hired or slave, wrapped sackcloth round their loins. •All the Israelites in Jerusalem, including the women and children, lay prone in front of the Temple, ¹² and with ashes on their heads stretched out their hands^d before the Lord. •They draped the very altar in sackcloth and fervently joined together in begging the God of Israel not to let their little ones be massacred, their wives carried off, ¹³ the towns of their heritage destroyed, the Temple profaned and desecrated for the heathen to gloat over it. •The Lord heard them and looked kindly on their distress.

The people fasted for many days throughout Judaea as well as in Jerusalem who stood before the Lord, the Lord's priests and ministers, wore sackcloth called on the Lord to look kindly on the House of Israel.

A council of war in Holofernes' camp

¹ 5 Holofernes, general-in-chief of the Assyrian army, received the intelligence that the sons of Israel were preparing for war; that they had closed the mountain passes, fortified the high peaks and laid obstructions in the plains.
² Holofernes was furious. He summoned all the princes of Moab, all the generals
³ of Ammon and all the satraps of the coastal regions. •'Men of Canaan,' he said 'tell me: what people is this that occupies the highlands? What towns does it inhabit? How large is its army? What are the sources of its power and strength?
⁴ Who is the king who rules it and commands its army? •Why have these not condescended to wait on me, as all the western peoples have done?'^a ⁵ Achior,^b leader of all the Ammonites, replied, 'May my lord please listen to what your servant is going to say. I will give you the facts about these mountain folk whose home lies close to you. You will hear no lie from the ⁶ mouth of your servant. •These people are descended from the Chaldaeans.
⁷ They once came to live in Mesopotamia, because they did not want to follow ⁸ the gods of their ancestors who lived in Chaldaea. •They abandoned the way of their ancestors to worship the God of heaven,^c the God they had learnt to acknowledge. Banished from the presence of their own gods, they fled to ⁹ Mesopotamia where they lived for a long time. •When God told them to leave their home and set out for Canaan, they settled there and accumulated gold and ¹⁰ silver and great herds of cattle. •Next, famine having overwhelmed the land of ⁹ Canaan, they went down to Egypt where they stayed as long as food could be found there. There they became a great multitude, a race beyond counting.
¹¹ But the king of Egypt turned against them and exploited them by forcing them
¹² to make bricks; he degraded them, reducing them to slavery. •They cried to ¹¹ their God, who struck the entire land of Egypt with incurable plagues, and the

f. The Hebrews distinguish the barley harvest, in April, cf. 2 S 21:9 from the wheat harvest, at the end of May.

3 a. Following the Syriac version; Greek 'he laid their land waste'.

b. Neither the Assyrian nor the Babylonian kings ever insisted on this. The Seleucids, following Alexander's lead, were the first to claim divine honours.

4 a. The author ignores time (cf. Introduction) to place the return from exile and the repopulation of Jerusalem (539-400), even perhaps the purification of the Temple after the persecution of Antiochus IV (165), all in the lifetime of Nebuchadnezzar.

b. The two towns are not mentioned elsewhere. Bethulia is represented here as a key position dominating the approaches to Judah, v. 7 and 8:21.

c. A 'Council of Elders' associated with the high priest is not found in pre-exilic times but appears as an established institution in the Greek period.

d. 'their hands' corr.; 'their sackcloth'—Greek; Vulg. 'they made their children lie prone in front of the Temple'.

e. In the Vulg. the high priest travels through Israel urging the people to pray, by reminding them of the defeat of Amalek, Ex 17:9-13.

5 a. On Jewish refusal to conform, see Est 3:8+.

b. The figure of Achior the Ammonite seems to be modelled on Ahikar the virtuous pagan sage, cf. Tb 1:21+. Into his mouth the author puts a summary of the history of Israel, conceived of in terms of the acts of God, a favourite O.T. theme, cf. especially Ps 78, 105, 106; cf. Ezk 16, 20; Ws 10f, and in N.T. Ac 7. Cf. the episode of Balaam the pagan soothsayer, Nb 22-24. This prepares the way for the discourse of Judith, 11:9-19.

Ex 14: Egyptians expelled them. •God dried up the Red Sea before them •and led 13,14

Nb 21: inhabitants of the desert, •they settled in the land of the Amorites and, such 15 21-32 Jos 3 was their strength, exterminated the inhabitants of Heshbon. Then, having crossed the Jordan, they took possession of all the highlands, •driving out the 16
Dt 7:1+ Canaanites before them and the Perizzites, Jebusites, Shechemites and all the 20
Dt 28-30 Gergashites, and lived there for many years. •All the while they did not sin 17
Ps 106: before their God, prosperity was theirs, for they have a God who hates 21
21-32 Is 59:2 wickedness. •But when they turned from the path he had marked out for them, 18
2 K 25 some were exterminated in a succession of battles, others taken captive to a 22 foreign land. The Temple of their God was razed to the ground and their towns were seized by their enemies. •Then having turned once again to their God, 19 they came back from the places to which they had been dispersed and scattered, 23 regained possession of Jerusalem, where they have their Temple, and reoccupied 20
the highlands which had been left deserted. •So now, master and lord, if this 24 8:18 people has committed any fault, if they have sinned against their God, let us first make sure that they have offended in this way, and then let us advance and 11:10 attack them. •But if their nation is guiltless, my lord would do better to abstain, 21 for fear that their Lord and God should protect them; we should then become 25
the laughing-stock of the whole world.'

When Achior had ended this speech, all the people crowding round the tent 22 began protesting. Holofernes' own senior officers, as well as all the coastal 26 peoples and the Moabites, threatened to tear him limb from limb. •'Why should 23 9:7:16:2 we be afraid of the Israelites? They are a weak and powerless people, quite 28 unable to stand a stiff attack. •Forward! Advance! Your army, Holofernes our 24 master, will swallow them in one mouthful!'

Achior handed over to the Israelites

6 When the uproar of those crowding round the council had subsided, 1 Holofernes, general-in-chief of the Assyrian army, reprimanded Achior in 2 front of the whole crowd of foreigners and Ammonites.^a •'Achior, who do you 3 think you are, you and the Ammonite mercenaries, playing the prophet like 4 9:7 this with us today, and trying to dissuade us from making war on the people of Israel? You claim their God will protect them. And who is their God if not 3:8 Nebuchadnezzar? He himself will display his power and wipe them off the face
Dn 3: of the earth, and their God will certainly not save them. •But we, his servants, 3 14-18 Is 36 shall destroy them as easily as a single individual. They can never resist the 18-20: 37:4; strength of our cavalry. •We shall burn them all. Their mountains will be drunk 4 16-20 with their blood and their plains filled with their corpses. Far from being able to resist us, every one of them will die; thus says King Nebuchadnezzar, lord of the whole world. For he has spoken, and his words will not prove empty.
As for you, Achior, you Ammonite mercenary, who in a rash moment said 5 these words, you shall not see my face again until the day when I have taken 5:12; 16:12 my revenge on this brood of fugitives from Egypt. •And then the swords of my 6 soldiers and the spears^b of my officers will pierce your sides. You will fall 4 among the wounded, the moment I turn on Israel. •My servants will now take 7 you into the highlands and leave you near one of the towns in the passes; •you 8 will not die, until you share their ruin. •No need to look so sad if you cherish 9 the secret hope that they will not be captured! I have spoken; none of my words 5 will prove idle.'

Holofernes having commanded his tent-orderlies to seize Achior, to take him 10 to Bethulia and to hand him over to the Israelites, •the orderlies took him, 11 escorted him out of the camp and across the plain, and then, making for the 8 highlands, reached the springs below Bethulia. •As soon as the men of the 12 town sighted them, they snatched up their weapons, left the town and made for the mountain tops, while all the slingers pelted them with stones to prevent ¹³₉ them from coming up. •However, they managed to take cover at the foot of the slope, where they bound Achior and left him lying at the bottom of the mountain and returned to their master.

¹⁴₁₀ The Israelites then came down from their town, stopped by him, unbound him and took him to Bethulia, where they brought him before the chief men ¹⁵₁₁ of the town, •who at that time were Uziah son of Micah of the tribe of Simeon, ¹⁶₁₂ Chabris son of Gothoniël and Charmis son of Melchiel. •These summoned all the elders of the town. The young men and the women also hurried to the assembly. Achior was made to stand with all the people surrounding him and ¹⁷₁₃ Uziah questioned him about what had happened. •He answered by telling them what had been said at Holofernes' council, and what he himself had said in the ¹⁸₁₄ presence of the Assyrian leaders, and how Holofernes had bragged of what he would do to the House of Israel. •At this the people fell to the ground and ¹⁹₁₅ worshipped God. •'Lord God of heaven,' they cried 'take notice of their arrogance and have pity on the humiliation of our race. Look kindly today on those who are consecrated to you.' •They then spoke reassuringly to Achior ²⁰₁₆ and praised him warmly. •After the assembly Uziah took him home and gave ²¹₁₇ a banquet for the elders; all that night they called on the God of Israel for help.

II. BETHULIA UNDER SIEGE

The campaign against Israel

¹₁ 7 The following day Holofernes issued orders to his whole army and to the whole host of auxiliaries who had joined him to break camp and march on Bethulia, to occupy the mountain passes and so open the campaign against the ²₂ Israelites. •The troops broke camp that same day. The actual fighting force numbered one hundred and twenty thousand^a infantry and twelve thousand cavalry, not to mention the baggage train with the vast number of men on foot ³₃ concerned with that. •They penetrated the valley in the neighbourhood of Bethulia, near the spring, and deployed on a wide front from Dothan to Balbaim ⁴₄ and, in depth, from Bethulia to Cyamon, which faces on Esdraelon. •When the Israelites saw this horde, they were all appalled and said to each other, 'Now they will lick the whole country clean. Not even the loftiest peaks, the gorges ⁵₅ or the hills will be able to stand the weight of them.' •Each man snatched up his arms; they lit beacons on their towers and spent the whole night on watch.

1M 12:28-29

⁶₆ On the second day Holofernes deployed his entire cavalry in sight of the ⁷₇ Israelites in Bethulia. •He reconnoitred the slopes leading up to the town, located the water-points, seized them and posted pickets over them and returned to the ⁸₈ main body. •The chiefs of the sons of Esau, the leaders of the Moabites^b and ⁹₉ the generals of the coastal district then came to him and said, •'If our master ¹⁰₁₀ will please listen to us, his forces will not sustain a single wound. •The Israelites do not rely so much on their spears as on the height of the mountains ¹¹₁₁ where they live. And admittedly it is not at all easy to scale these heights

d. Against Achior's religious interpretation of history they urge the human argument, brute force. The entire book demonstrates Achior's contention which Judith sustains, 11:10.

b. 'spears' Vet. Lat. and Syr.

e. The author of the book seems to be particularly interested in the tribe of Simeon which plays so inconspicuous a part in Israelite history. The name of Uziah recalls that of Uzziel, 1 Ch 4:42. In 9:2-4 Judith rehabilitates the patriarch censured in Gn 34:30 and 49:5-7.

7 a. '120,000' with Vulg., cf. 2:15; '170,000' Greek. b. The Edomites ('sons of Esau') and Moabites are traditional enemies of Israel, Nb 20:23+.

Thirst will then force them to surrender their town. Meanwhile, we and our men will climb the nearest mountain tops and form advance posts there to prevent anyone from leaving the town. •Hunger will waste them with their wives and children, and before the sword can reach them they will already be lying in the streets outside their houses. •And you will make them pay dearly for their defiance and their refusal to meet you peaceably.

Their words pleased Holofernes as well as all his officers and he decided to do as they suggested. •Accordingly a troop of Moabites^c moved forward with a further five thousand Assyrians. They penetrated the valley and seized the Israelites' waterpoints and springs. •Meanwhile the Edomites and Ammonites went and took up positions in the highlands opposite Dothan, sending some of their men to the south-east opposite Egrebel, near Chous on the wadi Mochmur. The rest of the Assyrian army took up positions in the plain, covering every inch of the earth; their tents and equipment made an immense encampment, so vast were their numbers.

The Israelites called on the Lord their God, dispirited because the enemy had surrounded them and cut all line of retreat. •For thirty-four days the Assyrian army, infantry, chariots, cavalymen, had them surrounded. Every water jar the inhabitants of Bethulia had was empty, •their wells were drying up; on no day could a man quench his thirst, since their water was rationed. •Their little children pined away, the women and young men grew weak with thirst; they collapsed in the streets and gateways of the town; they had no strength left.

Young men, women, children, the whole people thronged clamouring round Uzziah and the chief men of the town, shouting in the presence of the assembled elders, •'May God be judge between you and us! For you have done us great harm, by not suing for peace with the Assyrians. •And now there is no one to help us. God has delivered us into their hands to be prostrated before them in thirst and utter helplessness. •Call them in at once; hand the whole town over to be sacked by Holofernes' men and all his army. •After all, we should be much better off as their booty than we are now; no doubt we shall be enslaved, but at least we shall be alive and not see our little ones dying before our eyes or our wives and children perishing. •By heaven and earth and by our God, the Lord of our fathers who is punishing us for our sins and the sins of our ancestors,^d we implore you to take this course^e now, today.' •Bitter lamentations rose from the whole assembly, and they all cried loudly to the Lord God.^f

Then Uzziah spoke to them, 'Take heart, brothers! Let us hold out five days more. By then the Lord our God will take pity on us, for he will not desert us altogether. •At the end of this time, if there is no help forthcoming, I will do as you have said.' •With that he dismissed the people to their various quarters. The men went to man the walls and towers of the town, sending the women and children home. The town was full of despondency.

III. JUDITH

A portrait of Judith

8 Judith^a was informed at the time of what had happened. She was the daughter of Merari son of Ox, son of Joseph, son of Oziel, son of Elkiah, son of Ananias, son of Gideon, son of Raphaim, son of Ahitub, son of Elijah, son of Hilkiah, son of Eliab, son of Nathanael, son of Salamiel, son of Sarasadai, son of Israel.^b Her husband Manasseh, of her own tribe and family, had died at the time of barley harvest. •He was supervising the men as they bound up the sheaves in the field when he caught sunstroke and had to take to his bed. He died in Bethulia, his home town, and was buried with his ancestors in the field that lies between Dothan and Balamon. •As a widow, Judith stayed inside her home for three years and four months. •She had had an upper room built for herself on the

- 6 roof. She wore sackcloth round her waist and dressed in widow's weeds. •She Lk 2:37▲ fasted every day of her widowhood except for the sabbath eve, the sabbath itself, 10:2
the eve of New Moon, the feast of New Moon and the festival days of the House 7 of Israel. •Now, she was very beautiful, charming to see. Her husband Manasseh had left her gold and silver, menservants and maidservants, cattle and lands; 8 and she lived among all her possessions •without anyone finding a word to say against her, so devoutly did she fear God.

Judith and the elders

- 9 Hearing how the water shortage had demoralised the people and how they had complained bitterly to the headman of the town, and being also told what Uzziah had said to them and how he had given them his oath to surrender the 10 town to the Assyrians in five days' time, •Judith immediately sent her woman of affairs who managed her property to summon Chabris and Charmis, two elders 11 of the town. •When these came in she said:

- Listen to me, leaders of the people of Bethulia. You were wrong to speak to the people as you did today and to bind yourself by oath, in defiance of God, to surrender the town to our enemies if the Lord did not come to your help within 12 a set number of days. •Who are you, to put God to the test today, you, out Jb38:2;40:2f,
13 of all mankind, to set yourselves above him? •You of all people to put the Lord 7f;42:3 14 Almighty to the test! You do not understand anything, and never will. •If you Pr 14:10 cannot sound the depths of the heart of man or unravel the arguments of his 1Co2:11 mind, how can you fathom the God who made all things, or sound his mind or unravel his purposes? No, brothers, do not provoke the anger of the Lord 15 our God. •Although it may not be his will to help us within the next five days, he has the power to protect us for as many days as he pleases, just as he has the 16 power to destroy us before our enemies. •But you have no right to demand 17 guarantees where the designs of the Lord our God are concerned. For God is 18 not to be coerced as man is, nor is he, like mere man, to be cajoled. •Rather, Ps139:16-17 as we wait patiently for him to save, let us plead with him to help us. He will Rm11:33-34 hear our voice if such is his good pleasure.^c

- 19 •And indeed of recent times and still today there never has been one tribe 5:20-21;
of ours, or family, or village, or town that has worshipped gods made with human 11:10

- 22 •If indeed they capture us, as you expect, then all Judaea will be captured too, and our holy places plundered, and we shall answer with our blood for their unpeopling of our heritage, will recoil on our own heads among the nations whose slaves we will become, and our new masters will look down on us as an

[cf. Ps 42:10; Jl 2:17]. 22 Then, tired of crying and weary of weeping, they fell silent.'

8 a. The name of Judith (cf. Gn 26:34) seems to have been chosen by the author for its meaning 'the Jewess'. Judith, whose action rivals that of Jael, Jg 4: 17-22, is the model of a true daughter of Israel. In her song of triumph, 16:2,4, etc., the voice is that of the whole nation personified in her.

b. This genealogy omits the name of Simeon (found in certain MSS and versions), cf. 9:2. But v. 2 presupposes some tribal name.

c. Like Job, the elders of Bethulia were wrong to question God's intentions, Jb 38:2, etc.; like him they should submit in silence. But the author of Jdt teaches a more filial trust than Jb, and his conception of the power of prayer is already Christian.

d. This conviction, already stated by Achior, will be repeated by Judith in the presence of Holofernes. Judith joins her compatriots in a national examination of conscience, which acquits them of the idolatry long since denounced by the prophets but not rooted out until the period of the second Temple.

Gn21:1-9; 28:5; 29:22-30; 31
Dt 4:7
‘All this being so, let us rather give thanks to the Lord our God who, as he 25

the ordeals of Isaac, all that happened to Jacob in Syrian Mesopotamia while 27 he kept the sheep of Laban, his mother’s brother. •For as these ordeals were intended by him to search their hearts, so now this is not vengeance God exacts against us, but a warning inflicted by the Lord on those who are near his heart.’

Uzziah replied, ‘Everything you have said has been spoken from sincerity 28 of heart and no one will contradict a word of it. •Not that today is the first time 29 your wisdom has been displayed; from your earliest years all the people have known how shrewd you are and of how sound a heart. •But, parched with 30 thirst, the people forced us to act as we had promised them and to bind ourselves by an inviolable oath. •You are a devout woman; pray to the Lord, then, to 31 send us a downpour to fill our cisterns, so that our faintness may pass.’ 29

Judith replied, ‘Listen to me. I intend to do something, the memory of which 32 will be handed down to the children of our race from age to age. •Tonight you 33 must be at the gate of the town. I shall make my way out with my attendant. 32
Before the time fixed by you for surrendering the town to our enemies, the Lord will make use of me to rescue Israel. •You must not ask what I intend to do; 34
I will not tell you until I have done it.’ •Uzziah and the chief man said, ‘Go in 35 peace. May the Lord show you a way to take revenge on our enemies.’ •And 36 leaving the upper room they went back to their posts.

IV. JUDITH AND HOLOFERNES

Judith goes to the camp of Holofernes

10 Thus Judith called on the God of Israel. When she had finished praying, ¹ she rose from where she lay, summoned her attendant and went down into ² the rooms which she used on sabbath days and feasts. •There she removed the ³ sackcloth she was wearing and, taking off her widow's dress, she washed all over, anointed herself with costly perfumes, dressed her hair, wrapped a turban round it and put on the dress she used to wear on joyful occasions when her husband Manasseh was alive. •She put sandals on her feet, put on her necklaces, ⁴ bracelets, rings, earrings and all her jewellery, and made herself beautiful enough ⁵ to catch the eye of every man who saw her.^a •Then she handed her attendant ⁶ a skin of wine and a flask of oil, filled a bag with barley girdle cakes, cakes of dried fruit and pure loaves,^b and wrapping all these provisions up gave them ⁷ to her as well. •They then went out, making for the town gate of Bethulia. There ⁸ they found Uzziah waiting with the two elders of the town, Chabris and Charmis. When they saw Judith, her face so changed and her clothes so different, they were ⁹ lost in admiration of her beauty. They said to her:

'May the God of our ancestors keep you in his favour! 8
May he grant your purposes fulfilment to the glory of the sons of Israel, to the greater glory of Jerusalem!'

Judith worshipped God, and then she said, 'Have the town gate opened for me ⁹ so that I can go out and make all your wishes come true'. They did as she asked and gave orders to the young men to open the gate for her. •This done, Judith ¹⁰ went out accompanied by her maid, while the men of the town watched her all the way down the mountain and across the valley, until they lost sight of her.

As the women were making straight through the valley, an advance unit of ¹¹ Assyrians intercepted them, •and seizing Judith began questioning her. 'Which ¹² side are you on? Where do you come from? Where are you going?' 'I am a daughter of the Hebrews,' she replied 'and I am fleeing from them since they ¹³ will soon be your prey. •I am on my way to see Holofernes, the general of your army, to give him trustworthy information.^c I will show him the road to take ¹⁴ if he wants to capture all the highlands without losing one man or one life.' As the men listened to what she was saying, they stared in astonishment at the ¹⁵ sight of such a beautiful woman. •'It will prove the saving of you,' they said ¹⁶ to her 'coming down to see our master of your own accord. You had better go to his tent; some of our men will escort you and hand you over to him. •Once ¹⁷ you are in his presence do not be afraid. Tell him what you have just told us and you will be well treated.' •They then detailed a hundred of their men as escort ¹⁸ for herself and her attendant, and these led them to the tent of Holofernes.

News of her coming had already spread through the tents, and there was a ¹⁹ general stir in the camp. She was still outside the tent of Holofernes waiting to be announced, when a crowd began forming round her. •They were immensely ²⁰ impressed by her beauty and impressed with the Israelites because of her. 'Who ²¹ could despise a people having women like this?' they kept saying. 'Better not leave one man of them alive; let any go and they would twist the whole world ²² round their fingers!'

Then the bodyguard and adjutants of Holofernes came out and led Judith ²³ into the tent. •Holofernes was resting on his bed under a canopy of purple and ²⁴ gold studded with emeralds and precious stones. •The men announced her and ²⁵

he came out to the open part of the tent, with silver torches carried before him.
 20 When Judith confronted the general and his adjutant, the beauty of her face astonished them all. She fell on her face and did homage to him, but his servants raised her from the ground.

The first meeting of Judith with Holofernes

1 11 'Courage, woman,' Holofernes said 'do not be afraid. I have never hurt anyone who chose to serve Nebuchadnezzar, king of the whole world.
 2 Even now, if your nation of mountain dwellers had not insulted me, I would
 3 not have raised a spear against them. This was their fault, not mine. •But tell me, why have you fled from them and come to us?... Anyhow, this will prove the saving of you. Courage! You will live through this night, and many after.
 4 No one shall hurt you. No, you shall be treated as well as all those are who serve my lord King Nebuchadnezzar.'

5 Judith said, 'Please listen favourably to what your slave has to say. Permit
 6 your servant to speak in your presence. I will speak no word of a lie in my lord's 7 presence tonight.^a •You have only to follow your servant's advice and God will 8 bring your work to a successful conclusion; in what my lord undertakes he shall 9 not fail. •Long life to Nebuchadnezzar, king of the whole world, who has sent 10 you to set every living soul to rights; may his power endure! Since, thanks to 11 you, he is served not only by men, but through your compulsion the wild animals
 12 themselves, the cattle, and the birds of the air are to live in the service of Nebuchadnezzar and his whole House.

Jr 27:6
 Ba3:16-17
 Dn 2:38

13 'We have indeed heard of your genius and adroitness of mind. It is known 14 everywhere in the world that throughout the empire you have no rival for ability, 15 wealth of experience and brilliance in waging war. •We have also heard what 16 Achior said in his speech to your council. The men of Bethulia having spared 17 him, he has told them everything that he said to you. •Now, master and lord, 18 do not disregard what he said; keep it in your mind, since it is true;^b our nation 19 will not be punished, the sword will indeed have no power over them, unless 20 they sin against their God. •But as it is, my lord need expect no repulse or 21 setback, since death is about to fall on their heads, for sin has gained a hold 22 over them, provoking the anger of their God each time that they commit it.
 23 As they are short of food and their water is giving out, they have resolved to 24 fall back on their cattle and decided to make use of all the things that God has,
 25 by his laws, forbidden them to eat.^c •Not only have they made up their minds 26 to eat the first-fruits of corn and the tithes of wine and oil, though these have 27 been consecrated by them and set apart for the priests who serve in Jerusalem 28 in the presence of our God and may not, lawfully, even be touched by the 29 people,^d •but they have even sent men to Jerusalem—where the inhabitants are 30 doing much the same—to bring them back authorisation from the Council of 31 Elders. •Now this will be the outcome: when the permission arrives and they act 32 on it, that very day they shall be delivered over to you for destruction.

Dt 14:22+

16 'When I, your servant, came to know all this, I fled from them. God has sent

10 a. Vulg. adds 'And the Lord also gave her more beauty, since all this dressing-up proceeded not from sensuality, but from virtue' (cf. Est 5:1 Greek, 15:4,5 Vulg.). The Greek, which relates Judith's bold enterprise without qualification, leaves it to be understood up to the cry of thanksgiving in 13:16 that God is with her and will keep her safe.

b. Judith seems more scrupulous about legal purity than Esther, more exacting even than the Law itself, cf. 11:17; 12:6-9.

c. The protestations of truth, cf. 11:5,10, ascribed to Judith, who is determined to deceive Holofernes, 11:12-19, are to be taken in the moral context of the patriarchal age (cf. Gn 27:1-25; 34:13-29; 37:32-34) or of the wars of Yahweh in the days of the judges (Jos 2:

1-7; Jg 4:17-22), when the story is supposed to take place.

11 a. Judith's speech is ingeniously ambiguous. The 'work' and the 'lord' mentioned in v. 6 mean one thing for her, another for Holofernes. Same ambiguity in v. 16. In v. 8 Judith praises Holofernes' perspicacity at the very moment she hoodwinks him.

b. Another ambiguity; Achior's words had been true, but Judith's prophecy of what the Jews will do is not.

c. Vulg. makes 'the drinking of blood' the fault, Lv 17:10-14.

d. Here again the author exaggerates the demands of the Law, possibly following a Pharisaic tradition.

11:5+ me to do things with you at which the world will be astonished when it hears. Your servant is a devout woman; she honours the God of heaven day and night. I therefore propose, my lord, to stay with you. I, your servant, will go out every night into the valley and pray to God to let me know when they have committed their sin. •I will then come and tell you, so that you can march out with your whole army; and none of them will be able to resist you. •I will be your guide right across Judaea until you reach Jerusalem; there I will enthrone you in the very middle of the city. Then you shall lead them like sheep and never a dog dare open its mouth to bark at you. Foreknowledge tells me this; this has been foretold to me and I have been sent to reveal it to you.'

9:13 Her words pleased Holofernes and all his adjutants. Full of admiration at her wisdom they exclaimed, 'There is no woman like her from one end of the earth to the other, so lovely of face and so wise of speech!' •Holofernes said, 'God has done well to send you ahead of your people. Strength will be ours, and ruin theirs who have insulted my lord. •As for you, you are as beautiful as you are eloquent; if you do as you have promised, your god shall be my god, and you yourself shall make your home in the palace of King Nebuchadnezzar and be famous throughout the world.'

Dn 1:8
12 With that he had her brought in to where his silver dinner service was already laid, and had his own food served to her and his own wine poured out for her. •But Judith said, 'I would rather not eat this, in case I incur some fault. What I have brought will be enough for me.' •'Suppose your provisions run out,' Holofernes asked 'how could we get more of the same sort? We have no one belonging to your race here.' •'Never fear, my lord,' Judith answered 'the Lord will have used me to accomplish his plan, before your servant has finished these provisions.' •Then the adjutants of Holofernes took her to a tent where she slept till midnight. A little before the morning watch she rose. •She had already sent this request to Holofernes, 'Let my lord kindly give orders for your servant to be allowed to go out and pray', and Holofernes had ordered his guards not to prevent her. She stayed in the camp for three days; she went out each night to the valley of Bethulia and washed at the spring where the picket had been posted. •As she came up again she prayed to the Lord God of Israel to guide her in her plan to relieve the children of her people. •Having purified herself, she would return and stay in her tent until her meal was brought her in the evening.

Judith at the banquet of Holofernes

On the fourth day Holofernes gave a banquet, inviting only his own staff and none of the other officers. •He said to Bagoas, the eunuch in charge of his personal affairs, 'Go and persuade that Hebrew woman you are looking after to come and join us and eat and drink in our company. •We shall be disgraced if we let a woman like this go without knowing her better.^a If we do not seduce her, everyone will laugh at us!' •Bagoas then left Holofernes and went to see Judith. 'Would this young and lovely woman condescend to come to my lord?' he asked. 'She shall occupy the seat of honour opposite him, drink the joyful wine with us and be treated today like one of the Assyrian ladies-in-waiting in the palace of Nebuchadnezzar. •'Who am I' Judith replied 'to resist my lord? I will not hesitate to do whatever he wishes, and doing this will be my joy to my dying day.'

At this she rose and put on her dress and all her feminine adornments. Her maid preceded her, and on the floor in front of Holofernes spread the fleece which Bagoas had given Judith for her daily use to lie on as she ate.^b

Judith entered and took her place. The heart of Holofernes was ravished at the sight; his very soul was stirred. He was seized with a violent desire to sleep with her; and indeed since the first day he saw her, he had been waiting for an opportunity to seduce her. •'Drink, drink!' Holofernes said 'Enjoy yourself

18 with us!' • 'I am delighted to do so, Lord, for since my birth I have never felt 19 my life more worthwhile than today.' • She took what her maid had prepared, 20 and ate and drank facing him. • Holofernes was so enchanted with her that he drank far more wine than he had drunk on any other day in his life.

1 13 It grew late and his staff hurried away. Bagoas closed the tent from the outside, having shown out those who still lingered in his lord's presence.
2 They went to their beds wearied with all their drinking, • and Judith was left
3 alone in the tent with Holofernes who had collapsed wine-sodden on his bed.
4 Judith then told her maid to stay just outside the bedroom and wait for her to 5 come out, as she did every morning. She had let it be understood she would be going out to her prayers and had also spoken of her intention to Bagoas.

6 By now everyone had left Holofernes and no one, either important or unimportant, was left in the bedroom. Standing beside the bed, Judith murmured to herself:

'Lord God, to whom all strength belongs, prosper what my hands are now to do for the greater glory of Jerusalem, now is the time to recover your heritage and further my designs
to crush the enemies arrayed against us'.

6 With that she went up to the bedpost by Holofernes' head and took down his 7 scimitar; • coming closer to the bed she caught him by the hair and said, 'Make 8 me strong today, Lord God of Israel!' • Twice she struck at the nape of his neck 9 with all her strength and cut off his head. • She then rolled his body off the 10 bed and tore the canopy down from the bedposts. Soon after, she went out 11 and gave the head of Holofernes to her attendant • who put it in her food bag.
12 The two then left the camp together, as they always did when they went to pray.
Once they were out of the camp, they skirted the ravine, climbed the slope to Bethulia and made for the gates.

Jg 4:21

Judith brings the head of Holofernes to Bethulia

11 From a distance, Judith shouted to the guards on the gates, 'Open the gate!
12 Open! For the Lord our God is with us still, displaying his strength in Israel 13 and his might against our enemies, as he has today!' • Hearing her voice, the 14 townsmen hurried down to the town gate and summoned the elders. • Everyone, 15 great and small, came running down, since her arrival was unexpected. They 16 threw the gate open, welcomed the women, lit a fire to see by and crowded 17 round them. • Then Judith raised her voice and said, 'Praise God! Praise him!
18 Praise the God who has not withdrawn his mercy from the House of Israel, 19 but has shattered our enemies by my hand tonight!' • She pulled the head out of the bag and held it for them to see. 'This is the head of Holofernes, general-in-chief of the Assyrian army; here is the canopy under which he lay drunk!
20 The Lord has struck him down by the hand of a woman! • Glory to the Lord who has protected me in the course I took! My face seduced him, only to his

V. TRIUMPH

The Jews attack the Assyrian camp

14 Judith said, ‘Listen to me, brothers. Take this head and hang it on your battlements. •When morning comes and the sun is up, let every man take his arms and every able-bodied man leave the town. Appoint a leader for these, as if you meant to march down to the plain against the Assyrian advance post.
But you must not do this. •The Assyrians will gather up their equipment, make for their camp and wake up their commanders; they in turn will rush to the tent of Holofernes and not be able to find him. They will then be seized with panic and flee at your advance. •All you and the others who live in the territory of Israel will have to do is to give chase and slaughter them as they retreat.

‘But before you do this, call me Achior the Ammonite^a for him to see the man who thought so meanly of the House of Israel and recognise this as the man who sent him to us as a man already doomed to die.’ (13) So they had Achior brought from the house of Uziah. No sooner had he arrived and seen the head of Holofernes held by a member of the people’s assembly than he fell down on his face in a faint. •They lifted him up. He then threw himself at the feet of Judith, and prostrate before her exclaimed:

‘May you be blessed in all the tents of Judah and in every nation;
at the sound of your name
men will be seized with dread.

31

‘Now tell me exactly what you have been doing in these past few days.’ And surrounded by all the people Judith told him everything she had done from the day she left Bethulia to the moment when she was speaking. •When she came to the end, the people cheered at the tops of their voices until the town echoed.
(14) •Achior, recognising the mighty works of the God of Israel, believed ardently in him and, accepting circumcision, was incorporated in the House of Israel forever.

Dt23:4-5

At daybreak they hung the head of Holofernes on the ramparts. Every man took his arms and they all went out in groups to the slopes of the mountain.
Seeing this, the Assyrians sent word to their leaders, who in turn reported to the generals, the captains of thousands and all the other officers; •and these in their turn reported to the tent of Holofernes. ‘Rouse our master,’ they said

712
813
9,11

12 to his major-domo 'these slaves^b have dared to march down on us to attack—13 and to be wiped out to a man!' •Bagoas went inside and clapped his hands in 14 front of the curtain dividing the tent, thinking that Holofernes was sleeping 15 with Judith. •But as no one seemed to hear, he drew the curtain and went into 16 the bedroom, to find him thrown down dead on the threshold and the head
 17 gone from his body. •He gave a great shout, wept, sobbed, shrieked and rent 18 his clothes. •He then went into the tent which Judith had occupied and could 19 not find her either. Then, rushing out to the men, he shouted, •'Those slaves 20 have duped us! One Hebrew woman has brought shame on the House of 21 Nebuchadnezzar. Holofernes is lying dead on the ground, with his head cut off!' 13:15;
 16:5-9
 22 When they heard this, the leaders of the Assyrian army tore their tunics in 23 consternation, and the camp rang with their wild cries and their shouting. Jg 9:54

1 15 When the men who were still in their tents heard the news they were
 2 appalled. •They were so gripped with panic and dread that no two men
 3 could keep together: the rout was complete. They fled along every track across 4 the plain or through the mountains. •The men who had been bivouacking in 5 the mountains round Bethulia were fleeing too. Then all the Israelite warriors
 6 charged down on them. •Uzziah sent messengers to Betomasthaim, Bebai, 7 Choba, Kola and through all the highlands of Israel, to inform them of what 8 had happened and to urge them all to hurl themselves on the enemy and 9 annihilate them. •As soon as the Israelites heard the news, they fell on them as 10 one man and massacred them all the way to Choba. The men of Jerusalem and 11 the entire mountain country^a also rallied to them, once they had been informed 12 of the events in the enemy camp. Then the men of Gilead and Galilee attacked 13 them on the flank and struck at them fiercely till they neared Damascus and 14 its territory. •The rest, who had stayed in Bethulia, fell upon the Assyrian camp
 15 and looted it to their great profit. •The Israelites returning from the slaughter 16 seized what was left. The hamlets and villages of the mountain country and the 17 plain also captured a great deal of booty, since there were vast stores of it. Est 9:5,16
 Est 9:10

Israel gives thanks

8 Joakim the high priest and the Council of Elders of Israel, who were in 9 Jerusalem, came to gaze on the benefits that the Lord had lavished on Israel
 10 and to see Judith and congratulate her. •On coming to her house they blessed 11 her with one accord, saying:

'You are the glory of Jerusalem!
 You are the great pride of Israel!
 You are the highest honour of our race!

'By doing all this with your own hand
 you have deserved well of Israel, and God has approved what you have done.

'May you be blessed by the Lord Almighty
 in all the days to come!'^b

12 All the people answered, 'Amen!'

13,14 The people looted the camp for thirty days. They gave Judith the tent of Holofernes, all his silver plate, his divans, his drinking bowls and all his furniture.
 She took this, loaded her mule, harnessed her carts and heaped the things into 15 them. •All the women of Israel, hurrying to see her, formed choirs of dancers in her honour. Judith distributed branches to the women who accompanied her; Ex 15:20

she and her companions put on wreaths of olive. Then she took her place at the head of the procession and led the women as they danced. All the men of Israel, armed and garlanded, followed them, singing hymns. •With all Israel round her, Judith broke into this song of thanksgiving and the whole people sang this hymn aloud:•

16

‘Praise^a my God with the tambourine, sing to the Lord with the cymbal,
let psalm and canticle mingle for him,
extol his name, invoke it!

For the Lord is a God who shatters war;
he has pitched^b his camp in the middle of his people to deliver me from the hands of my enemies.

‘Assyria came down from the mountains of the north,
came with tens of thousands of his army.

Their multitude blocked the wadis, their horses covered the hills.

He promised to burn up my country,
destroy my young men with the sword,
dash my sucklings to the ground,
make prey of my little ones,
carry off my maidens;

but the Lord Almighty has thwarted them
by a woman’s hand.

For their hero did not fall at the young men’s hands,
it was not sons of Titans who struck him down,
no proud giants made that attack,
but Judith, the daughter of Merari,
who disarmed him with the beauty of her face.

She laid aside her widow’s dress to rally those who were oppressed in Israel;
she anointed her face with perfume,
bound her hair under a turban,
put on a linen gown to seduce him.

Her sandal ravished his eye,
her beauty took his soul prisoner . . .
and the scimitar cut through his neck!

‘The Persians trembled at her boldness,
the Medes were daunted by her daring.

These were struck with fear when my lowly ones shouted, these were seized with terror when my weak ones shouted louder,
and when they shouted loudest, these gave ground.

The children of mere girls ran them through,
pierced them like the offspring of deserters.
They perished in the battle of my Lord!

‘I will sing a new song to my God.
Lord, you are great, you are glorious,
wonderfully strong, unconquerable.

May your whole creation serve you!
For you spoke and things came into being,
you sent your breath and they were put together,
and no one can resist your voice.

‘Should mountains topple
to mingle with the waves,

Judith lives to old age. Her death

When this was over, everyone returned home. Judith went back to Bethulia and lived on her estate; as long as she lived, she enjoyed a great reputation throughout the country. •She had many suitors, but all her days, from the time her husband Manasseh died and was gathered to his people, she never gave herself to another man. •Her fame spread more and more the older she grew in her husband's house; she lived to the age of a hundred and five years.^c She emancipated her maid, then died in Bethulia and was buried in the cave where Manasseh her husband lay. •The House of Israel mourned her for seven days. Before her death she had distributed her property among her own relations and those of her husband Manasseh.

INTRODUCTORY

Mordecai's dream^a

1 In the second year of the reign of the great King Ahasuerus,^b on the first day 1a
2:5 of Nisan, a dream^c came to Mordecai son of Jair, son of Shimei, son of Kish, 11:2 of the tribe of Benjamin, •a Jew living at Susa and holding high office at the royal 1b court. •He was one of the captives whom Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had 3 2K 24:8,15 deported from Jerusalem with Jeconiah, king of Judah.^d 1c
4

This was his dream. There were cries and noise, thunder and earthquakes, and 1d disorder over the whole earth. •Then two great dragons came forward, each ready 5 for the fray, and set up a great roar. •At the sound of them every nation made ready 1e to wage war against the nation of the just. •A day of darkness and gloom, of affliction 6 and distress, oppression and great disturbance on earth! •The righteous nation was 7 thrown into consternation at the fear of the evils awaiting them, and prepared for 1f death, crying out to God. •Then from their cry, as from a little spring, there grew 1g
8
9 a great river, a flood of water. •Light came as the sun rose, and the humble 1h
1i
8:16 Zp 2:3+ were raised up and devoured the mighty. 1k 1l

On awakening from this dream and vision of God's designs, Mordecai thought 1l deeply on the matter, trying his best all day to discover what its meaning might be. 12

2:21f; 6:2f A plot against the king

Lodging at court with Bigthan and Teresh,^e two of the king's eunuchs who 1m guarded the palace, •Mordecai got wind of their intentions and uncovered their 12:1 plot. Learning that they were preparing to assassinate King Ahasuerus, he warned 1n the king against them. •The king gave orders for the two eunuchs to be tortured; 2 they confessed and were executed. •The king then had these events recorded in his 3
Chronicles, while Mordecai himself also wrote an account of them. •The king then 4 6:3 appointed Mordecai to an office at court and rewarded him with presents. •But 1p
3:1f Haman son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, who enjoyed high favour with the king, 5
3:5-6 determined to injure Mordecai in revenge for the king's two eunuchs. 1q

I. AHASUERUS AND VASHTI

Ahasuerus' banquet

1 It was in the days of Ahasuerus, the Ahasuerus whose empire stretched from 1
India to Ethiopia and comprised one hundred and twenty-seven provinces. 2
In those days, when King Ahasuerus was sitting on his royal throne in the 3 Jdt 1:16 citadel of Susa, •in the third year of his reign, he gave a banquet at his court 4 for all his administrators and ministers, chiefs of the army^f of Persia and Media, 5 nobles and governors of provinces. •Thus he displayed the riches and splendour 6 of his empire and the pomp and glory of his majesty; the festivities went on for a long time, a hundred and eighty days.

5 When this period was over, for seven days the king gave a banquet for all the people living in the citadel of Susa, to high and low alike, in the enclosure
 6 adjoining the king's palace. •There were white and violet hangings fastened with cords of fine linen and purple thread to silver rings on marble columns, couches of gold and silver on a pavement of porphyry, marble, mother-of-pearl and
 7 precious stones. •For drinking there were golden cups of various design and the royal wine in plenty according to the king's bounty. •By royal command,
 8 however, drinking was not obligatory, the king having instructed the officials of his household to treat each guest according to his own wishes.

The affair of Vashti

9 Queen Vashti,^g too, had given a banquet for the women in the royal palace
 10 of King Ahasuerus. •On the seventh day, when the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Zethar and 11 Carkas, the seven eunuchs in attendance on the person of King Ahasuerus, to bring Queen Vashti before the king crowned with her royal diadem, in order to display her beauty to the people and the administrators, for she was very 12 beautiful. •But Queen Vashti refused to come at the king's command delivered by the eunuchs. The king was very angry at this and his rage grew hot. •He then 13 consulted the wise men who were versed in the law,^h since it was the practice to refer matters affecting the king to expert lawyers and jurists. •He summoned Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena and Memucan, the 14 seven administrators of Persia and Media who had privileged access to the royal presenceⁱ and occupied the leading positions in the kingdom. •'According to law,' he said 'what is to be done to Queen Vashti for not obeying the command
 15 of King Ahasuerus delivered by the eunuchs?' •In the presence of the king and of the administrators Memucan answered, 'Vashti has wronged not only the king,
 16 but also all the administrators and nations inhabiting the provinces of King Ahasuerus. •The queen's conduct will soon become known to all the women
 17 and encourage them in a contemptuous attitude towards their husbands, since they will say, "King Ahasuerus ordered Queen Vashti to appear before him and 18 she did not come". •The wives of all the Persian and Median administrators will hear of the queen's answer before the day is out, and will start talking to the king's administrators in the same way; that will mean contempt and anger
 19 all round. •If it is the king's pleasure, let him issue a royal edict, to be irrevocably incorporated into the laws of the Persians and Medes,^j to the effect that Vashti
 20 is never to appear again before King Ahasuerus, and let the king confer her royal dignity on a worthier woman. •Let this edict issued by the king be proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of his realm, and all the women will henceforth bow to the authority of their husbands, both high and low alike.'

21 This speech pleased the king and the administrators and the king did as 22 Memucan advised. •He sent letters to all the provinces of the kingdom, to each province in its own script and to each nation in its own language, ensuring that every husband should be master in his own house.

1 a. The Church has accepted those passages in the Greek version not contained in the Hebr. text; they are printed here in italics. St Jerome put them in an appendix at the end of his Lat. version, 10:4f. We replace them in their Greek arrangement (see ch. 10 note c.) with the numbering of the Rahlfs edition of LXX.

b. Ahasuerus (Hebr. Ahashwerosh) transcribes the Persian Kshajarsha, in Greek Xerxes, cf. Ezr 4:6. Here the Greek has Artaxerxes.

c. The Greek text, alone in recording this dream, outlines the story in advance in enigmatic and apocalyptic terms (the key to it is found in 10:3a-k), thus emphasising the part played by God in subsequent events.

d. The author makes free with chronology (see Introduction); Mordecai is a courtier of Ahasuerus (about 480) though exiled in the reign of Jeconiah (about 598).

e. The name-forms vary in the texts.

f. 'chiefs of the army...' corr.

g. Vashti, like Esther, is unknown to history.

h. 'the law' corr. following Rec. Luc.; 'the times' Hebr.

i. I.e. in the king's confidence.

j. The theme of an irrevocable decree which is promptly revoked is common in those books of the Bible showing Persian influence; Jewish irony here, no doubt.

II. MORDECAI AND ESTHER

Esther becomes queen

2 Some time after this, when the king's wrath had abated, Ahasuerus remem- 1 bered Vashti, how she had behaved, and the measures taken against her.^a
The king's courtiers-in-waiting said, 'Let beautiful girls be selected for the king. 2
Let the king appoint commissioners throughout the provinces of his realm to 3 bring all these beautiful young virgins to the citadel of Susa, to the harem under the authority of Hegai the king's eunuch, custodian of the women. Let him provide them with what they need for their adornment, •and let the girl who 4 pleases the king take Vashti's place as queen.' This advice pleased the king and he acted on it.

Now in the citadel of Susa there lived a Jew called Mordecai son of Jair, son 5 of Shimei, son of Kish, of the tribe of Benjamin, •who had been deported from 6
Jerusalem among the captives taken away with Jeconiah king of Judah by 1:1a-c Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon. •He had brought up Hadassah, otherwise 7 called Esther,^b his uncle's daughter, who had lost both father and mother; the girl had a good figure and a beautiful face, and on the death of her parents Mordecai had adopted her as his daughter.^c

Following the promulgation of the king's edict, a great number of girls were 8 brought to the citadel of Susa where they were entrusted to Hegai. Esther also Dn1:3-20 was taken to the king's palace and entrusted to Hegai, the custodian of the women. •The girl pleased him and won his favour. Not only did he quickly 9 provide her with all she needed for her dressing room and her meals, but he gave her seven special maids from the king's household and transferred her and her maids to the best part of the harem. •Esther did not reveal her race or 10 kindred, since Mordecai had forbidden her to do so. •Mordecai walked up 11 and down in front of the courtyard of the harem every day, to learn how Esther was and how she was being treated.

Each girl had to appear in turn before King Ahasuerus, after a delay of 12 twelve months fixed by the regulations for the women; this preparatory period was occupied as follows: six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with spices and lotions commonly used for feminine beauty treatment. •Before going 13 into the king, each girl was allowed to take with her from the harem to the king's palace whatever she chose. •She went there in the evening, and the following 14 morning returned to another harem entrusted to the care of Shaashgaz, the king's 2:19 eunuch, custodian of the concubines. She did not go to the king any more, unless 4:11 he was particularly pleased with her and had her summoned by name.

But when it was the turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail whose nephew 15
Mordecai had adopted her as his own daughter, to go into the king's presence, she did not ask for anything beyond what had been assigned her by Hegai, the king's eunuch, custodian of the women. And Esther soon won the admiration of all who saw her. •She was brought to King Ahasuerus in his royal palace in the 16 tenth month, which is called Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign; •and the 17
king liked Esther better than any of the other women; none of the other girls 4:17u-y found so much favour and approval with him. So he set the royal diadem on her head and proclaimed her queen instead of Vashti.

Then the king gave a great banquet, Esther's banquet, for all his administrators 18 and ministers, decreed a holiday for all the provinces and distributed largesse with royal prodigality.

Mordecai and Haman

2:14 When Esther, like the other girls, had been transferred to the second harem,^d 19
she had not revealed her kindred or race, in obedience to the orders of Mordecai, 20 whose instructions she continued to follow as when she had been under his care.^e

- 21 At this time Mordecai was attached to the Chancellery^f and two malcontents, 1:1m; 6:2 22 Bigthan and Teresh, king's eunuchs belonging to the Guardians of the Threshold, 23 plotted to assassinate King Ahasuerus. •Mordecai came to hear of this and informed Queen Esther, who in turn, on Mordecai's authority, told the king.
 24 The matter was investigated and proved to be true. The two conspirators were sent to the gallows, and the incident was recorded in the Book of the Chronicles in the presence of the king.
 1 3 Shortly afterwards, King Ahasuerus singled out Haman son of Hammedatha, 1:1r
 2 from the land of Agag,^a for promotion. He raised him in rank and precedence 3 above all his colleagues, the other officers of state, •and gave orders that all the officials employed at the Chancellery were to bow down and prostrate themselves 4 before Haman. Mordecai refused either to bow or prostrate himself.^b •'Why do 4:17d-e you flout the royal command?' the officials of the Chancellery asked Mordecai.
 5 They asked him this day after day, but he took no notice of them. In the end they reported the matter to Haman, wishing to see whether Mordecai would 6 persist in his attitude, since he had told them he was a Jew. •When Haman had 1:1r seen for himself that Mordecai did not bow or prostrate himself before him, he was seized with fury. •Having been told what race Mordecai belonged to, he could not be content with murdering Mordecai but made up his mind to wipe out all the members of Mordecai's race, the Jews, throughout the empire of Ahasuerus.

III. THE JEWS IN PERIL

The decree of extermination against the Jews

- 7 In the first month, that is the month of Nisan, of the twelfth year of King 9:24-26 8 Ahasuerus, they cast the pur^c (that is, the lot) before Haman for the day and the month. The lot falling on the twelfth month, which is Adar, •^dHaman said to King Ahasuerus, 'There is a certain unassimilated nation scattered among the other nations throughout the provinces of your realm; their laws are different 3:13d-e from those of all the other nations and they ignore the royal edicts;^e hence it Dn3:8-12 9 is not in the king's interests to tolerate them. •If it please the king to decree Ws2:14-15 their destruction, I am prepared to pay ten thousand talents of silver to the king's receivers, to be credited to the royal treasury.' 7:4

2 a. The Hebr. implies that the king regrets his treatment of Vashti. The Greek and Rec. Luc. suggest that he has forgotten her.

b. The name Esther is probably of Babylonian origin (Ishtar) like Mordecai's (Marduk), though cf. also Persian stareh, 'star'. Hadassah is a Hebr. name ('myrtle').

c. Greek has at the end 'he had brought her up to be his wife'. Post-Christian Jewish tradition accepts this view, making Esther the wife of Mordecai.

d. Text corrected. Hebr. and Vulg. 'When the girls were reassembled the second time, Mordecai was sitting at the Gate'; Greek 'Mordecai was on duty at the palace' (omitting this in v. 21).

e. The Greek, more religious in tone than the Hebr., reads 'Esther had not disclosed what country she came from. Mordecai had bidden her fear God and keep the commandments just as she did when she was with him, and Esther had not changed her way of life.'

f. The expression (lit. 'the king's gate') sometimes means the business of administration, sometimes the buildings in which this work was carried forward.

3 a. Country not known; the name is that of an Amalekite king conquered by Saul, 1 S 15:7-9, and may have been chosen to emphasise the antagonism of Haman and Mordecai who, like Saul, is a Benjaminite and a descendant of Kish.

b. The gesture in itself could not be objectionable for a Jew; it was the act of respect customary in the oriental court and also practised in Israel, cf. 1 K 1:23; 2 K 4:37, etc. Mordecai's refusal is not therefore a protest of fidelity to God and his Law, as in Dn 1:8; 3:12; 6:14, but a reaction of racial pride; the prayer in the Greek text gives it a religious significance, 4:17d-e.

c. A Babylonian word. Haman has already decided on the pogrom; he consults the lots only to learn the most propitious day. The Greek, complementing the Hebr., adds that Haman issued a decree in the 12th year of the king, that he cast lots to extirpate the race of Mordecai and that the lot fell on the 14th of the month called Adar.

d. Rec. Luc. paraphrases 'Haman in his jealousy and shaken to the core went red, and averted his eyes from him. Then with base heart he spoke evil to the king about Israel. "There is a race" he said "scattered throughout every kingdom, a bellicose and truculent people with its own laws. But of your laws, O king, they take no account, for they are, as every nation knows, an obstinate race. They defy your orders to the ruin of your honour."'

e. Complaints of this kind against the Jews are found in several documents of the hellenistic period, cf. 3:13a-e, Dn 1:8; 3:8-12; Jdt 12:2; Ezr 4:12f; Ws 2:14f and the apocryphal 3 Maccabees.

Gn 41:42 The king then took his signet ring off his hand and gave it to Haman son of 10
Hammedatha, the Agagite, the persecutor of the Jews. •‘Keep the money,’ he 11 said ‘and you can have the people too; do what you like with them.’

1:19 Then on the thirteenth day of the first month the royal scribes were summoned, 12
Dn 3:4,7 and copies were made of the orders addressed by Haman to the king’s satraps, to the governors ruling each province and to the principal officials of each people, to each province in its own script and to each people in its own language.
9:10 The edict was signed in the name of King Ahasuerus and sealed with his ring, and letters were sent by runners to every province of the realm ordering the 13 destruction, slaughter and annihilation of all Jews, young and old, women and children, on the one day, the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is Adar, and the seizing of their possessions.

The text of the letter was as follows: 13a

‘The great King, Ahasuerus, to the governors of the hundred and twenty-seven 13:1 provinces stretching from India to Ethiopia, and to their subordinate district commissioners.

Jdt 2:5 Dn 3:31 ‘Being placed in authority over many nations and ruling the whole world, I have 13b
resolved never to be carried away by the insolence of power, but always to rule with moderation and clemency, so as to assure for my subjects a life ever free from storms and, offering my kingdom the benefits of civilisation and free transit from end to end, to restore that peace which all men desire. •In consultation with our 13c advisers as to how this aim is to be effected, we have been informed by one of them, eminent among us for prudence and well proved for his unfailing devotion and unshakeable trustworthiness, and in rank second only to our majesty, Haman by name, •that there is, mingled among all the tribes of the earth a certain ill-disposed 13d people, opposed by its laws to every other nation and continually defying the royal ordinances, in such a way as to obstruct that form of government assured by us to the general good.

‘Considering therefore that this people, unique of its kind, is in complete opposi- 13e tion to all mankind from which it differs by its outlandish system of laws, that it is hostile to our interests and that it commits the most heinous crimes, to the point of endangering the stability of the realm:

8:12/ Gn 45:8 ‘We command that the people designated to you in the letters written by Haman, 13f appointed to watch over our interests and a second father to us, are all, including women and children, to be destroyed root and branch by the swords of their enemies, without any pity or mercy, on the fourteenth day of the twelfth month, Adar, of the present year, •so that, these past and present malcontents being in one day 13g forcibly thrown down to Hades, our government may henceforward enjoy perpetual stability and peace.’

The text of this decree, to be promulgated as law in each province, was 14 published to the various peoples, so that each might be ready for the day aforementioned. •At the king’s command, the runners set out with all speed; the 15 decree was first promulgated in the citadel of Susa.

While the king and Haman gave themselves up to feasting and drinking, consternation reigned in the city of Susa.^f

Mordecai and Esther try to avert the danger

Jdt 4:12 4 When Mordecai learned what had happened, he tore his garments and put on 1 sackcloth and ashes. Then he went right through the city, wailing loud and bitterly, •until he arrived in front of the Chancellery, which no one clothed in 2 sackcloth was allowed to enter. •And in every province, no sooner had the royal 3 edict been read than among the Jews there was great mourning, fasting, weeping and wailing, and many lay on sackcloth and ashes.^a

When Queen Esther’s maids and eunuchs came and told her, she was overcome 4 with grief. She sent clothes for Mordecai to put on instead of his sackcloth, but he refused them. •Then Esther summoned Hathach, a eunuch whom the 5 king had appointed to wait on her, and ordered him to go to Mordecai and enquire what was the matter and why he was acting in this way.

⁶ Hathach went out to Mordecai, who was still in the city square in front of ⁷ the Chancellery, and Mordecai told him what had happened to him personally, and also about the sum of money which Haman had offered to pay into the ⁸ royal treasury as compensation for the destruction of the Jews. •He also gave him a copy of the edict of extermination published in Susa for him to show ^{15:1} Esther for her information, with the message that she was to go to the king and ^{8a} ² implore his favour and plead with him for her people. •‘Remember your humble circumstances,’ he said ‘when you were fed by my hand. Since Haman, the second ^{8b} ³ person in the realm, has petitioned the king for our deaths, invoke the Lord,
‘speak to the king for us and save us from death!’^b

⁹ Hathach came back and told Esther what Mordecai had said;^c and she ¹¹ replied with the following message for Mordecai, •‘All the king’s servants and the people of his provinces know that for a man or woman who approaches the king in the inner court without being summoned there is one penalty: death, unless, by pointing his golden sceptre towards him, the king grants him his life.
 And I have not been summoned to the king for the last thirty days.’

2:14;4:17f

¹² These words of Esther were reported to Mordecai, •who sent back the ¹³ following reply, ‘Do not suppose that, because you are in the king’s palace, you ¹⁴ are going to be the one Jew to escape. •No; if you persist in remaining silent at such a time, relief and deliverance will come to the Jews from another place,^d but both you and the House of your father will perish. Who knows? Perhaps you have come to the throne for just such a time as this.’

Gn 45:7

¹⁵ Whereupon Esther sent this reply to Mordecai, •‘Go and assemble all the ¹⁶ Jews now in Susa and fast for me. Do not eat or drink day or night for three days. For my part, I and my maids will keep the same fast, after which I shall ¹⁷ go to the king in spite of the law; and if I perish, I perish.’ •Mordecai went

Mordecai’s prayer^e

^{17a} ^{13:8} Then calling to mind all the wonderful works of the Lord, he offered this prayer:

f. In Vet. Lat. the Jews now pray, expressing sorrow for the sins of the nation and appealing to the faithfulness of God.

4 a. Signs of mourning and repentance.

b. Vet. Lat. here has in addition to the Greek ‘Rise! Why do you sit in silence? Since you are set free, you and your House and your father’s House, all your people and all your descendants. Rise! Let us see if we can fight and suffer for our own people that God may show mercy on them.’

c. Vet. Lat. thus describes Esther’s distress ‘As Esther read her brother’s letter she tore her garments and lamented loudly. She shed many tears, her body trembled and her flesh became weak.’

d. The author of the Hebr. text avoids using the name of God.

e. The prayers of Mordecai and Esther are rich in O.T. piety, but they betray an introspective interest and a concern with self-justification that is not found in the older texts.

Esther's prayer

Queen Esther also took refuge with the Lord in the mortal peril which had overtaken her. She took off her sumptuous robes and put on sorrowful mourning. Instead of expensive perfumes she covered her head with ashes and dung. She humbled her body severely, and the former scenes of her happiness and elegance were now littered with tresses torn from her hair. She besought the Lord God of Israel in these words:

Esther presents herself at the palace

^{1a}
^{15:4} 5 On the third day,^a when she had finished praying, she took off her suppliant's ⁵ mourning attire and dressed herself in her full splendour. Radiant as she then appeared, she invoked God who watches over all men and saves them. Then ⁶ she took two maids with her. With a delicate air she leaned on one, while the other accompanied her carrying her train. She leaned on the maid's arm as though ⁷ languidly, but in fact because her body was too weak to support her; the other

5 a. The Hebr. text of vv. 1-2 is much shorter.
'I Three days later Esther put on her royal apparel and presented herself in the inner court of the palace, which was in front of the king's apartments. He was seated on the royal throne in the Royal Hall, facing the door. 2 No sooner had he seen Queen Esther standing in the court than she won his favour and he held out the golden sceptre he had in his hand to her.

Esther approached and touched the end of it.' V. 3 is presence of the king. He was seated on the royal throne, dressed in all his robes of state, glittering with gold and precious stones—a formidable sight. ^{1d} ¹⁰ •Raising his face, afire with majesty, he looked on her, blazing with anger. The queen sank down. She grew faint and the colour drained from her face, and she leaned her head against the maid who accompanied her. ^{1e} ¹¹ •But God changed the king's heart, inducing a milder spirit. He sprang from his throne in alarm and took her in his arms until she recovered, comforting her with soothing words. ^{1f} ¹² •‘What is the matter, Esther?’ he said ‘I am your brother. Take heart; you will not die; our order only ¹³ ² ^{14,15} applies to ordinary people. Come to me.’ •And raising his golden sceptre he laid it on her neck, embraced her and said, ‘Speak to me’. •‘My lord,’ she said ‘you ^{2a} ¹⁶ looked to me like an angel of God, and my heart was moved with fear of your majesty. For you are a figure of wonder, my lord, and your face is full of ¹⁷ graciousness.’ •But as she spoke she fell down in a faint. The king was distressed, and all his attendants tried their best to revive her. ^{2b} ^{18,19} •‘What is the matter, Queen ³ Esther?’ the king said. ‘Tell me what you desire; even if it is half my kingdom, I grant it you.’ •‘Would the king be pleased’ Esther replied ‘to come with Haman ⁴ today to the banquet I have prepared for him?’ •The king said, ‘Tell Haman ⁵ to come at once, so that Esther may have her wish’.

^{5:3} So the king and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared. •As ⁶ ⁷ ⁸ they drank their wine, the king again said to Esther, ‘Tell me what you request; I grant it to you. Tell me what you desire; even if it is half my kingdom, it is yours for the asking.’ •‘What do I desire, what do I request?’ Esther replied. •‘If I have found favour in the king's eyes, and if it is his pleasure to grant what I ask and to agree to my request, let the king and Haman come to the other banquet I intend to give them tomorrow, and then I will do as the king says.’

Haman left full of joy and high spirits that day; but when he saw Mordecai ⁹ at the Chancellery, neither standing up nor stirring at his approach, he felt a gust of anger. •He restrained himself, however. Returning home, he sent for ¹⁰ his friends and Zeresh his wife •and held forth to them about his dazzling wealth, ¹¹ his many children, how the king had raised him to a position of honour and promoted him over the heads of the king's administrators and ministers. •‘What ¹² is more,’ he added ‘Queen Esther just invited me and the king—no one else except me—to a banquet she was giving, and better still she has invited me and the king again tomorrow. •But what do I care about all this when all the while ¹³ I see Mordecai the Jew sitting there at the Chancellery?’ •‘Have a fifty-cubit ¹⁴ gallows run up,’ Zeresh his wife and all his friends said ‘and in the morning ask the king to have Mordecai hanged on it. Then accompany the king to the feast without a care in the world!’ Delighted with this advice, Haman had the gallows erected.

2 were seated at the banquet with Queen Esther •this second day, the king again said to Esther as they drank their wine, 'Tell me what you request, Queen Esther? 5:3
I grant it to you. Tell me what you desire; even if it is half my kingdom, it is yours
3 for the asking.' •'If I have found favour in your eyes, O king,' Queen Esther replied 'and if it please your majesty, grant me my life—that is what I request; 4 and the lives of my people—that is what I desire. •For we are doomed, I and my people, to destruction, slaughter and annihilation; if we had merely been condemned to become slaves and servant-girls, I would have said nothing; but as things are, it will be beyond the means of the persecutor to make good the 5 loss that the king is about to sustain.' •King Ahasuerus interrupted Queen 3:8-9 Esther, 'Who is this man?' he exclaimed. 'Where is he, the schemer of such an 6 outrage?' •Esther replied, 'The persecutor, the enemy? Why, this wretch Haman!'
7 Haman quaked with terror in the presence of the king and queen. •In a rage the king rose and left the banquet to go into the palace garden; while Haman, realising that the king was determined on his ruin, stayed behind to beg Queen Esther for his life.

8 When the king returned from the palace garden into the banqueting hall, he found Haman huddled across the couch where Esther was reclining. 'What!
the king exclaimed. 'Is he going to rape the queen before my eyes in my own palace?' The words were scarcely out of his mouth than a veil was thrown over 9 Haman's face.^a •Harbona, one of the eunuchs attending the king, was present.
He said, 'How convenient! There is that fifty-cubit gallows which Haman ran up for Mordecai, whose report saved the king's life. It is all ready at his house.' 10 'Hang him on it' said the king. •So Haman was hanged on the gallows which he had erected for Mordecai, and the king's wrath subsided.

The royal favour passes to the Jews

1 8 That same day King Ahasuerus gave Queen Esther the house of Haman, the 9:1
persecutor of the Jews. Mordecai was presented to the king, Esther having Pr 11:8; revealed their mutual relationship. •The king, who had recovered his signet ring 2 from Haman, took it off and gave it to Mordecai, while Esther gave Mordecai charge of Haman's house.

Esther again went to speak to the king. She fell at his feet, weeping and 3 imploping his favour, to frustrate the wicked scheme devised by Haman the Agagite and his plot against the Jews. •The king held out the golden sceptre 4 to her, whereupon Esther rose and stood face to face with him. •'If such is the 5 king's good pleasure,' she said 'and if I have found favour before him, if my petition seems proper to him and if I myself am pleasing to his eyes, may he be pleased to issue a written revocation of the letters which Haman son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, contrived to have written to procure the destruction of the Jews in every province of the realm. •For how can I look on, while my people 6 suffer what is in store for them? How can I bear to witness the extermination of my race?'

King Ahasuerus said to Queen Esther and to Mordecai the Jew, 'I for my 7 part have given Esther Haman's house, and have had him hanged on the gallows for planning to destroy the Jews. •You are free now to write to them as you 8 judge best, in the king's name, and seal what you write with the king's signet; for an order written in the king's name and sealed with his signet is irrevocable.'^a
The royal scribes were summoned at once—it was the third month, the month 9 of Sivan, on the twenty-third day^b—and at Mordecai's dictation an order was written to the Jews, the satraps, governors and administrators of the provinces stretching from India to Ethiopia, a hundred and twenty-seven provinces, to each province in its own script, and to each people in its own language, and to the Jews in their own script and language. •These letters, written in the name 10 of King Ahasuerus and sealed with the king's signet, were carried by couriers mounted on horses from the king's own stud-farms. •In them the king granted 11 the Jews, in whatever city they lived, the right to assemble in self-defence, with permission to destroy, slaughter and annihilate any armed force of any people or province that might attack them, together with their women and children, and to plunder their possessions, •with effect from the same day throughout the 12 provinces of King Ahasuerus—the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is Adar.

The decree of rehabilitation

The text of the letter was as follows:

'The great King, Ahasuerus, to the satraps of the hundred and twenty-seven 12a provinces which stretch from India to Ethiopia, to the provincial governors and to 12b all our loyal subjects, greeting.

'Many men, repeatedly honoured by the extreme bounty of their benefactors, 12c only grow the more arrogant. It is not enough for them to seek our subjects' 3 injury, but unable as they are to support the weight of their own surfeit they turn to scheming against their benefactors themselves. •Not content with banishing 12d gratitude from the human heart, but elated by the plaudits of men unacquainted with goodness, notwithstanding that all is for ever under the eye of God, they vainly expect to escape his justice, so hostile to the wicked. •Thus it has often 12e happened to those placed in authority that, having entrusted friends with the conduct of affairs and allowed themselves to be influenced by them, they find themselves sharing with these the guilt of innocent blood and involved in irremediable misfortunes, •the upright intentions of rulers having been misled by false arguments 12f of the evilly disposed. •This may be seen without recourse to the history of earlier times 12g to which we have referred; you have only to look at what is before you, at the crimes perpetrated by a plague of unworthy officials. •For the future we will exert our 12h efforts to assure the tranquillity and peace of the realm for all, •by adopting new 12i policies and by always judging matters that are brought to our notice in the most equitable spirit.

- ^{12k}¹⁰ ^{12l}¹¹ 'Thus Haman son of Hammedatha, a Macedonian,^c without a drop of Persian blood and far removed from our goodness, enjoyed our hospitality • and was treated by us with the benevolence which we show to every nation, even to the extent of being proclaimed our 'father' and being accorded universally the prostration of respect as second in dignity to the royal throne. • But he, unable to keep within his own high rank, schemed to deprive us of our realm and of our life. • Furthermore, by tortuous wiles and arguments, he would have had us destroy Mordecai, our saviour and constant benefactor, with Esther the blameless partner of our majesty, and their whole nation besides. • He thought by these means to leave us without support and so to transfer the Persian empire to the Macedonians. 3:13f
- ^{12m}¹² ¹²ⁿ¹³ 'But we find that the Jews, marked out for annihilation by this arch-scoundrel, are not criminals; they are in fact governed by the most just of laws. • They are sons of the Most High, the great and living God to whom we and our ancestors owe the continuing prosperity of our realm. • You will therefore do well not to act on the letters sent by Haman son of Hammedatha, since their author has been hanged at the gates of Susa with his whole household: a well-earned punishment which God, the ruler of all things, has speedily inflicted on him. • Put up copies of this letter everywhere, allow the Jews freedom to observe their own customs, and come to their help against anyone who attacks them on the day originally chosen for their maltreatment, that is the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is Adar. • For the all-powerful God has made this day a day of joy and not of ruin for his chosen people. • Jews, for your part, among your solemn festivals celebrate this as a special day with every kind of feasting, so that now and in the future, for you and for Persians of good will it may commemorate your rescue, and for your enemies^d may stand as a reminder of their ruin. - ¹³ ¹⁴ ¹⁵ ¹⁶ ¹⁷ The text of this edict, to be promulgated as law in each province, was published to the various peoples, so that the Jews could be ready on the day stated to avenge themselves on their enemies. • The couriers, mounted on the king's horses, set out in great haste and urgency at the king's command. The edict was also published in the citadel of Susa. • Mordecai left the royal presence in a princely gown of violet and white, with a great golden crown and a cloak of fine linen and purple. The city of Susa shouted for joy. • For the Jews there was light and gladness, joy and honour. • In every province and in every city, wherever the king's command and decree arrived, there was joy and gladness among the Jews, with feasting and holiday-making. Of the country's population many became Jews, since now the Jews were feared. Dn 5:7

Jdt 15:6 So the Jews struck down all their enemies with the sword, with resulting 5 slaughter and destruction, and worked their will on their opponents.^a •In the 6 citadel of Susa alone the Jews put five hundred men to death, •notably Parshan- 7
datha, Dalphon, Aspatha, •Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, •Parmashta, Arisai, 8 Aridai and Jezatha, •the ten sons of Haman son of Hammedatha, the persecutor 10 of the Jews. But they took no plunder.

3:13;9:15
Jdt 15:7,11 The number of those killed in the citadel of Susa was reported the same day 11 to the king, •who said to Queen Esther, 'In the citadel of Susa the Jews have killed 12 five hundred men and also the ten sons of Haman. What must they have done 13 5:3 in the other provinces of the realm? Tell me what you request; I grant it to you.
Tell me what else you desire; it is yours for the asking.' •'If such is the king's 13 pleasure,' Esther replied 'let the Jews of Susa be allowed to enforce today's decree tomorrow as well. And as for the ten sons of Haman, let their bodies be hanged on the gallows.' •Whereupon the king ordered this to be done; the 14 edict was issued in Susa and the ten sons of Haman were hanged. •Thus the 15 Jews of Susa reassembled on the fourteenth day of the month of Adar and killed 9:10 three hundred men in the city. But they took no plunder.

Jdt 15:6 The other Jews who lived in the king's provinces also assembled to defend 16 their lives and rid themselves of their enemies. They slaughtered seventy-five 17 thousand^b of their opponents. But they took no plunder. •This was on the 17 thirteenth day of the month of Adar. On the fourteenth day they rested and made it a day of feasting and gladness. •But for the Jews of Susa, who had 18 assembled on the thirteenth and fourteenth days, the fifteenth was the day they rested, making that a day of feasting and gladness.^c •This is why Jewish country 19 people, those who live in undefended villages, keep the fourteenth day of the month of Adar as a day of gladness, feasting and holiday-making, and exchange
Ne8:10-12
Rv 11:10 portions with one another, •whereas for those who live in cities the day of rejoicing 19a and exchanging portions with their neighbours is the fifteenth day of Adar.

V. THE FEAST OF PURIM

The official institution of the feast of Purim

Mordecai committed these events to writing. Then he sent letters to all the 20
Jews throughout the provinces of King Ahasuerus, both near and far, •enjoining 21 them to celebrate the fourteenth and fifteenth days of the month of Adar every year, •as the days on which the Jews had rid themselves of their enemies, and 22 the month in which their sorrow had been turned into gladness, and mourning into a holiday. He therefore told them to keep these as days of festivity and gladness when they were to exchange portions and make gifts to the poor.

9:29 Once having begun to observe them, the Jews undertook to continue these 23 practices about which Mordecai had written these words to them, •'Haman son 24 of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the persecutor of all the Jews, had plotted their 3:7 destruction and had cast the pur, that is, the lot, for their overthrow and ruin.
But when he went again to the king^d to ask him to order the hanging of Mordecai, 25
6:5-13 the wicked scheme which he had devised against the Jews recoiled on his own head, and both he and his sons were hanged on the gallows. •That is why these 26 days were called Purim, from the word pur.' And so, because of what was written in this letter, because of what they had seen for themselves and because of what 8:12u,17 had happened to them, •the Jews vowed and took on themselves and their 27 descendants and on all who should join them,^e to celebrate these two days without fail, in the manner prescribed and at the time appointed, year after year.
Thus commemorated and celebrated from generation to generation, in each 28 family, each province and each city, these days of Purim shall never be abrogated among the Jews, nor shall their memory die out among their race.

^fQueen Esther, the daughter of Abihail, wrote with full authority to ratify 29

- 30 this second letter, •and sent letters to all the Jews of the hundred and twenty- 9:23-26
seven provinces of the realm of Ahasuerus in terms of kindness and friendship 31 enjoining them to observe these days of Purim at the appointed time, as Mordecai the Jew had recommended, and in the manner prescribed for themselves and 32 their descendants, with additional ordinances for fasts and lamentations.^g •The ordinance of Esther fixed this observance of Purim and it was recorded in writing.

Note on the Greek translation of the book

- 3/ 11:1 In the fourth year of the reign of Ptolemy and Cleopatra, Dositheus, who affirmed that he was a priest and Levite, and Ptolemy his son brought the foregoing letter concerning the Purim. They maintained it as being authentic, the translation having been made by Lysimachus son of Ptolemy, a member of the Jerusalem community.^c

9 a. The account of these massacres is unhistorical (see Introduction), nor must it be taken for a eulogy of, or recommendation to, revenge. The very extravagance of the situations, the wildly exaggerated numbers and the rhetoric of the account betray the author's purpose. His dominant intention is to illustrate a very familiar biblical theme, the reversal of a situation to the advantage of the oppressed; to do this he assumes the outlook of those who recorded the wars of Israel, the 'eye for eye' mentality.

b. Greek 'fifteen thousand'.

c. Banquets, which occupy much of Est, later become features of the Day of Purim, a feast more civil than religious. Rec. Luc. alone mentions a short thanksgiving, 'And all the people cried aloud and shouted, "Be blessed, O Lord, for you are mindful of the covenants made with our ancestors! Amen."'

d. Following Greek. Hebr. 'But when she (Esther) went in to the king, he said...' (following word unintelligible).

e. Evidently the nationalistic character of the book does not exclude a wider outlook; proselytes share in the celebrations.

f. Conj. reading; vv. 30-32 necessitate adjustment of this verse.

g. These two unexpected injunctions doubtless have reference to 4:16; fasting has earned deliverance. From 9:20 onwards, the text appears to be a compound of documents of varying origin.

10 a. The Greek ascribes this entry to the king.

b. The last verse in the Hebr. and the concluding passage of the Greek tend to make this book more than ever 'the Book of Mordecai' rather than 'the Book of Esther', cf. 9:4. He, the man enlightened by God, has managed the whole affair. He is typically 'the Jew', just as Judith will become 'the Jewess'. This commemorative festival was first known as 'the Day of Mordecai', 2 M 15:36.

c. What follows in Vulg. has been adjusted to the order of the Greek text (ch. 1 note a.). The reader will find Vulg. 11:2-12:6 at the beginning of the book; Vulg. 13:1-7 after 3:13; Vulg. 13:8-14:19 after 4:17; Vulg. 15:1-3 after 4:8; Vulg. 15:4-19 in the note on 5:1; Vulg. 16:1-24 after 8:12.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOKS OF MACCABEES

The two books of Maccabees were not in the Jewish Canon of scripture, but their inspiration has been recognised by the Church (they are 'deutero-canonical' books). They treat of the Jewish struggle for religious and political independence against the Seleucid kings. The title of the books is derived from the name Maccabaeus, conferred on the central figure of the story, 1 M 2:4, and later passed on to his brothers.

The First Book of Maccabees places before us at the outset (Introduction, ch. 1-2) two irreconcilable enemies: a triumphant hellenism with some admiring Jewish supporters; and, opposed to it, the main body of the Jewish nation, faithful to the Law and the Temple. On the one hand, Antiochus Epiphanes desecrator of the Temple and persecutor; on the other, Mattathias, initiator of the crusade for religious freedom. The body of the book is divided into three parts, one for each of Mattathias' three sons who succeeded each other as leaders of the resistance movement. Judas Maccabaeus (166-160 B.C.), 3:1-9:22, wins a series of victories over Antiochus' generals, reconsecrates the Temple and secures religious freedom for his people. Under Demetrius I he is hampered at home by the intrigue of Alcimus the high priest, but he is still successful in the field and Nicanor, whose objective is to destroy the Temple, is defeated and killed. To consolidate his position Judas seeks alliance with Rome. He dies in battle. Jonathan, his brother, succeeds him (160-142), 9:23-12:53. Military gives way to political activity and Jonathan cleverly plays off one competitor for the Syrian throne against the other: his appointment as high priest by Alexander Balas is recognised by Demetrius II and confirmed by Antiochus VI. He seeks alliance with the Romans and Spartans. More and more territory comes under his control and peace at home seems assured; at this stage Jonathan is treacherously murdered by Trypho, already a traitor to his king, Antiochus VI. Simon, Jonathan's brother (142-134), 13:1-16:24, lends his support to Demetrius II, who wins back the throne and (like his successor, Antiochus VII) recognises Simon as high priest, military governor and ethnarch of the Jews. Political independence is thus achieved, and the nation decrees that Simon's titles be approved. The treaty with Rome is then renewed; it is an era of prosperity and peace. But Antiochus VII turns against the Jews, and his son-in-law, currying favour, assassinates Simon and his two sons.

The narrative covers forty years, from the accession of Antiochus Epiphanes in 175 B.C. to the death of Simon in 134 B.C. It was written in Hebrew but has come down to us only in a Greek translation. Its author is a Palestinian Jew writing after 134 but before the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey in 63 B.C., probably in about 100 B.C. The book is invaluable as a history of the times, though allowances must always be made in such types of literature for the influence of the ancient chronicles of Israel on which they are modelled, and also for the intentions of the author.

For despite the space he devotes to battle and political intrigue, the author means to write a religious history. For him the nation's distress is a punishment for sin, and the successes of his leading figures are won by the help of God. He is a Jew, jealous for the faith which he perceives to be at stake in the struggle between pagan infiltration and ancestral custom. He is therefore an uncompromising foe of hellenisation and an ardent admirer of the heroes who fought for Law and Temple, winning first religious liberty and, next, national independence. His story tells how Judaism, the trustee of revelation, was preserved to the world.

The Second Book of Maccabees is not the continuation of the first. It is in part parallel to it: its starting-point is a little earlier (end of the reign of Seleucus IV, father of Antiochus Epiphanes), but it ends with the defeat of Nicanor by Judas Maccabaeus. It therefore covers only about fifteen years, corresponding to the first seven chapters of First Maccabees.

Its literary form is very different. Originally written in Greek, it claims to be a summary of the work of one Jason of Cyrene, 2:19-32, and is preceded by two letters from the Jews of Jerusalem, 1:1-2:18. The style is that of hellenistic writers, though not of the best: at times it is turgid, frequently pompous; more a sermon than a history.

And in fact the author's intention is to attract and edify, 2:25; 15:39: Judas Maccabaeus's campaign of liberation is supported by apparitions from heaven and triumphantly concluded by divine intervention, 2:19-22; the persecution itself is a manifestation of God's lovingkindness, bringing his people to their senses before accumulating sin works final ruin, 6:12-17. The author is writing for the Jews of Alexandria, to awaken their feeling of solidarity with their Palestinian brothers. He is particularly anxious to stir their interest in the fortunes of the Temple, round which the life of Law-abiding Jewry must revolve and against which the fury of the pagans is unleashed. This preoccupation shows itself in the way the book is arranged.

After the Heliodorus episode, 3:1-40, bringing out the inviolable sanctity of the Temple, the first part, 4:1-10:8, ends with the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, the persecutor who had defiled the Temple, and with the institution of the feast of Dedication. The second part, 10:9-15:36, also ends with the death of a persecutor (Nicanor) who had threatened the Temple, and with the institution of a commemorative feast. The two letters with which the Book opens spring from the same theme, 1:1-2:18, being invitations from the Jews in Jerusalem to their co-religionists in Egypt to celebrate the feast of Dedication with them.

The author is concerned more with his religious intention than with historical precision. There is the same difference of approach between the First and Second Books of Maccabees as there is between the Books of Samuel or Kings and the Books of Chronicles. The author of Second Maccabees uses for his purpose documents and narratives the veracity of which he does not necessarily guarantee. Thus there are two different accounts of the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, 1:13-16; 9:1-29, the latter closer to 1 M 6:1-13. In 2 M 9 the death occurs before the purification of the Temple, after it in 1 M 6; probably the author of Second Maccabees thought that the undated letter of Antiochus V, 11:22-26, belonged to the same period as the other letters in the same chapter, i.e. before the purification. In consequence, the other events of ch. 8-10 are also out of place. It may be that we owe the insertion of the documents in ch. 11 and the resultant changes not to the author but to a later editor. The same editor may have added the two letters in ch. 1. This notwithstanding, there is material exclusive to Second Maccabees that has a historical basis, while the fact that the two books are independent of each other lends weight to the many points on which they are agreed. The second book was completed after 124 B.C., the date of the first letter, 1:9; how long afterwards it is hard to tell.

The book is important for its affirmation of the resurrection of the dead, see note to 7:9; 14:46; sanctions in the afterlife, 6:26; prayer for the dead, 12:41-46f and note; the spiritual fruits of martyrdom, 6:18-7:41; the intercession of the saints, 15:12-16 and note. Other Old Testament writings had left these teachings vague: but the latter justify the authority accorded to Second Maccabees by the Church.

THE FIRST BOOK OF MACCABEES

I. INTRODUCTION

Alexander and the Diadochoi

¹ 1 Alexander of Macedon, son of Philip, had come from the land of Kittim^a and defeated Darius, king of the Persians and Medes, whom he succeeded ² as ruler, at first of Hellas.^b •He undertook many campaigns, gained possession ³ of many fortresses, and put the local kings to death. •So he advanced to the ends of the earth, plundering nation after nation; the earth grew silent before ⁴ him, and his ambitious heart swelled with pride. •He assembled very powerful ⁵ forces and subdued provinces, nations and princes, and they became his ⁶ tributaries. •But the time came when Alexander took to his bed, in the knowledge ⁷ that he was dying. •He summoned his comrades, noblemen who had been ⁸ brought up with him from his youth, and divided his kingdom among them ^{9,10} while he was still alive. •Alexander had reigned twelve years when he died.^c Each of his comrades established himself in his own region. •All assumed crowns after his death, they and their heirs after them for many years, bringing increasing evils on the world.

Antiochus Epiphanes: Israel infected with hellenism

¹⁰ ¹¹ From these there grew a sinful offshoot, Antiochus Epiphanes, son of King ¹² Antiochus; once a hostage in Rome,^d he became king in the one hundred and ¹³ thirty-seventh year of the kingdom of the Greeks.^e •It was then that there emerged ¹⁴ from Israel a set of renegades who led many people astray. 'Come,' they said ¹⁵ 'let us reach an understanding with the pagans surrounding us, for since we ¹⁶ separated ourselves from them many misfortunes have overtaken us.' •This ¹⁷ proposal proved acceptable, •and a number of the people eagerly approached ¹⁸ the king, who authorised them to practise the pagan observances. •So they ¹⁹ built a gymnasium in Jerusalem, such as the pagans have, •disguised their ²⁰ circumcision, and abandoned the holy covenant, submitting to the heathen rule as willing slaves of impiety.^f

Antiochus Epiphanes despoils the Temple, and persecutes Jews remaining faithful to the Law

¹⁶ ¹⁷ Once Antiochus had seen his authority established, he determined to make

¹ a. 'Kittim' means Cyprus but is used also to include more distant countries like Macedonia.

b. Not restricted to Greece proper. The Hebr. Javan, Is 66:19; Ezk 27:13, which corresponds to it, applies particularly to Ionia in Asia Minor.

c. June 324 B.C. The empire was not finally divided until after the battle of Ipsus (301).

d. Antiochus IV had been among the hostages handed over to the Romans by his father in 189, after his defeat at Magnesia in Sipyle.

e. 175 B.C. The 'kingdom of the Greeks' is the Seleucid era which dated from 312.

f. Religion, the Law and ancestral custom isolated the Jews as a foreign community inside the oriental world which had been unified and hellenised since Alexander's conquest. Assimilation by the new culture offered material benefits, but could not be achieved without breaking down the barriers which safeguarded the integrity of the Jewish faith: the antagonism of these two ideals pervades the Books of Maccabees. This movement among the hellenising Jews was sure of support from Antiochus Epiphanes, a devotee of Greek culture cf. vv. 41-51.

2 M 5:1 himself king of Egypt, and the ruler of both kingdoms. •He invaded Egypt 17
 Dn 11:25- in massive strength, with chariots and elephants and a great fleet. •He engaged 18
 28 Ptolemy, king of Egypt, in battle, and Ptolemy turned back and fled before his 19
 || 2 M 5: advance, leaving many casualties. •The fortified cities of the land of Egypt 19
 11-16 were captured, and Antiochus plundered the country. •After his conquest of 20
 Egypt, in the year one hundred and forty-three, Antiochus turned about and 20 advanced on Israel and Jerusalem in massive strength. •Insolently breaking into 21 the sanctuary,^e he removed the golden altar and the lamp-stand for the light 21 with all its fittings, •together with the table for the loaves of offering, the libation 22 vessels, the cups, the golden censers, the veil, the crowns, and the golden decora- 22 tion on the front of the Temple, which he stripped of everything. •He made 23 2 M 5:21 off with the silver and gold and precious vessels, he discovered the secret treasures 24 and seized them, •and removing all of these, he went back to his own country, 25 leaving the place a shambles and uttering words of extreme arrogance.

Then there was deep mourning for Israel throughout the country: 25

Rulers and elders groaned; 26 girls and young men wasted away; 27
 the women's beauty suffered a change; 27 every bridegroom took up a dirge, 28
 the bride sat grief-stricken on her marriage-bed. 28
 The very land quaked for its inhabitants 29 and the whole House of Jacob was clothed with shame. 29

|| 2 M 5: The days passed, and after two years the king sent the mysarch^h through 29
 24-26 the cities of Judah. He came to Jerusalem with an impressive force, •and 30 addressing them with what appeared to be peaceful words, he gained their 30 confidence; •then suddenly he fell on the city dealing it a terrible blow, and 31 destroying many of the people of Israel. •He pillaged the city and set it on fire, 31 tore down its houses and encircling wall, •took the women and children captive 32 6:18 and commandeered the cattle. •Then they fortified the City of David with a great 32 strong wall and strong towers, and made this their Citadel.ⁱ •There they installed 33 an army of sinful men, renegades, who fortified themselves inside it, •storing 34 arms and provisions, and depositing there the loot they had collected from 35
 Jerusalem; they were to prove a great trouble. 37

It became an ambush for the sanctuary, 36
 an evil adversary for Israel at all times. 38
 They shed innocent blood all round the sanctuary 37
 and defiled the sanctuary itself. 39
 The citizens of Jerusalem fled because of them, 38
 she became a dwelling place of strangers; 40 estranged from her own offspring, 40
 her children forsook her. 40
 Her sanctuary became as deserted as a wilderness, 39
 her feasts were turned into mourning, 41 her sabbaths into a mockery, 41
 her honour into reproach. 41
 Her dishonour now fully matched her former glory, 40
 her greatness was turned into grief. 42

Then the king issued a proclamation to his whole kingdom that all were 41 to become a single people, each renouncing his particular customs. •All the pagans 42 conformed to the king's decree, •and many Israelites chose to accept his 43 religion, sacrificing to idols and profaning the sabbath. •The king also sent 44 instructions^j by messenger to Jerusalem and the towns of Judah directing them 45 2 M 6:1 to adopt customs foreign to the country, •banning holocausts, sacrifices and 45
 Dn 9:27 libations from the sanctuary, profaning sabbaths and feasts, •defiling the 46

sanctuary and the sacred ministers, •building altars, precincts and shrines for idols, sacrificing pigs and unclean beasts, •leaving their sons uncircumcised, and prostituting themselves to all kinds of impurity and abomination, •so that they should forget the Law and revoke all observance of it. •Anyone not obeying the king's command was to be put to death. •Writing in such terms to every part of his kingdom, the king appointed inspectors for the whole people, and directed all the towns of Judah to offer sacrifice one after another.

Many of the people—that is, every apostate from the Law—rallied to them, and so committed evil in the country, •forcing Israel into hiding in all their places of refuge. •On the fifteenth day of Chislev in the year one hundred and forty-five^k the king erected the abomination of desolation^l above the altar; and altars were built in the surrounding towns of Judah •and incense offered at the doors of houses and in the streets. •Any books of the Law that came to light were torn up and burned. •Whenever anyone was discovered possessing a copy of the covenant or practising the Law, the king's decree sentenced him to death. •Having might on their side they took action month after month against any offenders they discovered in the towns of Israel. •On the twenty-fifth day of the month sacrifice was offered on the altar erected over the altar of holocaust. •Women who had had their children circumcised were put to death according to the edict •with their babies hung round their necks, and the members of their household and those who had performed the circumcision were executed with them.

Yet there were many in Israel who stood firm and found the courage to refuse unclean food. •They chose death rather than contamination by such fare or profanation of the holy covenant, and they were executed. •It was a dreadful wrath that visited Israel.

II. MATTATHIAS UNLEASHES THE HOLY WAR^a

Mattathias and his sons

2 In those days Mattathias son of John, son of Simeon, a priest of the line of Joarib, left Jerusalem and settled in Modein. •He had five sons, John¹ known as Gaddi, •Simon called Thassi, •Judas called Maccabaeus, •Eleazar, 6 called Avaran, and Jonathan called Apphus.^b •When he saw the blasphemies being 7 committed in Judah and Jerusalem, •he said, 'Alas that I should have been born to witness the overthrow of my people, and the overthrow of the Holy City, and to sit by while she is delivered over to her enemies, and the sanctuary into the hand of foreigners.'

g. Beginning of autumn 169.

h. I.e. commander of the Mysians, correction in accordance with 2 M 5:24 which names him as Apollonius. He was in command of the mercenaries from Mysia and went to Jerusalem in 167. He reappears in 3:10.

i. The district called at that time the City of David occupied Jerusalem's western hill. When it was turned into the Citadel, the Akra in Greek, it housed the Syro-Macedonian garrison and the hellenised Jews. It was to prove a threat to the Temple which stood lower down to the E, on what was called Mount Zion. Place-names of this period differ from those of the time of David, cf. 2 S 5:9+.

j. Antiochus Epiphanes, in his efforts to unify his empire, abrogated the privilege conceded by Antiochus III in 198 by which the Mosaic Law was recognised as Jewish civil law (also recognised as such by the Persian kings when the Jews returned from exile). Loyalty to the Law thus became political rebellion; hence the persecution. Religious freedom returned with the edict of Antiochus V, 6:57-61; 2 M 11:22-26.

k. December 8th 167.

l. 'The abomination of desolation', Dn 9:27; 11:31, was the altar of Baal Shamem or the Olympian Zeus erected on the Jewish altar of holocausts.

2 a. Persecution produces a revival of religious awareness. Jewish opposition to hellenism takes the form of physical violence, 2:15-28, passive resistance, 2:29-38, and ultimately a war of religion under the leadership of Mattathias, 2:39-48, but particularly under Judas Maccabaeus, ch. 3-5. Judas had realised that religious and political independence were interconnected; for this reason the struggle continued even after religious freedom had been won, 6:57-62. But the shift from the religious to a political ground led to the compromises and party squabbles occupying the last part of the Book. These in the end were to oust religious zeal and discredit the Maccabees' successors, the Hasmonaens, in the estimation of their devout contemporaries.

b. The names Gaddi, Avaran, Apphus can mean 'Fortunate', 'Alert', 'Favoured'; Maccabaeus may mean 'hammer-headed', or is perhaps a shortened form of Makkabiah, 'Yahweh's Designate', cf. Is 62:2. 'Thassi' is uncertain.

'Her Temple has become like a man of no repute,
 the vessels that were her glory have been carried off as booty,
 her babies have been slaughtered in her streets,
 her young men by the enemy's sword.
 Is there a nation that has not claimed a share of her royal prerogatives, that has not taken some of her spoils?
 All her ornaments have been snatched from her,
 her former freedom has become slavery.
 See how our Holy Place, our beauty, our glory, is now laid waste, profaned by the pagans.
 What have we left to live for?'

Mattathias and his sons tore their garments, put on sackcloth, and observed deep mourning.

The ordeal of the sacrifice at Modein

The king's commissioners who were enforcing the apostasy came to the town of Modein to make them sacrifice. •Many Israelites gathered round them, but Mattathias and his sons drew apart. •The king's commissioners then addressed Mattathias as follows, 'You are a respected leader, a great man in this town; you have sons and brothers to support you. •Be the first to step forward and conform to the king's decree, as all the nations have done, and the leaders of Judah and the survivors in Jerusalem; you and your sons shall be reckoned among the Friends of the King, you and your sons shall be honoured with gold and silver and many presents.' •Raising his voice, Mattathias retorted, 'Even if every nation living in the king's dominions obeys him, each forsaking its ancestral religion to conform to his decrees, •I, my sons and my brothers will still follow the covenant of our ancestors. •Heaven^d preserve us from forsaking the Law and its observances. •As for the king's orders, we will not follow them: we will not swerve from our own religion either to right or to left.' •As he finished speaking, a Jew came forward in the sight of all to offer sacrifice on the altar in Modein as the royal edict required. •When Mattathias saw this, he was fired with zeal; stirred to the depth of his being, he gave vent to his legitimate anger, threw himself on the man and slaughtered him on the altar. •At the same time he killed the king's commissioner who was there to enforce the sacrifice, and tore down the altar. •In his zeal for the Law he acted as Phinehas did against Zimri son of Salu. •Then Mattathias went through the town, shouting at the top of his voice, 'Let everyone who has a fervour for the Law and takes his stand on the covenant come out and follow me'. •Then he fled with his sons into the hills, leaving all their possessions behind in the town.

The ordeal of the sabbath in the desert

At this many who were concerned for virtue and justice went down to the desert and stayed there, •taking with them their sons, their wives and their cattle, for the burden of their wrongs had become unendurable. •But word was brought to the king's men and the garrison in Jerusalem, in the City of David, that the men who had repudiated the king's edict had gone down to hiding places in the desert. •A strong detachment went after them, and when it came up with them ranged itself against them in battle formation, preparing to attack them on the sabbath day. •But first they challenged them, 'Enough of this! Come out and do as the king orders and you shall be spared'. •But they answered, 'We refuse to come out, and we are not going to obey the king's orders and so profane the sabbath day'. •The others at once went into action, •but they offered no opposition; not a stone was thrown, there was no barricading of the hiding places. •They only said, 'Let us all die innocent; let heaven and earth bear witness that you are massacring us with no pretence of justice'. •The attack was pressed home on the sabbath itself, and they were slaughtered, with their wives and children and cattle, to the number of one thousand persons.

The activity of Mattathias and his associates

39 When the news reached Mattathias and his friends, they mourned bitterly 40 for the victims, and said to one another, 'If we all do as our brothers have done, and refuse to fight the pagans for our lives and institutions, they 41 will only destroy us the sooner from the earth'. So then and there they came to this decision, 'If anyone attacks us on the sabbath day, whoever he may be, we will resist him; we must not all be killed, as our brothers were in the hiding places'.

42 Soon they were joined by a community of Hasidaeans,^e stout fighting men 43 of Israel, each one a volunteer on the side of the Law. All the refugees from 44 the persecution rallied to them, giving them added support. They organised themselves into an armed force, striking down the sinners in their anger, and the renegades in their fury, and those who escaped them fled to the pagans 45 for safety. Mattathias and his friends made a tour, overthrowing the altars
46 and forcibly circumcising all the boys they found uncircumcised in the territories 47 of Israel. They hunted down the upstarts, and managed their campaign to good 48 effect. They wrested the Law out of the control of the pagans and the kings, and robbed sinful men of their advantage.

The testament and death of Mattathias

49 As the days of Mattathias were drawing to a close, he said to his sons,
'Arrogance and outrage are now in the ascendant; it is a period of turmoil 50 and bitter hatred. This is the time, my children, for you to have a burning fervour for the Law and to give your lives for the covenant of our ancestors.

c. Title of honour, a survival from the court of Persia; there were various grades. The 'Friends of the King' had free access to the sovereign who from time to time assigned them certain tasks, cf. 3:38; 7:8; 10:16, 20,60,65; 11:27,57; 14:39; 15:28; 2 M 8:8.

d. 'Heaven' is often used in 1 M for 'God of heaven', a phrase current in the Persian period, cf. 3:18,19,50,60; 4:10,40; 9:46; 12:15. The editor of 1 M systematically avoids using the divine name.

e. I.e. the 'Devout', the Jewish party, devoted to the Law, who opposed pagan influences even before the Maccabaeian period. They supported the revolt of the Maccabees, cf. 2 M 14:6, while reserving their freedom of action, 1 M 7:13. They were later to reject the policy of the Hasmonaeans and subsequently split into two groups, Pharisees and Essenes. The Essenes have become more familiar to us recently since the discovery of the manuscripts of Qumran.

Consider, then, how in generation after generation 61
 all who hope in him will not be found to falter.
 Do not fear the threats of the sinner, 62
 all his brave show must come to the dunghill and the worms.
 Exalted today, tomorrow he is nowhere to be found, 63 for he has returned to the dust he came from
 and his scheming is brought to nothing.
 My children, play the man and be courageous for the Law, 64 for it will bring you glory.

'Here is your brother Simeon, I know he is a man of sound judgement. Listen 65 to him all your lives; let him take your father's place. •Judas Maccabaeus, 66 strong and brave from his youth, let him be your general and conduct the war against the pagans. •The rest of you are to enrol in your ranks all those who 67 keep the Law, and to exact vengeance for your people. •Pay back the pagans 68 to the full, and hold fast to the ordinance of the Law.' •Then he blessed them 69 and was laid with his ancestors. •He died in the year one hundred and forty-six^f 70 and was buried in his ancestral tomb at Modein, and all Israel mourned him deeply.

III. JUDAS MACCABAEUS, LEADER OF THE JEWS

(166-160 B.C.)

The eulogy of Judas Maccabaeus

3 Then his son Judas, called Maccabaeus, took over his command. •All his ¹/₂ brothers, and all who had attached themselves to his father, supported him, and they fought for Israel with a will.

^{14:3}
 2 M 8:5

He extended the fame of his people. 3
 He put on the breastplate like a giant and girded on his war harness;
 he engaged in battle after battle,
 protecting the ranks with his sword.
 He was like a lion in his exploits, 4
 like a lion's whelp roaring over its prey.
 He pursued and tracked down the renegades, 5
 he consigned those who troubled his people to the flames.
 Renegades were abashed for terror of him, 6
 all evil-doers were utterly confounded,
 and deliverance went forward under his leadership.
 He brought bitterness to many a king 7
 and rejoicing to Jacob by his deeds, his memory is blessed for ever and ever.
 He went through the towns of Judah 8
 and utterly destroyed the infidels in them, turning wrath away from Israel.
 His name resounded to the ends of the earth 9 and he rallied those who were on the point of perishing.

The first successes of Judas

||2 M 8:1-7

But Apollonius^a mustered the pagans and a large force from Samaria to fight 10 against Israel. •When Judas learned of it, he went out to meet him and routed 11 and killed him. Many fell wounded, and the survivors took to flight. •Their 12 spoils were seized and the sword of Apollonius was taken by Judas, who used it to fight with throughout his life. •On hearing that Judas had raised a mixed force 13 of believers and seasoned fighters, •Seron, commander of the Syrian troops, 14 said, 'I will make a name for myself and gain honour in the kingdom if I fight Judas and those supporters of his who are so contemptuous of the king's orders'.

 15 He therefore launched another expedition, with a strong army of infidels to 16 support him in taking revenge on the Israelites. •He had nearly reached the 17 descent of Beth-horon when Judas went out to confront him with a handful 18 of men. •But as soon as these saw the force advancing to meet them they said
 19 to Judas, 'How can we, few as we are, engage such overwhelming numbers?
 20 We are exhausted as it is, not having had anything to eat today.' •'It is easy'
 21 Judas answered 'for a great number to be routed by a few; indeed in the sight 22 of heaven deliverance, whether by many or by few, is all one; •for victory in 23 war does not depend on the size of the fighting force; it is from heaven that 24 strength comes. •They are coming against us in full-blown insolence and law-25 lessness to destroy us, our wives and our children, and to plunder us; •but we 26 are fighting for our lives and our laws,^b •and he will crush them before our 27 eyes; do not be afraid of them.' •When he had finished speaking, he made a sudden 28 sally against Seron and his force and overwhelmed them. •Judas pursued him
 29 down from Beth-horon as far as the plain. About eight hundred of their men 30 fell, and the rest took refuge in the country of the Philistines. •Judas and his 31 brothers began to be feared, and alarm seized the surrounding peoples. •His 32 name even reached the king's ears, and in every nation there was talk of Judas 33 and his battles.

Preparations for expeditions in Persia and Judaea. The regency of Lysias

34 The news of these events infuriated Antiochus, and he ordered mobilisation
 35 of all the forces in his kingdom, a very powerful army. •Opening his treasury, 36 he distributed a year's pay to his troops, telling them to be prepared for any 37 eventuality. •He then found that the money in his coffers had run short and that 38 the tribute of the province had decreased, as a result of the dissension and 39 disaster brought upon the country by his own abrogation of laws that had 40 been in force from antiquity. •He began to fear that, as had happened more than 41 once, he would not have enough to cover the expenses and the lavish bounties
 42 he had previously been accustomed to make on a larger scale than his predecessors 43 on the throne. •In this grave quandary he resolved to visit Persia, in order to 44 levy tribute on the provinces and so accumulate substantial funds. •Lysias, 45 a nobleman belonging to the royal family, was left in charge of the king's affairs
 46 from the river Euphrates to the Egyptian frontier, •and was to be responsible 47 for the education of his son Antiochus until his return. •Antiochus made over 48 to him half his forces, with the elephants, and gave him instructions about all 49 his policies, particularly about the inhabitants of Judaea and Jerusalem, •against 50 whom he was to send a force, to crush and destroy the power of Israel and the 51 remnant of Jerusalem, to wipe out their very memory from the place, •to settle 52 the sons of foreigners in all parts of their territory and to distribute their land
 53 by lot. •The king took with him the remaining half of his forces and set out 54 from Antioch, the capital of his kingdom, in the year one hundred and forty-55 seven;^c he crossed the river Euphrates and made his way along the upper 56 provinces.^d

Gorgias and Nicanor lead the Syrian army into Judaea

||2 M 8:8-15

57 Lysias chose Ptolemy son of Dorymenes, with Nicanor and Gorgias, 58 influential men from among the Friends of the King, •and despatched under their 59 command forty thousand foot and seven thousand horse to invade the land
 60 of Judah and devastate it, as the king had ordered. •The entire force set out and reached the neighbourhood of Emmaus in the Lowlands, where they pitched camp. •When the merchants of the province heard who they were, they came 41 to the camp, bringing with them a large amount of gold and silver, and fetters as well, proposing to buy the Israelites as slaves; they were accompanied by a contingent from Idumaea and the Philistine country. •Judas and his brothers 42 saw that the situation was going from bad to worse and that armies were camping in their territory; they were also well aware that the king had ordered the people's total destruction. •So they said to each other, 'Let us restore the ruins of our 43 people and fight for our people and our sanctuary.' •They mustered their people 44 to prepare for war, and to offer prayer and implore compassion and mercy.

Jerusalem was left uninhabited like a desert, 45
there was none left to go in or out, of all her children.
The sanctuary was trodden underfoot,
with men of an alien race in the Citadel,
now a lodging place for pagans.
There was no more rejoicing for Jacob,
flute and zither were mute.

||2M 8:16-23 The Jews muster at Mizpah

After mustering, they made their way to Mizpah, opposite Jerusalem, since 46
Mizpah was traditionally a place of prayer for Israel. •That day they fasted 47 and put on sackcloth, covering their heads with ashes and tearing their garments. For the guidance that the heathen would have sought from the images of their 48 false gods, they opened the Book of the Law. •They also brought out the priestly 49 vestments, with first-fruits and tithes, and marshalled the nazirites who had completed the period of their vow. •Then, raising their voices to heaven, they 50 cried, 'What shall we do with these people, and where are we to take them?' Your sacred precincts have been trampled underfoot and defiled, your priests 51 mourn in their humiliation, •and now the pagans are allied together to destroy 52 us: you know what they have in mind for us. •How can we stand up and face them 53 if you do not come to our aid?' •Then they sounded the trumpets and made a 54 great outcry.

Next Judas appointed leaders for the people, to command a thousand, a 55 hundred, fifty or ten men. •He told those who were building houses, or about 56 to be married, or planting vineyards, or who were simply afraid, to go home Jg 7:3 to every one of them, as the Law allowed. •Then the formation marched off and Dt 20:5-9 took up a position south of Emmaus. •'Stand to your arms,' Judas told them 57 'acquit yourselves bravely, be ready to fight in the morning against these pagans massed against us to destroy us and our sanctuary. •Better for us to die in battle 59 than to watch the ruin of our nation and our holy place. •Whatever be the 60 will of heaven, he will perform it.'

||2M 8:23-29 The battle of Emmaus

4 Gorgias took with him five thousand foot and a thousand picked cavalry, 1 and the force moved off by night •with the object of attacking the Jewish 2 position and dealing them an unexpected blow; the men from the Citadel were 1:33 there to guide him. •Judas got wind of it and himself moved off with his fighters 3 to strike at the king's forces in Emmaus, •while their fighting troops had been 4 moved away from the encampment. •And so, when Gorgias reached the camp of 5 Judas, he found nobody and he began to search for the Jews in the mountains, exclaiming. 'They are running away from us'. •First light found Judas in the 6 plain with three thousand men, although these lacked the armour and swords they could have wished. •They could now see the heathen encampment with 7 its strong fortifications and cavalry surrounding it, clearly people who understood warfare.

8 Judas said to his men, 'Do not be afraid of their numbers, and do not flinch at 9 their attack. •Remember how our ancestors were delivered at the Red Sea when 10 Pharaoh was pursuing them in force. •And now let us implore heaven to be kind 2:21 + 11 to us and to remember his covenant with our ancestors and to destroy this army confronting us today; •then all the nations will know for certain that there is one who saves and delivers Israel.'

12 The foreigners looked up and, seeing the Jews advancing against them, 13 came out of the camp to join battle. Judas' men sounded the trumpet •and 14 engaged them. The pagans were routed and fled towards the plain •and all the 15 stragglers fell by the sword. The pursuit continued as far as Gezer and the plains of Idumaea, Azotus and Jamnia, and the enemy lost about three thousand men.

16 Breaking off the pursuit, Judas returned with his men •and said to the people, 17 'Never mind the booty, for we have another battle ahead of us. •Gorgias and 18 his forces are still in the mountains not far from us. First stand up to our enemies 19 and fight them, and then you can collect as much booty as you like.' •The words were hardly out of Judas' mouth when an enemy patrol appeared on the mount-20 ainside. •This patrol, observing that their own troops had been routed and that the camp had been fired, for the smoke, which was clearly visible, told them 21 what had happened, •were panic-stricken at the sight; and when they also saw 22 the forces of Judas drawn up on the plain in battle formation, •they all fled 23 into Philistine territory. •Judas now turned back to plunder the camp, and they carried off a large sum in gold and silver, with violet and sea-purple stuffs, 24 and many other valuables. •On their return, the Jews chanted praises to heaven, 25 'For he is good, and his mercy is everlasting'. •That day had seen a remarkable deliverance in Israel. Ps 118:1-3+

The first campaign of Lysias

||2 M 11:1-2

26 Those of the foreigners who had escaped came and gave Lysias an account 27 of all that had happened. •The news shocked and dismayed him, for affairs in Israel had not gone as he intended, and the results were very different from 28 the instructions given him by the king. •The next year he mobilised sixty thousand picked troops and five thousand cavalry with the intention of putting the Jews out 29 of action. •They advanced into Idumaea and made their base at Bethzur,^a 30 where Judas met them with ten thousand men. •When he saw their military strength he offered this prayer, 'Blessed are you, saviour of Israel, who shattered the might of the Philistine champion by the hand of your servant David, and 1 S 17 delivered their camp into the hands of Jonathan son of Saul, and his armour- 1 S 14:1-23
31 bearer. •Crush this expedition in the same way at the hands of your people 32 Israel; make them ashamed of their forces and their cavalry. •Make cowards of them, undermine their confidence in their own strength, and may they reel at their 33 defeat. •Overthrow them by the sword of those who love you, and all who acknow-34 ledge your name will sing your praises.' •The two forces engaged, and five 35 thousand men of Lysias' troops fell in hand-to-hand fighting. •Seeing the rout of his army and the courage of Judas' troops and their readiness to live or die as soldiers should, Lysias withdrew to Antioch, where he recruited mercenaries for a further invasion of Judaea in even greater strength.

The purification of the Temple and its dedication^b

||2 M 10:1-8
Ps 30

36 Then Judas and his brothers said, 'Now that our enemies have been defeated, 37 let us go up to purify the sanctuary and dedicate it'. •So they marshalled the whole

e. 'fetters'; var.; 'slaves'. 'Idumaea' corr.; 'Syria' Greek.

f. 2 M 8:23 throws light on this passage. Since there were no more prophets, the Book of the Law was opened at random to ask divine guidance on the advisability of joining battle and the probable result. The pagans consulted their false gods in the same way. The Jews consulted the word of the true God.

g. On expiry of their vow the nazirites had to offer sacrifice in the Temple, Nb 6:13. But the Temple was now desecrated.

b. The Temple is one of the principal objectives of the rebels, cf. 2:7; 3:43; 2 M 13:11, as the centre of

Ps 74:2-7 army, and went up to Mount Zion.^c •There they found the sanctuary a wild- 38 erness, the altar desecrated, the gates burnt down, and vegetation growing in the courts as it might in a wood or on some mountain, while the storerooms were in ruins. •They tore their garments and mourned bitterly, putting dust 39 on their heads. •They prostrated themselves on the ground, and when the 40 2:21 + trumpets gave the signal they cried aloud to heaven.

Then Judas ordered his men to engage the garrison in the Citadel until he 41 had purified the sanctuary. •Next, he selected priests who were blameless in 42 observance of the Law •to purify the sanctuary and remove the stones of the 43 abomination to an unclean place.

1 K 8:64 + They discussed what should be done about the altar of holocausts which had 44
6:7 been profaned, •and very properly decided to pull it down, that it might never 45 become a reproach to them, from its defilement by the pagans. They therefore demolished it •and deposited the stones in a suitable place on the Temple hill 46 to await the appearance of a prophet who should give a ruling about them.^d Ex 20:25 They took unhewn stones, as the Law prescribed, and built a new altar on the 47 lines of the old one. •They restored the Holy Place and the interior of the house, 48
Ex 25:23-30, 31-39; 30: 1-10 and purified the courts. •They made new sacred vessels, and brought the lamp- 49 stand, the altar of incense, and the table into the Temple. •They burned incense 50 on the altar and lit the lamps on the lamp-stand, and these shone inside the Temple. •They set out the loaves on the table and hung the curtains and completed 51 all the tasks they had undertaken.

Ezk 43:18 On the twenty-fifth of the ninth month, Chislev, in the year one hundred and 52
forty-eight,^e they rose at dawn •and offered a lawful sacrifice on the new altar 53 of holocausts which they had made. •The altar was dedicated, to the sound of 54 zithers, harps and cymbals, at the same time of year and on the same day on which the pagans had originally profaned it. •The whole people fell prostrate in 55 adoration, praising to the skies him who had made them so successful. •For eight 56 days they celebrated the dedication of the altar, joyfully offering holocausts, communion sacrifices and thanksgivings. •They ornamented the front of the 57
Temple with crowns and bosses of gold, repaired the gates and the storerooms and fitted them with doors. •There was no end to the rejoicing among the people, 58 and the reproach of the pagans was lifted from them. •Judas, with his brothers 59 and the whole assembly of Israel, made it a law that the days of the dedication of the altar should be celebrated yearly at the proper season, for eight days beginning on the twenty-fifth of the month Chislev, with rejoicing and gladness.^f
They then proceeded to build high walls with strong towers round Mount 60 Zion, to prevent the pagans from coming and riding roughshod over it as in the past. •Judas stationed a garrison there to guard the mount; he also fortified 61
Bethzur,^g to give the people a fortress against Idumaea.

The expedition against the Idumaeans and Ammonites

13:6 5 When the surrounding nations heard that the altar had been rebuilt and the 1 sanctuary restored to what it had been before, they became very angry, •and 2 determined to destroy the whole race of Jacob living among them; they began murdering and evicting Jewish citizens.

2 M 10:15-23 Judas made war on the sons of Esau in Idumaea,^a in the region of Akrabattene 3 where they held the Israelites under siege. He inflicted a crushing defeat on them, and plundered them. •He also remembered the wickedness of the sons 4 of Baean^b who were a menace and a trap for the people with their ambushes on the roads. •Having blockaded them in their towers and besieged them, he 5 vowed them to the ban; then he set fire to their towers and burned them down with everyone inside. •Next, he crossed over to the Ammonites where he found 6 a strong fighting force and a numerous people with Timotheus for their leader.
He engaged them in many encounters, routed them and cut them to pieces. 7
After capturing Jazer and its outlying villages, he retired to Judaea. 8

The opening of campaigns in Galilee and Gilead

- 9 The pagans in Gilead now banded together against the Israelites living on their territory, to destroy them. But they took refuge in the fortress of Dathema, and sent the following letter to Judas and his brothers, 'The pagans round us
10 have banded themselves together against us to wipe us out, •and they are preparing to storm the fortress in which we have taken refuge; Timotheus is in command
11 of their forces. •Come at once and rescue us from their clutches, for we have 12 already suffered great losses. •All our countrymen living among the Tubians have been put to death, their women and children have been taken into captivity,
13 their property has been seized, and a force about a thousand strong has been wiped out there.' •While the letter was being read, other messengers arrived
14 from Galilee with their garments torn bearing similar news, •'The people of Ptolemais,^c Tyre and Sidon have joined forces with the whole of heathen Galilee
15 to destroy us!' •When Judas and the people heard this, a great assembly was held to decide what should be done for their oppressed countrymen who were 16 under attack from their enemies. •Judas said to his brother Simon, 'Pick your men and go and relieve your countrymen in Galilee, while my brother Jonathan
17 and I make our way into Gilead'. •He left Joseph son of Zechariah and the people's leader Azariah with the remainder of the army in Judaea to guard it, 18 and gave them these orders: 'Take charge of this people, and do not engage the 19 pagans until we return'. •Simon was allotted three thousand men for the expedition into Galilee, Judas eight thousand for Gilead.

2 M 12:17

The expeditions in Galilee and Gilead

- 21 Simon advanced into Galilee, engaged the pagans in several battles and drove them off in disorder; •he pursued them to the gate of Ptolemais, and they 22 lost about three thousand men, whose spoils he collected. •He took away with him the Jews of Galilee and Arbatta,^d with their wives and children and all their possessions, and brought them into Judaea with great rejoicing.
23 Meanwhile Judas Maccabaeus and his brother Jonathan crossed the Jordan
24 and made a three days' march through the desert, •where they encountered the Nabataeans,^e who came to an understanding with them and gave them
25 an account of all that had happened to their brothers in Gilead. •Many of them, they said, were shut up in Bozrah and Bosor, Alema, Chaspho, Maked
26 and Carnaim, all large fortified towns.^f •Others were blockaded in the other towns of Gilead, and the enemy planned to attack and capture these strongholds the very next day, and wipe out all the people inside them in a single day.
27 Judas and his army at once turned off by the desert road to Bozrah; having 28 captured the town, he put the entire male population to the sword, plundered

Jewish religious life, without which the Law could not be observed in its fullness. The gentiles had sacked and profaned it, 1:21f; 1:54; now, as soon as the first victories are won, it is purified and reconsecrated. The concept of the holiness of the Temple will be a dominant theme in the second Book, 2 M 3:12+; 5:15; 13:11; 15:18; 15:37+.

c. 'Mount Zion' eventually came to mean the Temple itself which stood on it.

d. The author recurs more than once to this suspension of prophecy, cf. 9:27; 14:41.

e. December 164, third anniversary of the first sacrifice offered to Zeus.

f. The feast of Dedication, Hanuccah in Hebr., is one of the most recent in the Jewish calendar, cf. Ex 23:14+. The Hallel was sung (Ps 113-118), leafy branches and palms were carried. These similarities to the feast of Tabernacles are stressed in 2 M 1:9+; 10:6; the feast of Tabernacles itself commemorated the inauguration of the Temple of Solomon, 1 K 8:2,62-66. The lamps lit at Dedication soon gave it its other name, 'feast of Lights'. The fact that these lamps, symbolising the Law, were placed not only in the Temple but in private houses assured the survival and popularity of the feast after the desecration of the Temple. It is given great prominence in 2 M, cf. the two introductory letters and 2 M 10:1-8. It is mentioned in Jn 10:22.

g. 'He fortified Bethzur' corr.

5 a. In the Greek period 'Idumaea' was the region S. of Palestine from Bethzur onwards, 4:29. The name derives from the Edomites, 'the sons of Esau', cf. Nb 20:23+, who occupied it after the collapse of the kingdom of Judah. Akrabattene mentioned here lay to the S.W. of the Dead Sea.

b. Allusion obscure. The 'sons of Baean' were possibly a semi-nomadic clan between Jerusalem and Jericho.

c. Ptolemais was the name given to Acre by Ptolemy II in 261 B.C.

d. Arbatta was situated near the region of the future Caesarea Palaestinae on the coast.

e. A caravan people, Aramaean in origin but assimilated to Arabs at a very early stage, and successors to the kingdoms of Edom and Moab in Transjordan, cf. Nb 10:23+, spreading westwards to the S. of Palestine.

f. All these towns were in N. Transjordan.

the town and set it on fire. •When night came, he left the place, and they continued their march until they reached the fortress.⁹ •In the light of dawn they saw an innumerable horde, setting up ladders and engines to capture the fortress; the assault was just beginning. •When Judas saw that the attack had begun and that the war cry was rising to heaven, mingled with trumpet calls and a great clamour, •he said to the men of his army, 'You must fight today, fight for your countrymen'. •Dividing them into three commands, he advanced on the enemy's rear, with trumpets sounding and prayers shouted aloud. •The troops of Timotheus, recognising that this was Maccabaeus, fled before his advance; Maccabaeus dealt them a crushing defeat; about eight thousand of their men fell that day. •Then, wheeling on Alema, he attacked and captured it, put its male population to death, plundered it and burned the place down. •From there he moved on and took Chaspho, Maked, Bosor and the remaining towns of Gilead. •After these events, Timotheus mustered another force and pitched camp opposite Raphon, on the far side of the wadi. •Judas sent men to reconnoitre the camp, and these reported back as follows, 'With him are massed all the pagans surrounding us, making a very numerous army, •with Arab mercenaries as auxiliaries; they are encamped on the far side of the wadi, and ready to launch an attack on you.' Judas then advanced to engage them, •and was approaching the watercourse with his troops when Timotheus told the commanders of his army, 'If he crosses first we shall not be able to resist him, because he will have the advantage of us. •But if he is afraid and camps on the other side of the stream we will cross over to him and the advantage will then be ours.'

As soon as he reached the watercourse Judas posted the scribes of the people^a along the wadi, giving them this order: 'Do not let anyone pitch his tent; all are to go into battle!' •He was himself the first across to the enemy side, with all the people following. Driven before them, the pagans all tore off their armour and ran for refuge in the sacred precinct of Carnaim.¹ •The Jews first captured the town, and then burned down the precinct with everyone inside. And so Carnaim was overthrown, and the enemy could offer no further resistance to Judas.

Next, Judas assembled all the Israelites living in Gilead, from the least to the greatest, with their wives, children and belongings, an enormous muster, to take them into the land of Judah. •They reached Ephron,² a large town straddling the road and strongly fortified. As it was impossible to by-pass it on the right or the left, there was nothing for it but to march straight through. •But the people of the town denied them passage and barricaded the gates with stones. Judas sent them a conciliatory message in these terms, 'Let us go through your territory to reach our own; no one will do you any harm, we only want to march through'. But they would not open up for him. •So Judas sent an order down the column for everyone to halt where he stood. •The fighting men took up their positions; Judas attacked the town all day and night, and it was delivered into his hands. •He put all the male inhabitants to the sword, razed it to the ground, plundered it and marched through the town over the bodies of the dead. •The Jews now crossed the Jordan into the great plain, opposite Bethshan, Judas all the time rallying the stragglers and encouraging the people the whole way until they reached the land of Judah. •They climbed Mount Zion in joy and gladness, and offered holocausts because they had returned safe and sound without having lost a single man.

A setback at Jamnia

While Judas and Jonathan were in the land of Gilead and Simon his brother in Galilee before Ptolemais, •Joseph son of Zechariah, and Azariah, who were in command of the army, heard of their exploits and how well they had done in battle, •and said, 'Let us make a name for ourselves too and go and fight the 58 nations around us'. •So they issued orders to the men of the forces under them

 59 and marched on Jamnia.^k •But Gorgias came out from the town with his men 60 to engage them. •Joseph and Azariah were routed and pursued as far as the frontiers of Judaea. That day about two thousand Israelites lost their lives.
 61 And so the people met with a great reverse, because they had not listened 62 to Judas and his brothers, but had relied on their own prowess. •These were not of the same mould as those to whom the deliverance of Israel had been entrusted.

Successes in Idumaea and Philistia

63 But that hero Judas and his brothers were held in high honour throughout 64 Israel and among all the nations wherever their name was heard, •and men 65 gathered round them to acclaim them. •Judas marched out with his brothers to fight the Edomites in the country towards the south; he stormed Hebron and its outlying villages, threw down its fortifications and burned its circle of towers.
 66 Leaving there, he made for the country of the Philistines and passed through 67 Marisa.^l •Among the fallen in that day's fighting were some priests who sought 68 to prove their courage there by joining in the battle, a foolhardy venture. •Judas next turned towards Azotus, a Philistine district; he overthrew their altars, burned down the carved images of their gods, and withdrew to the land of Judah, leaving their towns utterly despoiled.

The last days of Antiochus Epiphanes

1 6 Meanwhile King Antiochus was making his way across the upper provinces;
 he had heard that in Persia there was a city called Elymais,^a renowned for 2 its riches, its silver and gold, •and its very wealthy temple containing golden armour, breastplates and weapons, left there by Alexander son of Philip, the 3 king of Macedon, the first to reign over the Greeks. •He therefore went and attempted to take the city and pillage it, but without success, since the citizens 4 learnt of his intention, •and offered him a stiff resistance, whereupon he 5 turned about and retreated, disconsolate, in the direction of Babylon. •But while he was still in Persia news reached him that the armies that had invaded 6 the land of Judah had been defeated, •and that Lysias in particular had advanced in massive strength, only to be forced to turn and flee before the Jews; these had been strengthened by the acquisition of arms, supplies and abundant spoils 7 from the armies they had cut to pieces; •they had overthrown the abomination he had erected over the altar in Jerusalem, and had encircled the sanctuary 8 with high walls as in the past, and had fortified Bethzur, one of his cities. •When the king heard this news he was amazed and profoundly shaken; he threw himself on his bed and fell into a lethargy from acute disappointment, because 9 things had not turned out for him as he had planned. •And there he remained for many days, subject to deep and recurrent fits of melancholy, until he under-10 stood that he was dying. •Then summoning all his Friends, he said to them, 11 'Sleep evades my eyes, and my heart is cowed by anxiety. •I have been asking myself how I could have come to such a pitch of distress, so great a flood as that which now engulfs me—I who was so generous and well-loved in my heyday.
 12 But now I remember the wrong I did in Jerusalem when I seized all the vessels of silver and gold there, and ordered the extermination of the inhabitants of Judah 13 for no reason at all. •This, I am convinced, is why these misfortunes have overtaken me, and why I am dying of melancholy in a foreign land.'

The accession of Antiochus V

He summoned Philip,^b one of his Friends, and made him regent of his whole kingdom. •He entrusted him with his diadem, his robe and his signet, on the understanding that he was to educate his son Antiochus and train him for the throne. •Then King Antiochus died, in the year one hundred and forty-nine.^c Lysias, learning that the king was dead, established his son Antiochus on the throne in succession to him, having brought him up from childhood—and styled him Eupator.

The siege of the Citadel of Jerusalem by Judas Maccabaeus

The men from the Citadel were a threat to Israel in the neighbourhood of the sanctuary, seeking every opportunity of harming them, and proving a strong support to the pagans. •Judas decided that they must be destroyed, and he mobilised the whole people to besiege them. •They assembled, and laid siege to the Citadel in the year one hundred and fifty,^d building firing platforms and siege-engines. •But some of the besieged broke through the blockade, and to these a number of renegades from Israel attached themselves. •They made their way to the king and said, 'How much longer are you going to wait before you see justice done and avenge our fellows? •We were content to serve your father, to comply with his orders, and to obey his edicts. •'As a result our own people will have nothing to do with us; what is more, they have killed all those of us they could catch, and have plundered our heritages. •Nor is it on us alone that their blows have fallen, but on all your dominions. •At this moment they are laying siege to the Citadel of Jerusalem, to capture it, and they have fortified the sanctuary and Bethzur. •Unless you forestall them at once, they will go on to even bigger things, and then you will never be able to control them.'

The expedition of Antiochus V and Lysias. The battle of Bethzechariah

The king was furious when he heard this, and summoned all his Friends, the generals of his forces and the cavalry commanders. •He recruited mercenaries from other kingdoms and the islands of the seas. •His forces numbered a hundred thousand foot soldiers, twenty thousand cavalry and thirty-two elephants with experience of battle conditions. •They advanced through Idumaea and besieged Bethzur, pressing the attack for days on end; they also constructed siege-engines, but the defenders made a sortie and set these on fire, putting up a brave resistance.

At this Judas raised the siege of the Citadel and pitched camp at Bethzechariah^e opposite the royal encampment. •The king rose at daybreak and marched his army at top speed down the road to Bethzechariah, where his forces took up their battle formations and sounded the trumpets. •The elephants were shown a syrup of grapes and mulberries to prepare them for the battle. They distributed these animals among the phalanxes, allocating to each elephant a thousand men dressed in coats of mail with bronze helmets on their heads; five hundred picked horsemen were also assigned to each beast. •The horsemen anticipated every move their elephant made; wherever it went they went with it, and never separated from it. •On each elephant, to protect it, was a stout wooden tower, kept in position by girths, each with its team fighting from their mounted position,^f as well as its driver. •The remainder of the cavalry was stationed on one or other of the two flanks of the army, to harass the enemy and cover the phalanxes.

When the sun glinted on the bronze and golden shields the mountains caught the glint and gleamed like fiery torches. •One part of the king's army was deployed high up in the mountains and others on the valley floor, all advancing confidently and in good order. •Everyone trembled at the noise made by this vast multitude, the thunder of the troops on the march and the clanking of their armour, for it was an immense and mighty army. •Judas and his army advanced 43 to give battle, and six hundred of the king's army were killed. •Eleazar, called ^{2 M 13:15} Avaran, noticing that one of the elephants was royally caparisoned and was also taller than all the others, and supposing that the king was mounted on it, ⁴⁴ sacrificed himself to save his people and win an imperishable name. •Boldly ⁴⁵ charging towards the creature through the thick of the phalanx, dealing death to right and left, so that the enemy scattered on either side at his onslaught, •he ⁴⁶ darted in under the elephant, ran his sword into it and killed it. The beast ⁴⁷ collapsed on top of him, and he died on the spot. •The Jews saw how strong the king was, and the ferocity of the royal troops, and retired before them.

The capture of Bethzur and siege of Mount Zion by the Syrians 48 The royal army moved up to encounter them before Jerusalem, and the ^{2 M 13:18f} king began to blockade Judaea and Mount Zion. •He granted peace terms to the people of Bethzur, who evacuated the town; it lacked store of provisions ⁵⁰ to withstand a siege, since the land was enjoying a sabbatical year. •Having ^{Lv 25:1+} occupied Bethzur, the king stationed a garrison there to hold it. •He besieged the sanctuary for a long time, erecting firing platforms and siege-engines, fire-throwers and ballistas, scorpions to discharge arrows, and catapults. •The defenders countered these by constructing their own engines, and were thus ⁵³ able to prolong their resistance. •But they had no stocks of provisions, because it was the seventh year, and those who had taken refuge in Judaea from the ⁵⁴ pagans had eaten up the last of their reserves. •Only a few men were left in the Holy Place, owing to the severity of the famine; the rest had dispersed and gone home.

The king grants the Jews religious freedom

55 Meanwhile Philip, whom King Antiochus before his death had appointed ⁵⁶ to train his son Antiochus for the throne, •had returned from Persia and Media with the forces that had accompanied the king, and was planning to seize ⁵⁷ control of affairs. •On hearing this, Lysias at once decided to leave, and said ^{||2 M 11:13-33} to the king, the generals of the army and the men, 'We are growing weaker every day, we are short of food, and the place we are besieging is well fortified; ⁵⁸ moreover the affairs of the kingdom demand our attention. •Let us offer the hand of friendship to these men and make peace with them and with their whole ⁵⁹ nation. •Let us grant them permission to follow their own customs as before, since it is our abolition of these customs that provoked them into acting like ⁶⁰ this.'^a •The king and his commanders approved this argument, and he sent ⁶¹ the Jews an offer of peace, which they accepted. •The king and the generals ⁶² ratified the treaty by oath, and the besieged accordingly left the fortress. •The king then entered Mount Zion, but on seeing how impregnable the place was, he broke the oath he had sworn and gave orders for the encircling wall to be ⁶³ demolished. •He then hurriedly struck camp and retired to Antioch, where he found Philip already master of the city. Antiochus fought him and took the city by storm.

Demetrius I becomes king, and sends Bacchides and Alcimus to Judaea to hold court. •As he was entering the crown lands of his ancestors his army 2 arrested Antiochus and Lysias, intending to bring them before him. •But when 3 he heard of this he said, 'Keep them out of my sight'. •So the army killed 4 them and Demetrius ascended the throne of his kingdom. •Then there came to 5 him all the renegades and godless men in Israel, led by Alcimus, whose ambition it was to become high priest. •They denounced the people before the king. 6 'Judas and his brothers' they said 'have killed all your friends, and he has driven us out of our country. •Send someone now whom you can trust; let him go and 7 see the wholesale ruin Judas has brought on us and on the king's dominions, and let him punish the wretches and all who assist them.'

2:18+ The king chose Bacchides, one of the Friends of the King, governor of the 8 country beyond the river,^b a great man in the kingdom and loyal to the king. He sent him with the godless Alcimus, whom he established as high priest,^c 9 with orders to exact retribution from the Israelites. •So they set out with a 10 large force, and on reaching the land of Judah they sent messengers to Judas and his brothers with treacherous proposals of peace. •But these did not trust them, 11 seeing that they had come with a large force. •Nevertheless a commission of 12 scribes presented themselves before Alcimus and Bacchides, to sue for just terms. •The first among the Israelites to ask them for peace-terms were the 13 2:42+ Hasidaeans, •who reasoned like this, 'This is a priest of Aaron's line who has come with the armed forces; he will not wrong us'. •He did in fact discuss 15 peace-terms with them and gave them his oath, 'We will not attempt to injure you or your friends'. •They believed him, but he arrested sixty of them and 16 put them to death in one day, fulfilling the words of scripture: •They have scattered 17 Ps 79:2-3 the flesh of your devout, and shed their blood all round Jerusalem, and no one to dig a grave! •At this, fear and dread gripped the whole people. 'There is 18 no truth or virtue in them;' they said 'they have broken their agreement and their sworn oath.'

Bacchides then left Jerusalem and encamped at Bethzaith,^d and from there 19 sent and arrested many of the men who had deserted him, and some of the people, and killed them, throwing them into the great cistern. •Then he put Alcimus 20 in charge of the province, leaving an army with him to support him; Bacchides himself returned to the king. •Alcimus continued his struggle to become high 21 priest, •and all who were disturbing the peace of their own people rallied to him; gaining control of the land of Judah, they worked great havoc in Israel. 22 Seeing that all the wrongs done to the Israelites by Alcimus and his supporters 23 exceeded what the pagans had done, •Judas went right round the whole territory 24 of Judaea to take vengeance on those who had deserted him and prevent their free movement about the country.

When Alcimus saw how strong Judas and his supporters had grown, he 25 realised that he had not the strength to resist them, and returned to the king where he laid criminal charges against them.

Nicanor in Judaea. The battle of Capharsalama

3:38 The king sent Nicanor, one of his generals ranking as Illustrious and a bitter 26 2 M 8:9, enemy of Israel, with orders to exterminate the people. •Reaching Jerusalem 27 34-36:15:3 with a large force, Nicanor sent envoys to Judas and his brothers with treacherous 12 M 14: proposals of peace: •'Let us have no fighting' he said 'between me and you; 28 I will come with a small escort and meet you face to face in peace.' •And he 29 came to Judas and they greeted each other peaceably enough; however, the enemy had made preparations to abduct Judas. •When Judas became aware 30 12 M 14:30 of Nicanor's treacherous purpose in coming to see him, he took fright and refused any further meeting. •Nicanor then realised that his plan had been 31 discovered, and went out to meet Judas in battle near Capharsalama.^e About five hundred of Nicanor's men fell; the rest took refuge in the City of 32 David.

Threats against the Temple

2 M 14:31-36

33 After these events Nicanor went up to Mount Zion. Some of the priests
 34 came out from the Holy Place with some elders, to welcome him peacefully 35 and to show him the holocaust that was being offered for the king. •But he 36 mocked them and laughed in their faces, defiled them^a and used insolent language, 37 swearing in his rage, 'Unless Judas is handed over to me this time with his army, 38 as soon as I am safely back, I promise you, I will burn this building down!'
 39 Then he went off in a fury. •At this the priests went in again, and stood in tears
 40 before the altar and the sanctuary, saying, •'You chose this house to be called 41 by your name, to be a house of prayer and petition for your people. •Take 42 vengeance on this man and on his army, and let them fall by the sword; remember 43 their blasphemies and give them no respite.'

The 'Day of Nicanor' at Adasa

39 Nicanor left Jerusalem and encamped at Beth-horon, where he was joined 40 by an army from Syria. •Meanwhile Judas camped at Adasa^g with three thousand 41 men, and offered this prayer, •'When the Assyrian king's envoys blasphemed, 42 your angel went out and struck down one hundred and eighty-five thousand 43 of his men. •In the same way let us see you crush this army today, so that the 44 rest may know that this man has spoken blasphemously against your sanctuary:

A eulogy of the Romans^a

 2 and their benevolence towards all who made common cause with them; they 3 wanted to establish friendly relations with anyone who approached them, •be-4 cause of their military strength. He was told of their wars and of their prowess
 5 among the Gauls,^b whom they had conquered and put under tribute; •and of all
 6 they had done in the province of Spain to gain possession of the silver and gold 7 mines there, •making themselves masters of the whole country by their deter-8 mination and perseverance, despite its great distance from their own; of the 9 kings who came from the ends of the earth to attack them, only to be crushed 10 by them and overwhelmed with disaster, and of others who paid them annual 11 tribute; •Philip, Perseus king of the Kittim, and others who had dared to make war on them, had been defeated and reduced to subjection, •while Antiochus the 6 Great, king of Asia, who had advanced to attack them with a hundred and twenty elephants, cavalry, chariots and a very large army, had also suffered 7 defeat at their hands; •they had taken him alive and imposed on him and his successors the payment of an enormous tribute, the surrender of hostages, and 8 the cession •of the Indian territory, with Media, Lydia, and some of their best provinces, which they took from him and gave to King Eumenes. •Judas was 9 also told how, when the Greeks planned an expedition to destroy them, •the 10 Romans got wind of it and sent against them a single general, fought a campaign in which they inflicted heavy casualties, carried off their women and children into captivity, pillaged their goods, subdued their country, tore down their fortresses and reduced them to a slavery lasting to this very day; •and how all 11 other kingdoms and islands that had ever resisted them were also destroyed and enslaved.

But where their friends and those who relied on them were concerned, they 12 had always stood by their friendship. They had subdued kings far and near, and all who heard their name went in terror of them. •One man, if they deter- 13 mined to help him and advance him to a throne, would certainly occupy it, while another, if they so determined, would find himself deposed; their influence was paramount. •In spite of all this not one of them had assumed a crown or 14 put on the purple for his own aggrandisement. •They had set up a senate, where 15 three hundred and twenty councillors deliberated daily, constantly debating how best to regulate public affairs. •They entrusted their government to one man 16 for a year at a time, with absolute power over their whole empire, and this man was obeyed by all without any envy or jealousy.

12:1f; 15:15 The alliance between the Jews and Romans

2 M 4:11 Having chosen Eupolemus son of John, of the family of Accos, and Jason 17 son of Eleazar, Judas sent them to Rome to make a treaty of friendship and alliance with these people, •who would surely lift the yoke from their shoulders 18 once they understood that the kingdom of the Greeks was reducing Israel to slavery. •The envoys made the lengthy journey to Rome and presented themselves 19 before the Senate with their formal proposal, •‘Judas Maccabaeus and his brothers, with the Jewish people, have sent us to you to conclude a treaty of 20 alliance and peace with you, and to enrol ourselves as your allies and friends’.
The proposal met with the approval of the senators, •and this is a copy of the 21 rescript which they engraved on bronze tablets and sent to Jerusalem to be 22 kept there by the Jews as a record of peace and alliance:

14:18 ‘Good fortune attend the Romans and the Jewish nation by sea and land 23 for ever; may sword or enemy be far from them! •If war comes first to Rome or 24 any of her allies throughout her dominions, •the Jewish nation is to take action 25 as her ally, as occasion may require, and do it wholeheartedly. •They are not 26 to give or supply to the aggressor any grain, arms, money or ships; this is the Roman decision, and they are to honour their obligations without recompense.
In the same way, if war comes first to the Jewish nation the Romans are to support 27 them energetically as occasion may offer, •and the aggressor shall not be furnished 28 with grain, arms, money or ships; this is the Roman decision, and they will honour these obligations unreservedly. •These are the terms laid down by the 29
Romans for the Jewish people. •If when they have come into force either party 30 should wish to make any addition or deletion, they shall be free to do so, and any such addition or deletion shall be binding.’

‘As regards the wrongs done to them by King Demetrius, we have written 31 to him in these terms: Why have you made your yoke lie heavy on our friends and allies the Jews? •If they appeal against you again we will uphold their rights 32 and make war on you by sea and land.’

The battle of Beerzeth and death of Judas Maccabaeus^a

- 9 Demetrius heard that Nicanor and his army had fallen in battle, and he sent Bacchides and Alcimus a second time into the land of Judah, and with them the right wing of his army. • They took the road to Galilee^b and besieged Mesaloth in Arbela,^c and captured it, putting many people to death. In the first month of the year one hundred and fifty-two^d they set up camp before Jerusalem; • they then moved on, making their way to Beerzeth^e with twenty thousand foot and two thousand horse. • Judas lay in camp at Elasa, with three thousand picked men. • When they saw the huge size of the enemy forces they were terrified, and many slipped out of the camp, until no more than eight hundred of the force were left. • When Judas saw that his army had melted away and that attack was imminent, he was aghast, for he had no time to rally them. • Yet, dismayed as he was, he said to those who were left, 'Up! Let us face the enemy; we may yet have the strength to fight them.' • His men tried to dissuade him, declaring, 'We have no strength for anything but to escape with our lives this time; then we can come back with our brothers to fight them; by ourselves we are too few'. • 'God forbid' Judas retorted 'that I should do such a thing as run away from them! If our time has come, at least let us die like men for our countrymen, and leave nothing to tarnish our reputation.'
- The enemy forces then marched out of the camp, and the Jews took up their position in readiness to engage them. The cavalry was ordered into two squadrons; the slingers and archers marched in the van of the army with the shock-troops; all stout fighters; • Bacchides was on the right wing. The phalanx advanced from between the two squadrons, sounding the trumpets; the men on Judas' side blew their trumpets also, • and the earth shook with the noise of the armies. The engagement lasted from morning until evening.
- Judas saw that Bacchides and the main strength of his army lay on the right; all the stout-hearted rallied to him, • and they broke the right wing and pursued them to the furthest foothills of the range.^f • But when the Syrians on the left wing saw that the right had been broken, they turned and followed hot on the heels of Judas and his men to take them in the rear. • The fight became desperate, and there were many casualties on both sides. • Judas himself fell, and the remnant fled.

The funeral of Judas Maccabaeus

- Jonathan and Simon took up their brother Judas and buried him in his ancestral tomb at Modein. • All Israel wept and mourned him deeply and for many days they repeated this dirge, • 'What a downfall for the strong man, 2 S 1:27 the man who saved Israel single-handed!' • The other deeds of Judas, the battles he fought, the exploits he performed, and all his titles to greatness have not been recorded; but they were very many.

IV. JONATHAN, LEADER OF THE JEWS AND HIGH PRIEST (160-142 B.C.)

The triumph of the Greek party. Jonathan leads the resistance

The treaty did not in fact help the Jews in any way.

the country went over to their side. •Bacchides deliberately chose the enemies 25 of religion and set them up as governors of the country. •These traced and 26 searched out the friends of Judas and brought them before Bacchides, who took revenge on them and humiliated them. •A terrible oppression began in Israel; 27 4:46+ there had been nothing like it since the disappearance of prophecy among them.

Then all the friends of Judas came together and said to Jonathan, •'Since 28 your brother Judas died, there has been no one like him to head the resistance 29 to the enemy, Bacchides and those who hate our nation. •Accordingly, we have 30 today chosen you to take his place as our ruler and leader and to fight our campaigns.' •From that day Jonathan accepted the leadership and took over 31
the command from his brother Judas.

Jonathan in the desert of Tekoa. Bloody encounters round Medeba

Bacchides, when he heard the news, made plans to kill Jonathan. •But this 32 became known to Jonathan, his brother Simon and all his supporters, and they 33 took refuge in the desert of Tekoa,^g camping by the water of the cistern at Asphar. •(Bacchides came to know of this on the sabbath day, and he too crossed 34 the Jordan with his entire army.)^h

5:25+ Jonathan sent his brother, who was in charge of the convoy, to request his 35 friends the Nabataeans to store their considerable baggage for them. •But 36 the sons of Jambri from Medebaⁱ raided them, captured John and everything he had and made off with their prize. •After this had happened it was reported 37 to Jonathan and his brother Simon that the sons of Jambri were celebrating a great wedding, and were escorting the bride, a daughter of one of the great notables of Canaan, from Nadabath with a large retinue. •Remembering the 38 bloody end of their brother John, they went up and hid under cover of the mountain. •As they were keeping watch, there came into sight a noisy procession 39 with a great deal of baggage, and the bridegroom, with his groomsmen and his family, came out to meet it with tambourines and a band, and military display.
The Jews rushed down on them from their ambush and killed them, inflicting 40 heavy casualties; the survivors escaped to the mountain, leaving their entire baggage train to be captured. •And so the wedding was turned into mourning 41 and the music of their band into a dirge. •Having in this way avenged in full the 42 blood of their brother they returned to the marshes of the Jordan.

Crossing the Jordan^j

As soon as Bacchides heard this, he came on the sabbath day with a 43 considerable force to the steep banks of the Jordan. •Jonathan said to his men, 44
'Up! Let us fight for our lives, for today is not like yesterday and the day before.
You can see, we shall have to fight on our front and to our rear, we have the 45 waters of the Jordan on one side, the marsh and scrub on the other, and we have no line of withdrawal. •This is the moment to call on heaven for your 46 deliverance from the hand of our enemies.' •The engagement was begun by 47 Jonathan, who aimed a blow at Bacchides, but the Syrian disengaged himself and withdrew, •whereupon Jonathan and his men leapt into the Jordan and swam 48 to the other bank, but the enemy did not cross the Jordan in pursuit. •That 49 day Bacchides lost about a thousand men.

Bacchides builds fortifications. The death of Alcimus

Bacchides returned to Jerusalem and built strongholds in Judaea, the fortress 50 in Jericho, Emmaus, Beth-horon, Bethel, Timnath, Pharathon and Tephon, with high walls and barred gates, •and stationed a garrison in each of them to 51 harass Israel. •He also fortified the town of Bethzur, Gezer and the Citadel, 52 and placed troops in them with supplies of provisions. •He took the sons of 53
the leading men of the country as hostages, and had them placed under guard in the Citadel of Jerusalem.

54 In the year one hundred and fifty-three,^k in the second month, Alcimus 55 ordered the demolition of the wall of the inner court of the sanctuary, destroying 56 the work of the prophets.^l Alcimus had just begun the demolition •when he 57 suffered a stroke, and his work was interrupted. His mouth became obstructed, and his paralysis made him incapable of speaking at all or giving directions to his household; •it was not long before he died in great agony. •When Bacchides saw that Alcimus was dead he returned to the king; and the land of Judah was left in peace for two years.

The siege of Bethbasi

58 All the renegades then agreed on a plan. 'Now is the time,' they said 'while Jonathan and his supporters are living in peace and are full of confidence, for 59 us to bring back Bacchides; he can arrest them all in one night.' •So they went 60 to him and reached an understanding. •Bacchides at once set out with a large force, and sent secret instructions to all his allies in Judaea to seize Jonathan and his supporters. But they were unable to do this because their plan became 61 known, •and Jonathan and his men arrested some fifty of the men of the country who were ringleaders in the plot, and put them to death.

62 Jonathan and Simon then retired with their partisans into the wilderness 63 to Bethbasi;^m they rebuilt the ruinous parts of the place and fortified it. •When Bacchides heard this, he mustered his whole force and notified his adherents 64 in Judaea. •He then proceeded to lay siege to Bethbasi, attacking it for many 65 days and constructing siege-engines. •But Jonathan, leaving his brother Simon
 66 in the town, broke out into the countryside with a handful of men. •He attacked Odomera and his brothers, and the sons of Phasiron in their tents; and these 67 went over to the attack, joining forces with him. •Meanwhile Simon and his 68 people made a sortie from the town and set fire to the siege-engines. •Taking the offensive against Bacchides, they routed him. He was greatly disconcerted 69 to find that his plan and his assault had come to nothing, •and vented his anger on those renegades who had induced him to enter the country, putting many 70 of them to death; then he decided to return to his own country. •Discovering this, Jonathan sent envoys to negotiate peace-terms and the release of prisoners 71 with him. •Bacchides agreed to this, accepting his proposals and swearing 72 never to seek occasion to harm him all the days of his life. •After surrendering to Jonathan the prisoners he had earlier taken in the land of Judah, he turned about and withdrew to his own country, and never again came near their frontiers.
 73 The sword no longer hung over Israel, and Jonathan settled in Michmash, where he began to judge the people and to rid Israel of the godless.ⁿ

Alexander Balas competes for Jonathan's support, and appoints him high priest

1 10 In the year one hundred and sixty Alexander styled Epiphanes, son of Antiochus, landed at Ptolemais^a and occupied it. He was well received,
 2 and held court there. •On hearing this, King Demetrius assembled a very large
 3 army and marched out to meet him in battle. •Demetrius furthermore sent 4 Jonathan a conciliatory letter designed to enhance his dignity, •for, as he said,
 'We had better move first to come to terms with these people before he makes 5 common cause with Alexander against us; •he will not have forgotten all the wrongs we inflicted on him and his brothers, and on his nation'. •He therefore⁶ authorised him to raise an army and manufacture arms, and to describe himself as his ally, and ordered the hostages in the Citadel to be surrendered to him.

Jonathan went straight to Jerusalem and read the letter in the hearing of⁷ the whole people and of the men in the Citadel. •Everyone was awestruck when⁸ they heard that the king had given him authority to raise an army. •The men⁹ in the Citadel surrendered the hostages to Jonathan, who handed them back to their parents. •Jonathan then took up residence in Jerusalem^b and began the rebuilding and restoration of the city. •He ordered those responsible for the¹¹ work to build the walls and the defences round Mount Zion in square hewn stones to make them stronger, and this was done. •The foreigners in the fortresses¹² built by Bacchides abandoned them, •one after another leaving his post to go¹³ back to his own country. •Only at Bethzur were a few left of those who had¹⁴ forsaken the Law and the commandments, since this served them as a place of refuge.

King Alexander heard of all the promises Demetrius had sent to Jonathan,¹⁵ and he was also given an account of the battles and exploits of this man and his brothers and the trials they had endured. •'Shall we ever find another man¹⁶ like him?' he exclaimed. 'Let us be quick to make a friend and ally of him!' •He¹⁷ therefore wrote him a letter, addressing him in these terms, •'King Alexander¹⁸ to his brother Jonathan, greetings. •You have been brought to our notice as¹⁹ a strong man of action, and one disposed to be our friend. •Accordingly we²⁰
2:18+ have today appointed you high priest of your nation,^c with the title of 'Friend of the King'—he also sent him a purple robe and a golden crown—'and you are to study our interests and maintain friendly relations with us.'

Jonathan put on the sacred vestments in the seventh month of the year one²¹ hundred and sixty, on the feast of Tabernacles;^d he then set about raising troops and manufacturing arms in quantity.

A letter from Demetrius I to Jonathan

Demetrius was displeased when he heard what had happened. •'What have²² we done' he said 'that Alexander should have forestalled us in gaining the²³ friendship of the Jews to strengthen his position? •I will address an appeal to²⁴ them too offering them advancement and riches as an inducement to support me.' •And he wrote to them as follows:²⁵

'King Demetrius to the Jewish nation, greetings. •We have heard how you²⁶ have kept your agreement with us and have maintained friendly relations with us and have not gone over to our enemies, and it has given us great satisfaction. If you now continue to keep faith with us, we will make you a handsome return²⁷ for what you do on our behalf. •We will accord you many exemptions and²⁸
11:35 grant you privileges. •Henceforth I release you and exempt all the Jews from²⁹ the tribute, the salt dues and the crown levies,^e •and whereas I am entitled to³⁰ levy the equivalent of one third of the sowing and one half of the fruit of the 11:28, 34 trees,^f I release from this levy, from today and for the future, the land of Judah and the three districts annexed to it from Samaria-Galilee, from this day in perpetuity. •Jerusalem shall be sacred and exempt, with its territory, tithes and³¹ dues. •I relinquish control of the Citadel in Jerusalem and make it over to the³² high priest, so that he may man it with a garrison of his own choosing. •Every³³ Jewish person taken from the land of Judah into captivity in any part of my kingdom I set free without ransom, and decree that all shall be exempt from taxes, even on their livestock. •All festivals, sabbaths, new moons and days³⁴ of special observance, and the three days before and three days after a festival, shall all be days of exemption and quittance for all the Jews in my kingdom, and no one shall have the right to pursue or molest any of them for any matter³⁵ whatsoever. •Jews shall be enrolled in the king's forces to the number of thirty³⁶ thousand men, and receive maintenance on the same scale as the rest of the king's forces. •Some of them shall be stationed in the king's major fortresses, and from among others appointments shall be made to positions of trust in the kingdom. Their officers and commanders shall be appointed from their own number, and shall live under their own laws, as the king has prescribed for the land of Judah. •As regards the three districts annexed to Judaea from the province of Samaria, they shall be integrated into Judaea and considered as coming under one governor, obeying the high priest's authority and no other. I have made over Ptolemais and its environs as a free gift to the sanctuary in Jerusalem, to meet the necessary expenses of public worship. •And I make a personal grant of fifteen thousand silver shekels annually chargeable to the royal revenue from appropriate places. •And the entire surplus, which has not been paid in by the officials as in previous years, shall henceforth be paid over by them for work on the Temple. •In addition, the sum of five thousand silver shekels, levied annually on the profits of the sanctuary, as shown in the annual accounts, is also relinquished as the perquisite of the priests who perform the liturgy. •Anyone who takes refuge in the Temple in Jerusalem or any of its precincts, when in debt to the royal exchequer or otherwise, shall be discharged in full possession of all the goods he owns in my kingdom. •As regards the building and restoration of the sanctuary, the expense of the work shall be met from the royal exchequer.^a •The reconstruction of the walls of Jerusalem and the fortification of the perimeter shall also be a charge on the royal exchequer, and so also the reconstruction of other city walls in Judaea.'

Jonathan rejects Demetrius' offers

When Jonathan and the people heard these proposals they put no faith in them and refused to accept them, because they remembered the great wrongs Demetrius had done in Israel and how cruelly he had oppressed them. •They decided in favour of Alexander, since they regarded him as their outstanding benefactor, and they became his constant allies. •King Alexander now mustered large forces and took up a position confronting Demetrius, •and the two kings met in battle. Alexander's army was routed, and Demetrius pursued him and defeated his troops. •He continued the battle with vigour until sunset, but Demetrius himself was killed that day.

Alexander's marriage with Cleopatra. Jonathan as military commissioner and governor-general

Alexander sent ambassadors to Ptolemy king of Egypt, with this message, 'Now that I have returned to my kingdom and ascended the throne of my ancestors, and have established my authority by crushing Demetrius, so gaining control of our country—for I fought him and we destroyed both him and his army and now occupy the throne of his kingdom—now, therefore, let us make a treaty of mutual friendship. Give me your daughter in marriage, and I will become your son-in-law and give you, and her, presents which are worthy of you.'

10 b. Jonathan takes advantage of the situation to establish himself in Jerusalem and to turn the Temple into the stronghold of Jewish resistance.

c. By uniting in himself the functions of high priest and of civil and military leader, v. 65, Jonathan seems to have achieved the aim of the early Maccabees, struggling 'for people and sanctuary', 3:43. But his position depends on the favour of the sovereign, and Jonathan finds that he has to please successive overlords, 10:47,59f; 11:24f,57f. In that troubled period political opportunism is the complement of armed resistance, as guaranteeing to the Jewish people the freedom required for the exercise of their religion. The religious motive was to die out with Simon, with whose death the book ends. The Hasmonaeans, successors of the Maccabees, were to fight and scheme for their own aggrandisement.

e. Lit. 'crowns'; by 'crowns', 'palms', 'olive branches', 13:37; 2 M 14:4, are meant gifts made to the sovereign, though in fact these took the form of hard cash.

f. The exorbitance of this tax is explained by the Seleucids' claim (like that of the Egyptian Ptolemies) to be universal landowners, their subjects being lessees only.

g. The Seleucids, like the kings of Persia, Ezr 6:3, subscribed freely to the sanctuaries of their subject peoples. For the Temple of Jerusalem, cf. the charter of Antiochus III quoted by Josephus, the generous gifts of Seleucus IV, 2 M 3:3, and the promises made by the dying Antiochus Epiphanes, 2 M 9:16.

King Ptolemy replied as follows, 'Happy the day when you returned to 55
the land of your ancestors and ascended their royal throne! •I will do at once for 56 you what your letter proposes; but meet me at Ptolemais, so that we can see one another, and I will become your father-in-law, as you have asked.'

Ptolemy^a left Egypt with his daughter Cleopatra, and reached Ptolemais 57
in the year one hundred and sixty-two.ⁱ •King Alexander went to meet him, and 58 Ptolemy gave him the hand of his daughter Cleopatra and celebrated her wedding in Ptolemais with great magnificence, as kings do. •King Alexander then wrote 59 to Jonathan to come and meet him. •Jonathan made his way in state to Ptolemais, 60 and met the two kings; he gave them and their friends silver and gold, and many gifts, and made a favourable impression on them. •A number of scoundrels 61 from Israel^j combined to denounce him, but the king paid no attention to them. •In fact the king commanded that Jonathan should be divested of his 62 own garments and clothed in the purple, which was done. •The king then seated 63 him by his side and said to his officers, 'Escort him into the centre of the city and proclaim that no one is to bring charges against him on any count; no one is to molest him for any reason.' •And so, when his accusers saw the honour 64 done him by this proclamation, and Jonathan himself invested in the purple, they all fled. •The king did him the honour of enrolling him among the First 65 Friends,^k and appointed him military commissioner and governor-general.^l
Jonathan then returned to Jerusalem in peace and gladness. 66

Demetrius II. Apollonius, governor of Coele-Syria, defeated by Jonathan

In the year one hundred and sixty-five,^m Demetrius son of Demetrius came 67 from Crete to the land of his ancestors. •When King Alexander heard of it he was 68 plunged in gloom and retired to Antioch. •Demetrius appointed Apollonius 69 as governorⁿ of Coele-Syria; the latter assembled a large force, and from his camp at Jamnia sent the following message to Jonathan the high priest:

'You are entirely alone in rising against us, and now I find myself ridiculed 70 and reproached on your account. Why do you use your authority to our disadvantage in the mountains? •If you are so confident in your forces, come down 71 now to meet us on the plain and let us take each other's measure there; on my side I have the strength of the towns. •Ask and learn who I am and who are 72 the others supporting us. Men will tell you that you cannot stand up to us, because your ancestors were twice routed on their own ground,^o •nor will you 73 now be able to withstand the cavalry or so great an army on the plain, where there is neither stone nor outcrop nor cover of any kind.'

When Jonathan heard the message of Apollonius his spirit was roused; 74 he picked ten thousand men and left Jerusalem, and his brother Simon joined him with reinforcements. •He drew up his forces before Joppa; the citizens had 75 shut him out as Apollonius had a garrison in Joppa. When they began the attack, •the citizens took fright and opened the gates, and Jonathan occupied 76 Joppa. •Hearing this, Apollonius marshalled three thousand cavalry and a large 77 army and made his way to Azotus as though intending to march through, while in fact pressing on into the plain, since he had a great number of cavalry on which he was relying. •Jonathan pursued him as far as Azotus, where the armies 78 joined battle. •Now Apollonius had left a thousand horsemen in concealment 79 behind them. •Jonathan knew of this ambush behind him; the horsemen 80 surrounded his army and shot their arrows into the people from morning till evening. •But the people stood firm, as Jonathan had ordered, while the enemy's 81 horses tired. •So Simon was able to throw in his force and close with the 82 phalanx, which he cut to pieces and routed. •The cavalry scattered over the 83 plain and fled to Azotus, where they entered Beth-dagon, the temple of their idol, to take shelter there. •But Jonathan set fire to Azotus and the surrounding 84 towns, plundered them, and burned down the temple of Dagon, with all the fugitives who had crowded into it. •The enemy losses, counting those who 85 fell by the sword and those burnt to death, totalled about eight thousand men.

 86 Then Jonathan left there and encamped opposite Askalon, whose citizens came 87 out to meet him with great ceremony. •Jonathan then returned to Jerusalem
 88 with his followers, laden with booty. •In the event, when King Alexander heard 89 what had happened, he awarded Jonathan fresh honours: •he sent him a golden brooch, of the kind customarily presented to the Cousins^p of the King, and gave him proprietary rights over Ekron with all its lands.

Ptolemy VI supports Demetrius II but dies at the same time as Alexander Balas

1 11 The king of Egypt then assembled an army as numerous as the sands of the seashore, with many ships, and attempted to take possession of 2 Alexander's kingdom by a ruse and add it to his own kingdom. •He set off for Syria with protestations of peace, and the people of the towns opened their 3 gates to him and came out to meet him, since King Alexander's orders were to welcome him, Ptolemy being his father-in-law. •On entering the towns, however, 4 Ptolemy quartered troops as a garrison in each one. •When he reached Azotus he was shown the burnt-out temple of Dagon, with Azotus and its suburbs in ruins, corpses scattered here and there, and the charred remains of those whom Jonathan had burnt to death in the battle, piled into heaps along his 5 route. •They explained to the king what Jonathan had done, hoping for his 6 disapproval; but the king said nothing. •Jonathan then went to receive the king in state at Joppa, where they greeted each other and spent the night.
 7 Jonathan accompanied the king as far as the river called Eleutherus,^a and then 8 returned to Jerusalem. •King Ptolemy for his part occupied the coastal towns as far as the maritime quarter of Seleucia,^b all the while maturing his wicked 9 designs against Alexander. •He sent envoys to King Demetrius, saying, 'Come, let us make a treaty with each other; I will give you my daughter, whom Alexander 10 now has, and you shall rule your father's kingdom. •I regret having given my 11 daughter to that man, who has attempted to kill me.' •He made this accusation 12 because he coveted his kingdom. •Having carried off his daughter and bestowed her on Demetrius, he broke with Alexander, and their enmity became open.
 13 Ptolemy next entered Antioch and assumed the crown of Asia; he now wore on 14 his head the two crowns of Egypt and Asia. •Meanwhile, King Alexander was 15 in Cilicia, since the people of those parts had risen in revolt, •but when he heard the news, he advanced on his rival to give battle, while Ptolemy for his part also 16 took the field, met him with a strong force and routed him.^c •Alexander fled to 17 Arabia for refuge, and King Ptolemy held victory celebrations. •Zabdiel the Arab 18 cut off Alexander's head and sent it to Ptolemy. •Three days later King Ptolemy died, and the Egyptian garrisons in the strongholds were killed by the local 19 inhabitants. •So Demetrius became king in the year one hundred and sixty-seven.^d

But some renegades who hated their nation made their way to the king and told 21

 No sooner had he been informed than he set out and came to Ptolemais. He wrote to Jonathan, telling him to raise the siege and to meet him for a conference in Ptolemais as soon as possible. •When Jonathan heard this he gave orders for 23
 the siege to continue; then he selected a deputation from the elders of Israel and the priests, and took the deliberate risk •of taking silver and gold, clothing 24 and numerous other presents, and going to Ptolemais to face the king, whose favour he succeeded in winning; •and although one or two renegades of his 25 nation brought charges against him, •the king treated him as his predecessors 26 had treated him, and promoted him in the presence of all his friends. •He con- 27 firmed him in the high-priesthood and whatever other distinctions he already held, and had him ranked among the First Friends. •Jonathan claimed that the 28 king should exempt Judaea from tribute, with the three Samaritan provinces, promising him three hundred talents in return. •The king consented, and wrote 29
 Jonathan a rescript covering the whole matter, in these terms:

10:26-45 A new charter favouring the Jews

•King Demetrius to Jonathan his brother, and to the Jewish nation, greeting. 30
 We have written to Lasthenes our cousin concerning you, and now send you 31 this copy of our rescript for your own information: •King Demetrius to his 32 father Lasthenes, greeting. •The nation of the Jews are our friends and fulfil 33 their obligations to us, and in view of their goodwill towards us we have decided to show them our bounty. •We confirm them in their possession of the territory 34 of Judaea and the three districts of Aphairema, Lydda and Ramathaim; these were annexed to Judaea from Samaritan territory, with all their dependencies, in favour of all who offer sacrifice in Jerusalem, instead of the royal dues which the king formerly received from them every year, from the yield of the soil and the fruit crops. •As regards our other rights over the tithes and taxes due to us, 35 over the salt marshes, and the crown taxes due to us, as from today we release them from them all. •No single one of these grants shall be set aside, from 36 today in perpetuity. •It shall be your responsibility to have a copy of this 37 made, to be given to Jonathan and displayed on the holy mountain in a conspicuous place.'

Demetrius II rescued by Jonathan's troops at Antioch

When King Demetrius saw that the country was at peace under his rule and 38 that no resistance was offered him, he dismissed his forces, and sent all the men home, except for the foreign troops that he had recruited in the islands of the nations, thus incurring the enmity of the veterans who had served his ancestors.^h
 Now Trypho, one of Alexander's former supporters, seeing that all the troops 39 were muttering against Demetrius, approached Iamlekuⁱ the Arab, who was bringing up Antiochus, Alexander's young son, •and repeatedly urged him 40 to let him have the boy, so that he might succeed his father as king; he told him of Demetrius' decision and the resentment it had aroused among his troops.
 He spent a long time there. •Meanwhile Jonathan sent to ask King Demetrius 41 to withdraw the troops in the Citadel from Jerusalem and to remove the garrisons from the strongholds, since they were constantly fighting Israel. •Demetrius 42 sent back word to Jonathan, 'Not only will I do this for you and for your nation, but I will heap honours on you and your nation if I find a favourable opportunity.
 For the present, you would do well to send me reinforcements, for all my troops 43 have deserted.' •Jonathan sent off three thousand experienced soldiers to him 44 in Antioch; when they reached the king, he was delighted at their arrival. •The 45 citizens crowded together in the centre of the city, to the number of some hundred and twenty thousand, intending to kill the king. •The king took refuge in the 46 palace, while the citizens occupied the thoroughfares of the city and began to

47 attack. •The king then called on the Jews for help; and these all rallied round him in a body,^j then spread out through the city, and that day killed about a 48 hundred thousand of its inhabitants. •They fired the city, seizing a great deal
49 of plunder at the same time, and secured the king's safety. •When the citizens saw that the Jews had the city at their mercy their courage failed them, and 50 they made an abject appeal to the king, •'Give us the right hand of peace, and 51 let the Jews stop their fight against us and the city'. •They threw down their arms and made peace. The Jews were covered in glory, in the eyes of the king and of everyone else in his kingdom. Having won renown in his kingdom they returned
52 to Jerusalem laden with booty. •King Demetrius continued to occupy the throne
53 of his kingdom, and the country was quiet under his government. •But he gave the lie to all the promises he had made, and fell out with Jonathan, giving nothing in return for the services Jonathan had rendered him, but thwarting him at every turn.

Jonathan opposes Demetrius II. Simon retakes Bethzur. The Hazor affair

54 After this Trypho came back with the little boy Antiochus,^k who became 12:39
55 king and was crowned. •All the troops that Demetrius had summarily dismissed rallied to Antiochus, and made war on Demetrius, and he turned tail and fled.
56 Trypho captured the elephants and seized Antioch.

57 Young Antiochus then wrote Jonathan the following letter, 'I confirm you in the high-priesthood and set you over the four districts^l and appoint you one
58 of the Friends of the King'. •He sent him a service of gold plate, and granted 2:18+
59 him the right to drink from gold vessels, and to wear the purple and the golden brooch. •He appointed his brother Simon as military commissioner of the 60 region from the Ladder of Tyre to the frontiers of Egypt. •Jonathan then set out and made a progress through Transeuphrates and its towns, and the entire Syrian army rallied to his support. He came to Askalon and was received in state by 61 the inhabitants. •From there he proceeded to Gaza, but the people of Gaza shut him out, so he laid siege to it, burning down its suburbs and plundering them.
62 The people of Gaza then pleaded with Jonathan, and he made peace with them; but he took the sons of their chief men as hostages and sent them away to Jerusalem. He then travelled through the country as far as Damascus.

63 Jonathan now learned that Demetrius' generals had arrived at Kadesh in 64 Galilee with a great army, with the object of diverting him from his mission, •and 65 he went to meet them,^m leaving his brother Simon inside the country. •Simon laid siege to Bethzur, attacking it day after day, and blockading the inhabitants 66 till they sued for peace, which he granted them, though he expelled them from 67 the town and occupied it, stationing a garrison there. •Meanwhile Jonathan and his army, having pitched camp by the Lake of Gennesaret, rose early, and by 68 morning were already in the plain of Hazor.ⁿ •The foreigners' army advanced to fight them on the plain, after laying first an ambush for him in the mountains.
69 While the main body was advancing directly towards the Jews, •the troops in 70 ambush broke cover and attacked first. •All the men with Jonathan fled; no one was left, except Mattathias son of Absalom and Judas son of Chalphi, the 71 generals of his army. •At this Jonathan tore his garments, put dust on his head, 72 and prayed. •Then he returned to the fight and routed the enemy, who fled. •When

Jonathan's relations with the Spartans

8:17-32 12 When Jonathan saw that circumstances were working in his favour he sent a select mission to Rome to confirm and renew his treaty of friendship with the Romans.^a •He also sent letters to the same effect to the Spartans and to other places.^b •The envoys made their way to Rome and entered the Senate, 14:19 where they made this announcement: 'Jonathan the high priest and the Jewish nation have sent us to renew your treaty of friendship and alliance with them as before'. •The Romans gave them letters to the authorities of each place, to procure their safe conduct to the land of Judah. 4

The following is the copy of the letter Jonathan wrote to the Spartans: 5

12:20-23 'Jonathan the high priest, the senate of the nation, the priests and the rest of the Jewish people to the Spartans their brothers, greetings. •In the past, 2 M 5:9 a letter was sent to Onias, the high priest, from Areios, one of your kings, stating that you are indeed our brothers, as the copy subjoined attests. •Onias received the envoy with honour, and accepted the letter, in which a clear reference was made to friendship and alliance. •For our part, though we have no need of these, having the consolation of the holy books in our possession,^c •we venture Rm 15:4 to send to renew our fraternal friendship with you, so that we may not become strangers to you, for a long time has elapsed since you sent us the letter.^d •We may say that constantly on every occasion, at our festivals and on other appointed days, we make a remembrance of you in the sacrifices we offer and in our prayers, as it is right and fitting to remember brothers. •We rejoice in your renown. 12 As for ourselves, we have been involved in many trials, many battles, and the surrounding kings have fought against us. •We were unwilling to trouble you 14 or our other allies and friends during these wars. •But now, having the support of heaven to help us, we have been delivered from our enemies, and it is they 14:22; 15:15 who have been brought low, •and so we have chosen Numenius son of Antiochus, and Antipater son of Jason, and sent them to the Romans to renew our former treaty of friendship and alliance, •and we have ordered them to make their way to you also, to greet you, and deliver to you this letter of ours concerning the renewal of our brotherhood; •we shall be grateful for an answer to it.' 18

The following is the copy of the letter sent to Onias: 19

12:7 'Areios^e king of the Spartans, to Onias the high priest, greetings. •It has been discovered in a document concerning the Spartans and Jews that they are brothers, and of the race of Abraham. •Now that this has come to our knowledge, we shall be obliged if you will send us news of your welfare. •Our own message to you is this: your flocks and your possessions are ours, and ours are yours,^f and we are instructing our envoys to give you a message to this effect.' 20 21

Jonathan in Coele-Syria. Simon in Philistia

Jonathan learned that Demetrius' generals had returned with a larger army than before to make war on him. •For that reason he left Jerusalem and went to face them in the region of Hamath, giving them no respite in which to mount an invasion of his own country.^g •He sent spies into their camp, who told him on their return that the enemy were taking up positions for a night attack on the Jews. •At sunset Jonathan ordered his men to keep watch with their weapons at hand, in readiness to fight at any time during the night, and posted advance guards all round the camp. •When they knew that Jonathan and his men were Jdt 7:5 ready to fight, the enemy became afraid, and with quaking hearts they kindled fires in their camp. •Jonathan and his men, watching the glow of the fires, were 29

30 unaware of their withdrawal until morning, •and although Jonathan pursued them, he failed to overtake them, for they had already crossed the river Eleutherus. •So Jonathan wheeled round on the Arabs called Zabadaeans,^b defeated them and plundered them; •then, breaking camp, he went to Damascus, and travelled through the whole province. •Meanwhile Simon had also set out and had penetrated as far as Askalon and the neighbouring strongholds. He then turned on Joppa and moved quickly to occupy it, •for he had heard of their intention to hand over this strong point to the supporters of Demetrius; he stationed a garrison there to hold it.

Building work in Jerusalem

35 On Jonathan's return he called a meeting of the elders of the people and decided with them to build fortresses in Judaea •and to heighten the walls of Jerusalem and erect a high barrier between the Citadel and the city, to separate it from the city and isolate it, to prevent the occupants from buying or selling. 37 They gathered together to rebuild the city. Part of the wall over the eastern ravine had fallen, and he restored the quarter called Chaphenatha.^c •Meanwhile Simon rebuilt Adida in the Lowlands, fortifying it, and erecting gates with bolts.

Jonathan falls into the hands of his enemies

39 Trypho's ambition was to become king of Asia, assume the crown, and overpower King Antiochus. •He was apprehensive that Jonathan might not allow him to do so, and might even make war on him, so he set out and came to Bethshan, in the hopes of finding some pretext for his arrest and execution.

41 Jonathan went out to intercept him, with forty thousand picked men in battle order, and arrived at Bethshan. •When Trypho saw him there with a large force, he hesitated to make any move against him. •He even received him with honour, commended him to all his friends and presented gifts to him, and told his friends and his troops to obey him as they would himself. •He said to Jonathan, 'Why have you made all these people so tired, when there is no threat of war between us? •Send them back home; pick yourself a few men as your bodyguard, and come with me to Ptolemais. I will hand it over to you, with the other fortresses and the remaining troops and all the officials; then I will take the road for home, for that was my purpose in coming here.' 46 Jonathan trusted him and did as he said; he dismissed his forces, who returned to the land of Judah. •With him he retained three thousand men, of whom he left two thousand in Galilee, while a thousand accompanied him. •But as soon as Jonathan had entered Ptolemais the people of Ptolemais closed the gates, seized him, and put all those who had entered with him to the sword. 49 Trypho sent troops and cavalry into Galilee and the Great Plain to wipe out all Jonathan's supporters. •These, concluding that he had been taken, and had

The 'sacred books' constitute a larger group, namely, all the books recognised as having divine authority. The O.T. Canon is in process of formation: one of the Psalms is quoted as 'scripture', 7:17, and soon afterwards the prologue of Ecclesiasticus speaks of the division into Law, prophets, and 'other books', which was to remain the classification of the Hebr. Bible.

perished with his companions, encouraged one another, marching with closed ranks and ready to give battle, •and when their pursuers saw that they would fight for their lives, they turned back. •They all reached the land of Judah safe and sound, but lamenting Jonathan and his companions, and in a state of alarm; all Israel was plunged into mourning. •All the surrounding pagans were now looking for ways of destroying them: 'They have no leader,' they said 'no ally; we have only to attack them now, and we shall blot out their very memory from mankind'.

V. SIMON, HIGH PRIEST AND ETHNARCH OF THE JEWS

(142-134 B.C.)

Simon takes command

13 Simon heard that Trypho had collected a large army to invade and devastate the land of Judah, •and when he saw how the people were quaking with fear, he went up to Jerusalem, called the people together, •and exhorted them thus, 'You know yourselves how much I and my brothers and my father's family have done for the laws and the sanctuary; you know what wars and hardships we have experienced. •That is why my brothers are all dead, for Israel's sake, and I am the only one left.' •Far be it from me, then, to be sparing of my own life in any time of oppression, for I am not worth more than my brothers. Rather will I avenge my nation and the sanctuary and your wives and children, now that all the pagans have united in their malice to destroy us.' •The spirit of the people rekindled as they listened to his words, •and they shouted back at him, 'You are our leader in place of Judas and your brother Jonathan. •Fight our battles for us, and we will do whatever you tell us.' •So he assembled all the fighting men and hurried on the completion of the walls of Jerusalem, fortifying the whole perimeter. •He sent a considerable force to Joppa under Jonathan, son of Absalom, who drove out the inhabitants and remained there in occupation.

Simon repels Trypho from Judaea

Trypho now left Ptolemais with a large army to invade the land of Judah, taking Jonathan with him under guard. •Simon pitched camp in Adida, facing the plain. •When Trypho learned that Simon had stepped into the place of his brother Jonathan, and that he intended to join battle with him, he sent envoys to him with this message, 'Your brother Jonathan was in debt to the royal exchequer for the offices he held; that is why we are detaining him. •If you send a hundred talents of silver and two of his sons as hostages, to make sure that on his release he does not revolt against us, we will release him.' •Although Simon was aware that the message was a ruse, he sent for the money and the boys for fear of incurring great hostility from the people, •who would have said that Jonathan died because Simon did not send Trypho the money and the boys. •He therefore sent both the boys and the hundred talents, but Trypho broke his word and did not release Jonathan. •Next, Trypho set about the invasion and devastation of the country; he made a detour along the Adora^b road, but Simon and his army confronted him wherever he attempted to go. •The men in the Citadel kept sending messengers to Trypho, urging him to get through to them by way of the wilderness and send them supplies. •Trypho organised his entire cavalry to go, but that night it snowed so heavily that he could not get through for the snow, so he struck camp and moved off into Gilead. •As he approached Baskama^c he killed Jonathan, and he was buried there. •Trypho turned back and regained his own country.

Jonathan is buried in the mausoleum built by Simon at Modein

Simon sent and recovered the bones of his brother Jonathan, and buried

26 him in Modein, the town of his ancestors. •All Israel kept solemn mourning for 27 him, bewailing him for many days. •Over the tomb of his father and brothers
 Simon raised a monument high enough to catch the eye, using dressed stone 28 back and front. •He erected seven pyramids facing each other, for his father 29 and mother and his four brothers, •raising them on plinths^d and surrounding them with tall columns on which he had trophies of arms carved to their everlasting memory and, beside the armour, sculptured ships to be seen by all who 30 sailed the sea. •Such was the monument he constructed at Modein, and it is still there today.

The favours of Demetrius II to Simon

31 Trypho treated the young King Antiochus treacherously and put him to 32 death. •He usurped his throne, assuming the crown of Asia, and brought great 33 havoc on the country. •Simon built up the fortresses of Judaea, surrounding them with high towers, great walls and gates with bolts, and stocked these 34 fortresses with food. •He also sent a delegation to King Demetrius to induce him to grant relief to the province, because all that Trypho did was to 35 confiscate. •King Demetrius replied to his request in a letter framed as follows:
 36 'King Demetrius to Simon, high priest and Friend of Kings, and to the elders 37 and nation of the Jews, greetings. •It has pleased us to accept the golden crown and the palm you have sent us, and we are disposed to make a general peace 38 with you, and to write to the officials to grant you remissions. •Everything that we have decreed concerning you remains in force, and the fortresses you have 39 built are to remain in your hands. •We pardon all offences, unwitting or intentional, committed up to this day, as well as the crown tax which you owe, and any other duty that used to be paid in Jerusalem shall no longer be payable.
 40 If any of you are suitable for enrolment in our bodyguard, let them be enrolled, 41 and let there be peace between us.' •It was in the year one hundred and seventy,^e 42 that the rule of the pagans was lifted from Israel, •and the people began to engross their documents and contracts, 'In the year one of Simon, great high priest, military commissioner, and leader of the Jews.'

The capture of Gezer by Simon

||2 M 10:

43 At that time Simon went to lay siege to Gezer^f and surrounded it with his troops. He constructed a mobile tower, brought it up to the city, opened a 44 breach in one of the bastions and took it. •The men in the mobile tower sprang 45 out into the city, where great confusion ensued. •The citizens, accompanied by their wives and children, mounted the ramparts with their garments torn 46 and loudly implored Simon to make peace with them: •'Treat us' they said 'not 47 as our wickedness deserves, but as your mercy prompts you'. •Simon came to terms with them and stopped the fighting; but he expelled them from the city, purified the houses which contained idols, and then made his entry with songs 48 of praise. •He banished all uncleanness from it, settled men in it who observed^g the Law, and having fortified it, built a residence there for himself.

Simon occupies the Citadel in Jerusalem

49 The men in the Citadel in Jerusalem, prevented as they were from going out into the country and back to buy and sell, were in desperate want of food, and 50 numbers of them were carried off by starvation. •They begged Simon to make peace with them, and he granted this, though he expelled them and purified the 51 Citadel from its pollutions.^h •The Jews made their entry on the twenty-third

A eulogy of Simon

14 In the year one hundred and seventy-two^a King Demetrius assembled his forces and marched into Media to muster help, in order to fight Trypho. When Arsaces king of Persia and Media heard that Demetrius had entered his territory, he sent one of his generals to capture him alive. •The general went and defeated the army of Demetrius, seized him and brought him to Arsaces,^b who put him in prison. •The country was at peace throughout the days of Simon.^c 1 2 3 4

3:3-9	He sought the good of his nation and they were well pleased with his authority, and his magnificence throughout his life. And to crown all his magnificence he took Joppa and made it his harbour, gaining access to the islands of the sea.	5
Ex 34:24	He enlarged the frontiers of his nation, keeping his mastery over the homeland, and resettled a host of the captives.	6 7
Zc 8:12	He conquered Gezer, Bethzur, and the Citadel and cast out the unclean things from it; and no one could resist him. They farmed their land in peace, the land gave its produce, the trees of the plain their fruit.	8
Zc 8:4-5	The elders sat at ease in the streets, all their talk was of their prosperity; the young men wore finery and armour. He kept the towns supplied with provisions and furnished with fortifications; until his fame resounded to the ends of the earth. He established peace in the land, and Israel knew great joy.	9 10 11

No enemy was left in the land to fight them, and the kings in those days were crushed. He gave strength to all the humble folk among his people and cleared away every renegade and wicked man. He strove to observe the Law, and gave new splendour to the Temple, replenishing it with sacred vessels.	12 13 14 15

Renewal of the alliances with Sparta and with Rome

When it became known in Rome and later in Sparta that Jonathan was dead, people were deeply grieved. •But as soon as they heard that his brother Simon had succeeded him as high priest and was master of the country and the cities in it, •they wrote to him on bronze tablets to renew the treaty of friendship and alliance which they had made with his brothers, Judas and Jonathan, •and the document was read out before the assembly in Jerusalem. 16 17 18 19

20 This is the copy of the letter sent by the Spartans:

‘The rulers and the city of Sparta to Simon the high priest and to the elders and priests and the rest of the people of the Jews, greetings. •The ambassadors whom you sent to our people informed us of your glory and honour, and we were delighted by their visit. •We recorded their declarations in the minutes of our public assemblies, as follows, “Numenius son of Antiochus, and Antipater son of Jason, ambassadors of the Jews, came to us to renew their friendship with us. •And it was the people’s pleasure to receive these personages with honours and to deposit a copy of their statements in the public archives, so that the people of Sparta may preserve a record of them; they also made a copy for Simon the high priest.”’

12:16; 15:15

24 After this Simon sent Numenius to Rome as the bearer of a large gold shield weighing a thousand minas, to confirm the alliance with them. 15:15

Official honours decreed for Simon

25 When these events were reported to the people they said, ‘What mark of appreciation shall we give to Simon and his sons? •He stood firm, he and his brothers and his father’s House; he fought off the enemies of Israel and secured its freedom.’ So they recorded an inscription on bronze tablets and set it up on pillars on Mount Zion. •This is a copy of the text:

‘On the eighteenth of Elul in the year one hundred and seventy-two,^d which is the third year of Simon the great high priest, in Asaramel,^e •in the grand assembly of priests and people, leaders of the nation and elders of the country, we were notified as follows:

29 ‘When there was frequent fighting in the country, Simon, son of Mattathias, a scion of the line of Joarib, and his brothers courted danger and withstood the enemies of their nation to safeguard the integrity of their sanctuary and the Law, and so brought their nation great glory. •Jonathan rallied his nation and became their high priest, and was then gathered to his people. •Their enemies planned to invade their country in order to devastate their territory and lay hands on their sanctuary. •Simon then arose to fight for his nation. He spent much of his own wealth on arming the nation’s fighting men and providing their pay; •he fortified the cities of Judaea and Bethzur on the frontier of Judaea, where the enemy arsenal had formerly been, and stationed there a garrison of Jewish soldiers. •He also fortified Joppa on the coast and Gezer on the borders of Azotus, a place formerly inhabited by the enemy; he founded a Jewish settlement there, providing everything they needed to set them on their feet. •The people saw Simon’s faith and the glory he had resolved to win for his nation; they made him their leader and high priest because of all these achievements of his and the justice and faithfulness he had maintained towards his own nation, and because he sought every means to enhance the honour of his people. •In his day and under his guidance they succeeded in rooting out the pagans from their country, including those in the City of David in Jerusalem, who had converted it into a citadel for their own use from which they would sally out to defile the surroundings of the sanctuary and violate its sacred character. •He settled Jewish soldiers in it and fortified it as a protection for the country and city, and heightened the walls of Jerusalem. •In consequence of this, King Demetrius confirmed him in the high-priestly office, •made him one of his Friends and advanced him to high honours; •he had heard that the Romans named the Jews friends, allies and brothers, and that they had given Simon’s ambassadors an honourable reception; •and further, that the Jews and the priests

They ordered that this decree should be inscribed on bronze tablets and set up in the Temple precinct in a prominent place, •and that copies should be deposited in the treasury, and made available to Simon and his sons.

Antiochus VII recognises Simon's titles, and besieges Trypho in Dor

15 Antiochus,^a son of King Demetrius, addressed a letter from the islands of the sea to Simon, priest and ethnarch of the Jews, and to the whole nation; •this was how it read:

'King Antiochus to Simon, high priest and ethnarch, and to the Jewish nation, greetings. •Whereas certain scoundrels have seized control of the kingdom of our fathers, and I propose to claim back the kingdom so that I may re-establish it as it was before, and whereas I have accordingly recruited very large forces and fitted out warships, •intending to make a landing in the country and deal with the men who have ruined it and laid waste many towns in my kingdom, •now therefore I confirm in your favour all the remissions of tribute that my royal predecessors granted you, with any other concessions that they granted to you. •I hereby authorise you to mint your own coinage as legal tender for your own country. •I declare Jerusalem and the sanctuary exempt; all the arms you have manufactured and the fortresses you have built and now occupy are to remain yours. •All debts to the royal treasury, present or future, shall be cancelled from henceforth in perpetuity. •When we have gained possession of our kingdom we will bestow such great honour on yourself, your nation and the Temple as shall exhibit your glory to the whole world.'

In the year one hundred and seventy-four^b Antiochus mounted his expedition against the land of his ancestors, and all the troops rallied to him, so that few remained with Trypho. •Antiochus pursued the usurper, who took refuge in Dor^c on the coast, •knowing that misfortunes were piling up on him and that his troops had deserted him. •Antiochus pitched camp before Dor with a hundred and twenty thousand fighting men and eight thousand cavalry. •He laid siege to the city while the ships closed in from the sea, so that he had the city under attack from land and sea, and allowed no one to go in or come out.

The ambassadors return from Rome to Judaea; the alliance with Rome proclaimed

Meanwhile Numenius and his companions arrived from Rome carrying letters addressed to various kings and states, in the following terms:

'Lucius,^d consul of the Romans, to King Ptolemy, greetings. •The Jewish ambassadors have come to us as our friends and allies to renew our original friendship and alliance in the name of the high priest Simon and the Jewish people. •They have brought a gold shield worth a thousand minas. •Accordingly we have decided to write to various kings and states, warning them not to molest them nor to attack them or their towns or their country, nor ally themselves with any such aggressors. •We have decided to accept the shield from them.

- 21 If then any scoundrels have fled their country to take refuge with you, hand them over to Simon the high priest to be punished by him according to their law.^f
- 22 The consul sent the same letter to King Demetrius, to Attalus, Ariarathes
- 23 and Arsaces, •and to all states, including Sampsaes, the Spartans, Delos, Myndos, Sicyon, Caria, Samos, Pamphylia, Lycia, Halicarnassus, Rhodes,
- 24 Phaselis, Cos, Side, Aradus, Gortyna, Cnidus, Cyprus and Cyrene. •They also drew up a copy for Simon the high priest.

Antiochus VII, besieging Dor, becomes hostile to Simon and sends him a reprimand

- 25 Meanwhile Antiochus, from his positions on the outskirts^e of Dor, was continually throwing detachments against the town. He constructed siege-
- 26 engines, and blockaded Trypho, preventing movement in or out. •Simon sent him two thousand picked men to support him in the fight, with silver and gold
- 27 and plenty of equipment. •But Antiochus would not accept them; instead, he repudiated all his previous agreements with Simon, and completely changed
- 28 his attitude to him. •He sent him Athenobius, one of his friends, for an interview 2:18+ at which he was to say, 'You are now occupying Joppa and Gezer and the
- 29 Citadel in Jerusalem, which are towns in my kingdom. •You have laid waste their territory and done immense harm to the country; and you have seized
- 30 many localities belonging to my kingdom. •Now either surrender the towns you have taken, with the revenue from the localities you have seized beyond
- 31 the limits of Judaea, •or else pay me five hundred talents of silver in compensation for them and for the destruction you have done, and another five hundred
- 32 talents for the revenues of the towns; otherwise we shall come and make war on you.' •When Athenobius, one of the Friends of the King, reached Jerusalem and saw Simon's magnificence, his cabinet of gold and silver plate, and his
- 33 large retinue, he was dumbfounded. He delivered the king's message, •but Simon gave him this answer, 'It is not any foreign land that we have taken, nor any foreign property that we have seized, but the inheritance of our ancestors,
- 34 for some time unjustly wrested from us by our enemies; •now that we have a favourable opportunity, we are merely recovering the inheritance of our
- 35 ancestors. •As for Joppa and Gezer, which you claim, these were towns that did great harm to the people and laid waste the countryside;^g we are prepared to
- 36 give a hundred talents for them.' Without so much as a word in answer, •the envoy went back to the king in a rage and reported on Simon's answer and his magnificence, and on everything he had seen, at which the king fell into a fury.

Cendebaeus, governor of the Littoral, harasses Judaea

- 37 Trypho now boarded a ship and escaped to Orthosia.^h •The king appointed Cendebaeus commander-in-chief of the coastal region and allotted him a force
- 39 of infantry and cavalry. •He ordered him to deploy his men facing Judaea, and instructed him to strengthen Kedron and fortify its gates, and to make war
- 40 on the people, while the king himself went in pursuit of Trypho. •Cendebaeus arrived at Jamnia and began to harry the people forthwith, invading Judaea,
- 41 imprisoning the people and massacring them. •He strengthened Kedron^h and stationed cavalry and troops there to make sorties and patrol the roads of Judaea, as the king had instructed him.

The victory of Simon's sons over Cendebaeus

16 John then went up from Gezer and reported to his father Simon what ¹ Cendebaeus was busy doing. •At this, Simon summoned his two elder ² sons, Judas and John,^a and said to them, 'I and my brothers and my father's House have fought the enemies of Israel from our youth until today; the enterprises we directed have been successful, and many a time have we brought Israel deliverance. •But now I am an old man, while you, mercifully, are old enough; ³ take my place and my brother's, go out and fight for our nation, and may the support of heaven be with you.' •Then he selected from the country twenty ⁴ thousand fighting men and cavalry, and these marched against Cendebaeus, spending the night at Modein. •Making an early start, they marched into the ⁵ plain, to find a large army opposing them, both infantry and cavalry; there was, however, a wadi in between. •John drew up facing them, he and his people, ⁶ and seeing that the men were afraid to cross the wadi he crossed over first himself. When his men saw this, they too crossed after him. •He divided his ⁷ army into two bodies of foot, with the horse in the centre, the enemy's cavalry being very numerous. •The trumpets rang out, and Cendebaeus was routed ⁸ with his army; many of them fell mortally wounded, and the remainder took refuge in the fortress. •It was then that Judas, John's brother, was wounded, ⁹ but John pursued them until Cendebaeus reached Kedron, which he had strengthened. •Their flight took them as far as the towers in the countryside ¹⁰ of Azotus, and John burnt these down. The enemy losses amounted to ten thousand men; John returned safely to Judaea.

Simon's tragic death at Dok. His son John succeeds him

Ptolemy son of Abubus had been appointed military commissioner for the ¹¹ plain of Jericho; he owned much silver and gold, •and was the high priest's ¹² son-in-law. •His ambition was fired; he hoped to make himself master of the ¹³ whole country, and began to plot the ruin of Simon and his sons. •Simon, ¹⁴ who was inspecting the towns up and down the country and attending to their administration, had come down to Jericho with his sons Mattathias and Judas, in the year one hundred and seventy-seven, in the eleventh month, the month of Shebat.^b •The son of Abubus lured them into a small fortress called Dok,^c ¹⁵ which he had built, where he offered them a great banquet, having men concealed about the place. •When Simon and his sons were drunk, Ptolemy leapt to his ¹⁶ feet with his men, and, grasping their weapons, they rushed on Simon in the banquetting hall and killed him with his two sons and some of his servants. So he committed a great act of treachery, and rendered evil for good. ¹⁷ Ptolemy wrote a report of the affair and sent it to the king, in the expectation ¹⁸ of being sent reinforcements and having the cities and the province made over to him. •He sent other men to Gezer to murder John, and sent written orders ¹⁹ to the military commanders to come to him so that he could present them with silver and gold and gifts; •he also sent others to take possession of Jerusalem ²⁰ and the Temple hill. •But someone had been too quick for him and had already ²¹ informed John in Gezer that his father and brothers had perished, adding, 'He is also sending people to kill you too!' •Overcome as he was by the news, John ²² arrested the men who had come to kill him and put them to death, since he already knew their murderous design. •The rest of John's acts, the battles he ²³ fought and the exploits he performed, the city walls he built, and all his other achievements, •are to be found recorded in the Annals of his pontificate from ²⁴ the day he succeeded his father as high priest.^d

THE SECOND BOOK OF MACCABEES

I. LETTERS TO THE JEWS OF EGYPT^a

FIRST LETTER

1 Greetings to their brothers, the Jews in Egypt,^b from their brothers, the Jews in Jerusalem and in the country of Judaea, and prosperity and peace.
2 May God prosper you, remembering his covenant with Abraham, Isaac and 3 Jacob, his faithful servants. •May he give you all a heart to worship him and 4 to do his will with a generous mind and a willing spirit. •May he open your 5 hearts to his Law and his precepts, and give you peace. •May he hear your 6 prayers and be reconciled with you, and not abandon you in time of evil. •Here
7 we are now praying for you. •When Demetrius was king, in the year one hundred and sixty-nine, we Jews wrote to you as follows,^c 'In the desperate affliction that has come on us in these years since Jason and his associates betrayed the 8 Holy Land and the kingdom, •they burned the Temple gateway and shed innocent blood. Then we prayed to the Lord and were heard; we offered a sacrifice with 9 wheat-flour, kindled the lamps and set out the loaves'. •And we now recommend you to keep the feast of Tabernacles of the month of Chislev. In the year one hundred and eighty-eight.^d

SECOND LETTER^e

Address

10 The people of Jerusalem and of Judaea, the senate and Judas,^f to Aristobulus,^g tutor to King Ptolemy and one of the family of the anointed priests, and to the Jews in Egypt, greetings and good health.

Thanksgiving for the punishment of Antiochus

11 Since we have been rescued by God from great dangers, we give him great

1 a. These two letters are invitations to celebrate the feast of Dedication, cf. 1 M 4:59+. The first part of 2 M, up to 10:8, justifies the historical basis for this feast.

b. There had long been Jewish colonies in Egypt (the best known being the one of Elephantine). Other contingents emigrated there during the Greek period; they were profoundly Jewish in spirit but not always entirely orthodox. About the year 170 B.C. the priest Onias IV, son of the Onias III killed at Daphne, 4:33f, founded a temple in Leontopolis, a smaller model of the Temple in Jerusalem. The Jerusalem Jews were anxious to secure community of worship with their Egyptian brothers, which is also the aim of the author of 2 M.

c. Reference to an earlier letter, written by the Egyptian Jews in 168 of the Seleucid era (143 B.C.), about the misfortunes of their compatriots in Judaea subsequent to the apostasy of Jason. When the Temple and its loyal supporters were rededicated to the Lord these misfortunes ceased. Hence the instruction to celebrate this new dedication of the Temple of Jerusalem.

d. 124 B.C. This 'feast of Tabernacles' (cf. also v, 18) of the month Chislev (December) is the feast of Dedication, cf. 1 M 4:59+; it resembles the feast of Tabernacles of the month Tishri (October), cf. 2 M 10:6, hence this alternative name.

e. The second letter is an invitation, v, 18, to celebrate the actual dedication of the Temple, which took place on the 25th of Chislev, 148 Sel. (164 B.C.); the document is therefore on the face of it 40 years older than the first letter. It reports the rumours connected with the death of Antiochus Epiphanes together with traditions relating to Nehemiah and Jeremiah. In short, it is the 'Lesson' for the feast of Dedication. The author, while making it the prelude to his book, offers no guarantee of its historical accuracy.

f. Judas Maccabaeus.

g. An Alexandrian Jew known for his allegorical expositions of the Pentateuch. He dedicated his work to Philometor (181-145).

thanks for championing our cause against the king, •for it was He who drove out 12 those who had taken up arms against the Holy City. •For when their leader 13 reached Persia with his seemingly irresistible army, he was cut to pieces in the temple of Nanaea,^h as the result of a ruse employed by the priests who served that goddess. •On the pretext of making a marriage with Nanaea, Antiochus came 14 to the place with his friends, intending to take its many treasures as a dowry.
 The priests of Nanaea had put these on display, and he entered the sacred 15 precincts with a small retinue. As soon as Antiochus was inside they closed the temple, •opened the secret door in the ceiling and struck down the leader and 16 his party by hurling stones like thunderbolts. They then dismembered them, cut off their heads and flung them to those outside. •Blessed in all things be our 17
 God, who has given the godless their deserts!

The miraculous preservation of the sacred fireⁱ

As we shall be celebrating the purification of the Temple on the twenty-fifth 18 of Chislew, we consider it proper to notify you, so that you may celebrate the feast of Tabernacles and of the fire that appeared when Nehemiah, the builder of the Temple and the altar, offered sacrifice. •For when our ancestors 19 were being deported to Persia the devout priests of the time took some of the fire from the altar and hid it secretly in the hollow of a dry well, where they concealed it in such a way that the place was unknown to anyone. •When some 20 years had elapsed, in God's good time, Nehemiah, commissioned by the king of Persia, sent the descendants of the priests who had hidden the fire to recover it; but they notified us that they had found not fire but a thick liquid. Nehemiah ordered them to draw some out and bring it back. •When the materials for the 21 sacrifice had been set out, Nehemiah ordered the priests to pour the liquid over the wood and what lay on it. •When this had been done, and when in due course 22 the sun, which had previously been clouded over, shone out, a great fire flared up, to the astonishment of all. •While the sacrifice was being burned, the 23 priests and all those present with the priests offered prayer, Jonathan intoning and the rest responding with Nehemiah. •The prayer took this form: 'Lord, 24 Lord God, creator of all things, dreadful, strong, just, merciful, the only king and benefactor, •the only provider, who alone are just, almighty and everlasting, 25
 the deliverer of Israel from every evil, who made our fathers your chosen ones and sanctified them, •accept this sacrifice on behalf of all your people Israel, and 26 protect your heritage and consecrate it. •Bring together those of us who are dispersed, set free those in slavery among the heathen, look favourably on 27 those held in contempt or abhorrence, and let the heathen know that you are our God. •Punish those who oppress us and affront us by their insolence, •and 28 plant your people firmly in your Holy Place, as Moses promised.'

Dt 30:3-5

The priests then chanted hymns. •When the sacrifice was all burned, Nehemiah 30 ordered the remaining liquid to be poured over large stones, •and when this 31 was done a flame flared up, to be absorbed in the corresponding blaze of light 32 from the altar. •When the matter became known and the king of the Persians 33 heard that in the place where the exiled priests had hidden the fire a liquid had appeared, with which Nehemiah and his people had purified the materials of the sacrifice,^j •the king, after verifying the facts, had the place enclosed and 34 pronounced sacred. •The king exchanged many valuable presents with those 35 who enjoyed his favour. •Nehemiah and his people termed this stuff 'nephtar', 36 which means 'purification', but it is generally called 'naphtha'.^k

Jeremiah conceals the tabernacle, ark and altar

2 We find in the archives that the prophet Jeremiah,^a when he had given the 1 deportees the order to take the fire, as we have described, •in giving them 2 the Law warned the deportees never to forget the Lord's precepts, nor to let their thoughts be tempted by the sight of gold and silver statues or the finery

- 3 adorning them. •Among other similar admonitions he urged them not to 4 let the Law depart from their hearts. •The document also described how the prophet, warned by an oracle, gave orders for the tabernacle and the ark to go with him when he set out for the mountain which Moses had climbed to survey 5 God's heritage. •On his arrival Jeremiah found a cave-dwelling, into which he brought the tabernacle, the ark and the altar of incense, afterwards blocking 6 up the entrance. •Some of his companions came up to mark out the way, but 7 were unable to find it. •When Jeremiah learned this, he reproached them: 'The place is to remain unknown' he said 'until God gathers his people together 8 again and shows them his mercy. •Then the Lord will bring these things once more to light, and the glory of the Lord will be seen, and so will the cloud, as it was revealed in the time of Moses and when Solomon prayed that the Holy Place 9 might be gloriously hallowed.' •It was also recorded how Solomon in his wisdom 10 offered the sacrifice of the dedication and completion of the sanctuary. •As Moses had prayed to the Lord and fire had come down from heaven and burned up the sacrifice, so Solomon also prayed, and the fire from above 11 burned up the holocausts. •Moses had said, 'It is because it had not been eaten 12 that the sin-offering was burned up'. •Solomon kept the feast in the same way for eight days.

 Memoirs of Nehemiah,^b how he founded a library and made a collection of the books dealing with the kings and the prophets, the writings of David and the 14 letters of the kings on the subject of offerings.^c •In the same way Judas made a complete collection of the books dispersed in the late war, and these we still 15 have. •If you need any of them, send someone to fetch copies for you.

An invitation to the dedication

- 16 To conclude, since we are now about to celebrate the purification of the 17 Temple, we are writing to you requesting you to observe the same days. •God, who has saved his whole people, conferring on all the heritage, kingdom, our hope is in him, be swift to show us mercy and gather us together from everywhere under heaven to the Holy Place, since he has rescued us from great evils and has purified the Temple.

II. COMPILER'S PREFACE

- 19 The story of Judas Maccabaeus and his brothers, the purification of the great

i. The object of this anecdote is to show that the sanctuary at Jerusalem has lost none of its privileges, since it has even preserved the original sacred fire, cf. Lv 6:5-6.

j. This was what the king was told; the preceding account is different.

k. The story combines recollections of Persian fire worship, v. 34, with some knowledge of the properties of naphtha—crude petroleum—which so impressed the Greek and Roman geographers and naturalists.

2 a. Jeremiah is one of the great figures revered in Judaism, cf. 15:13-15. Lm was attributed to him, as also the 'Letter against the Idols' of Ba 6 (Vulg.), and several apocrypha. One of these apocrypha, now lost, recounted the events described in this passage. This description is not historical: the tabernacle did not exist after the building of Solomon's Temple, the ark disappeared when the Temple was destroyed, and the historical Jeremiah did not regret it, Jr 3:16. The purpose of the narrative, however, is to assert the continuity of orthodox worship, cf. 2 M 1:18+, and to associate this ceremony of dedication with the dedication of the first Temple by Solomon and of the tabernacle by Moses, cf. vv. 8-12.

b. Uncanonical book not mentioned elsewhere.

c. A collection of writings considered not as canonical but as useful to the Jewish community. This project is paralleled by that of Judas Maccabaeus, v. 14.

were, they despoiled the whole country, routed the barbarian hordes, •recovered 22 the sanctuary renowned the whole world over, liberated the city and re-established the laws which were all but abolished, the Lord showing his favour by all his gracious help to them—•all this, already related in five books by Jason of 23 Cyrene, we shall attempt to condense into a single digest. •Considering the spate of 24 figures and the difficulty encountered, because of the mass of material, by those who wish to immerse themselves in historical records, •we have aimed at providing diversion for those who merely want something to read, a saving of labour for 25 those who enjoy committing things to memory, and profit for each and all.
For us who have undertaken the drudgery of this abridgement, this has been no easy task but a matter of sweat and midnight oil, •comparable to the exacting 26 task of a man organising a banquet, whose aim is to satisfy a variety of tastes; 27 nevertheless, for the sake of rendering a general service we remain glad to endure this drudgery, •leaving accuracy of detail to the historian and concentrating our effort on tracing the outlines in this condensed version. •Just as the 28 architect of a new house is responsible for the construction as a whole, while 29 the man undertaking the ceramic painting is responsible for estimating the decorative requirements, so, I think, it is with us. •To make the subject his own, to explore its by-ways, to be meticulous about details, is the business of the 30 original historian, •but the man making the adaptation must be allowed to aim at conciseness of expression and to forgo any exhaustive treatment of his 31 subject.

So now let us begin our narrative, without adding any more to what has been 32 said above; there would be no sense in expanding the preface to the history and curtailing the history itself.

III. THE STORY OF HELIODORUS^a

The arrival of Heliodorus in Jerusalem

5:19 3 While the Holy City was inhabited in all peace and the laws were observed 1 15:12 as perfectly as possible, through the piety of Onias^b the high priest and his hatred of wickedness, •it came about that the kings themselves honoured 2 the Holy Place and enhanced the glory of the Temple with the most splendid offerings, •even to the extent that Seleucus^c king of Asia defrayed from his own 3 revenues all the expenses arising out of the sacrificial services. •But a certain 4 4:23 Simon, of the tribe of Bilgah,^d on being appointed administrator of the Temple, came into conflict with the high priest over the regulation of the city markets.
Unable to get the better of Onias, he went off to Apollonius of Tarsus,^e 5 who at that time was military commissioner for Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, •and 6 made out to him that the Treasury in Jerusalem was groaning with untold wealth, that the amount contributed was incalculable and out of all proportion to expenditure on the sacrifice, but that it could all be brought under the control of the king. •Apollonius met the king and told him about the wealth that had 7 been disclosed to him; whereupon the king selected Heliodorus, his chancellor, and sent him with instructions to effect the removal of the reported wealth.
Heliodorus lost no time in setting out, ostensibly to inspect the towns of Coele- 8
Syria and Phoenicia, but in fact to accomplish the king's purpose. •On his arrival 9 in Jerusalem, and after a hospitable reception from the high priest and the city, he announced what had been disclosed, thus revealing the reason for his presence, and asked if this was indeed the true situation. •The high priest explained that 10
there were funds set aside for widows and orphans, •with some belonging to 11 Hyrchanus son of Tobias, a man occupying a very exalted position, and that the whole sum, in contrast to what the evil Simon had alleged, amounted to four hundred talents of silver and two hundred of gold. •He added also that it was 12 entirely out of the question that an injustice should be done to those who had put their trust in the sanctity of the place and the inviolable majesty of a Temple venerated throughout the entire world.

Consternation in Jerusalem

13 But Heliodorus, because of his instructions from the king, peremptorily insisted 14 that the funds must be confiscated for the royal exchequer. •Fixing a day for the purpose, he went in to draw up an inventory of the funds. There was 15 consternation throughout the city; •the priests in their sacred vestments prostrated themselves before the altar and called upon heaven, the author of the law 16 governing deposits, to preserve these funds intact for the depositors. •The appearance of the high priest was enough to pierce the heart of the beholder, 17 his expression and his altered colour betraying the anguish of his soul; •the man was so overwhelmed by fear and bodily trembling that those who saw him 18 could not possibly mistake the distress he was suffering. •People rushed headlong from the houses intent on making public supplication because of the 19 indignity threatening the Holy Place. •Women thronged the streets swathed in sackcloth below their breasts; girls secluded indoors ran together, some to the 20 doorways, some to the city walls, while others leaned out of the windows, •all 21 stretching out their hands to heaven in entreaty. •It was pitiful to see the people crowding together to prostrate themselves and the foreboding of the high 22 priest in his deep anguish. •While they were calling on the all-powerful Lord to 23 preserve the deposits intact for the depositors, in full security, •Heliodorus carried on with his appointed task.

The punishment of Heliodorus

24 He had already arrived with his bodyguard near the Treasury, when the Sovereign of spirits and of every power caused so great an apparition that all who had dared to accompany Heliodorus were dumbfounded at the power of 25 God, and were reduced to abject terror. •Before their eyes appeared a horse 5:4+ richly caparisoned and carrying a fearsome rider. Rearing violently, it struck at Heliodorus with its forefeet. The rider was seen to be accoutred entirely in gold.
 26 Two other young men of outstanding strength and radiant beauty, magnificently apparelled, appeared to him at the same time, and taking their stand on either 27 side of him flogged him unremittingly, inflicting stroke after stroke. •Suddenly Heliodorus fell to the ground, enveloped in thick darkness. His men came to 28 his rescue and placed him in a litter, •this man who but a moment before had made his way into the Treasury, as we said above, with a great retinue and his whole bodyguard; and as they carried him away, powerless to help himself, they openly acknowledged the sovereign power of God.
 29 While Heliodorus lay prostrate under the divine visitation, speechless and 30 bereft of all hope of deliverance, •the Jews blessed the Lord who had miraculously glorified his own Holy Place. And the Temple, which a little while before had been filled with terror and commotion, now overflowed with joy and gladness 31 at the manifestation of the almighty Lord. •Some of Heliodorus' companions quickly begged Onias to call upon the Most High, to bestow life on a man lying at the very point of death.
 32 The high priest, afraid that the king might suspect the Jews of some foul play concerning Heliodorus, did indeed offer a sacrifice for the man's recovery.
 33 And while the high priest was performing the rite of atonement, the same young men again appeared to Heliodorus wearing the same apparel, and standing beside him said, 'Be very grateful to Onias the high priest, since it is for his sake that the Lord has granted you your life. •As for you, who have been scourged from heaven, you must proclaim to all men the grandeur of God's power.' So saying, they vanished.

The conversion of Heliodorus

Heliodorus offered sacrifice to the Lord and made most solemn vows to the preserver of his life, and then took courteous leave of Onias and marched his forces back to the king. •He openly testified to all men of the works of the supreme God which he had seen with his own eyes. •When the king asked Heliodorus what sort of man would be the right person to send to Jerusalem on a second occasion, he replied, •'If you have some enemy or a rebel against the government, send him there, and you will get him back well flogged, if he survives at all, for there is certainly some peculiar power of God about that place. •He who has his dwelling in heaven watches over the place and defends it, and he strikes down and destroys those who come to harm it.' •This was the outcome of the affair of Heliodorus and the preservation of the Treasury.

IV. HELLENISTIC PROPAGANDA AND PERSECUTION UNDER ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES

The misdeeds of Simon, administrator of the Temple

4 The Simon mentioned above as the informer against the funds and his own country began to slander Onias, insinuating that it was the high priest who had treated Heliodorus so harshly and had himself contrived these startling events.^a •Simon now had the effrontery to name this benefactor of the city, this protector of his compatriots, this zealot for the laws, as an enemy of the public good. •This hostility reached such proportions that murders were actually committed by some of Simon's agents, •and at this point Onias, recognising how mischievous this rivalry was, and aware that Apollonius son of Menestheus, military commissioner for Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, was encouraging Simon in his malice, •went to see the king, not to play the accuser of his fellow citizens, but having the public and private welfare of the entire people at heart. He saw that without some intervention by the king an orderly administration would no longer be possible, nor would Simon be forced to put a stop to his folly.

Jason, the high priest, introduces hellenism

1 M 1:10 When Seleucus had departed this life and Antiochus styled Epiphanes had succeeded to the kingdom, Jason, brother of Onias, ^{1:7} usurped the high-priesthood by underhand methods; •he approached the king with a promise of three hundred and sixty talents of silver, with eighty talents to come from some other source of revenue. ^{4:19} •He further committed himself to guarantee another hundred and fifty if he was allowed to use his authority to establish a gymnasium and a youth centre,^e and to enrol men in Jerusalem as Antiochists.^d •When the king gave his assent, Jason set about introducing his fellow countrymen to the Greek way of life as soon as he was in power. •He suppressed the existing royal concessions to the Jews, granted at the instance of John, father of that Eupolemus who was later to be sent on the embassy of friendship and alliance with the Romans, and, overthrowing the lawful institutions, introduced new usages contrary to the Law. •He went so far as to plant a gymnasium at the very foot of the Citadel,^e and to fit out the noblest of his cadets in the petasos.^f •Godless wretch that he was and no true high priest, Jason set no bounds to his impiety; indeed the hellenising process reached such a pitch •that the priests ceased to show any interest in the services of the altar; scorning the Temple and neglecting the sacrifices, they would hurry to take part in the unlawful exercises on the training

15 ground as soon as the signal was given for the discus. •They disdained all that 16 their ancestors had esteemed, and set the highest value on hellenic honours. •But all this brought its own retribution; the very people whose way of life they envied, whom they sought to resemble in everything, proved to be their enemies and 17 executioners. •It is no small thing to violate the divine laws, as the period that followed will demonstrate.

18 On the occasion of the quinquennial games at Tyre in the presence of the 19 king, •the vile Jason sent some Antiochists from Jerusalem as official spectators;⁴
 these brought with them three hundred silver drachmae for the sacrifice to Hercules. But even those who brought the money thought it should not be spent on the sacrifice—this would not be right—and decided to reserve it for some other 20 item of expenditure; •and so what the sender had intended for the sacrifice to Hercules was in fact applied, at the suggestion of those who brought it, to the construction of triremes.

Antiochus Epiphanes is acclaimed in Jerusalem

21 Apollonius son of Menestheus had been sent to Egypt to attend the enthronement of King Philometor.^a Learning that the king had become hostile to his policies, Antiochus began to think of his own safety; and so he left Joppa 22 and moved to Jerusalem. •He was given a magnificent welcome by Jason and the city, and was received with torches and acclamations; following this, he withdrew his army to Phoenicia.

Menelaus becomes high priest

23 When three years had passed, Jason sent Menelaus, brother of the Simon^{3:4} mentioned above, to convey the money to the king and get his decisions on 24 various essential matters made effective. •But Menelaus, on being presented to the king, flattered him by his own appearance of authority, and so secured the high-priesthood for himself, outbidding Jason by three hundred talents of silver.
 25 He returned with the royal mandate, bringing nothing worthy of the high-priesthood and supported only by the fury of a cruel tyrant and the rage of a 26 savage beast. •Thus Jason, who had supplanted his own brother, was in turn 27 supplanted by a third, and obliged to take refuge in Ammonite territory. •As for Menelaus, he retained his high office, but he defaulted altogether on the sums 28 promised to the king, •although Sostratus, the commandant of the Citadel, whose business it was to collect the revenue, kept demanding payment. The pair 29 of them in consequence were summoned before the king, •Menelaus leaving his brother Lysimachus as deputy high priest, while Sostratus left Crates, the commander of the Cypriots, to act for him.

The murder of Onias

30 While all this was going on, it happened that the people of Tarsus and Mallus revolted, because their towns had been given as a present to Antiochis, the 31 king's concubine. •The king therefore hurried off to settle the affair, leaving 32 Andronicus, one of his dignitaries, to act as his deputy. •Thinking he had found a favourable opportunity, Menelaus abstracted a number of golden vessels from the Temple and presented them to Andronicus, and managed to sell others

4 a. By plotting the discomfiture of Heliodorus.

b. The death of Seleucus, engineered by Heliodorus in 175, defeated the aspirations of Onias. Joshua, brother of Onias, showed his approval of the hellenising policy by changing his name to Jason.

to Tyre and the surrounding cities. •On receiving clear evidence to this effect, 33
Onias retired to a place of sanctuary at Daphne near Antioch and then taxed him 34 with it. •Thereupon Menelaus, taking Andronicus aside, urged him to murder 34 Onias. Andronicus sought out Onias and, after deceitfully reassuring him by 34 offering him his right hand on oath, succeeded in persuading him, in spite of 34 his lingering suspicions, to leave the sanctuary; whereupon he immediately put 35 him to death, in defiance of all justice. •The result was that not only the Jews 35 but many of the other nations were appalled and indignant at this impious murder. 35

On the king's return from the region of Cilicia, the Jews of the capital, and 36 those Greeks who shared their hatred of the crime, appealed to him about the 36 insensate murder of Onias. •Antiochus was profoundly grieved and filled with 37 pity, and he wept for the prudence and great moderation of the dead man. •His 38 indignation was roused, and he immediately stripped Andronicus of the purple, 38 tore his garments off him, and, parading him through the length of the city, rid the 38 world of the assassin on the very spot where he had laid impious hands on Onias, 38
the Lord dealing out to him the punishment he deserved. 38

Lysimachus killed in an insurrection

Now Lysimachus, with the connivance of Menelaus, had committed many 39 sacrilegious thefts in the city, and when the facts had become widely known, 39 the populace rose against Lysimachus, who had already disposed of many 39 pieces of gold plate. •The infuriated mob was becoming menacing, and 40 Lysimachus armed nearly three thousand men and took aggressive action; the 40 troops were led by a certain Auranus, a man advanced in years and no less in 40 folly. •Recognising this act of aggression as the work of Lysimachus, some 41 snatched up stones, others cudgels, while others scooped up handfuls of ashes lying 41 at hand,⁴ and all hurled everything indiscriminately at Lysimachus' men, •to such 42 effect that they wounded many of them, even killing a few, and routed them all; 42
the Temple robber himself they killed outside the treasury. 42

Menelaus buys his acquittal

As a result of this, legal proceedings were taken against Menelaus. •When 43 the king came down to Tyre, the three men sent by the elders maintained the 44 justice of their case in his presence. •Menelaus, seeing he was already defeated, 45 promised a substantial sum to Ptolemy son of Dorymenes if he would 45 influence the king in his favour. •Ptolemy then took the king aside into a 46 colonnade for some fresh air, and persuaded him to change his mind; •the king 47 actually dismissed the charges against Menelaus, the cause of all this evil, while 47
he condemned to death the other poor wretches who, had they pleaded before 47 even Scythians, would have been let off scot-free. •No time was lost in carrying out 48 this unjust punishment on those who had championed the cause of the city, the 48 rural communities and the sacred vessels. •Some Tyrians even were so outraged 49 by the crime that they provided sumptuously for their funeral, •while as a result of 49 the greed of those in high places Menelaus retained his high office, growing 50 in wickedness and establishing himself as the chief enemy of his fellow citizens. 50

Menelaus and Jason

1 M 1:17 5 About this time Antiochus undertook his second expedition^a against Egypt. 1
It then happened that all over the city for nearly forty days there were 2 apparitions of horsemen galloping through the air, in cloth of gold, troops of 2 lancers fully armed, •squadrons of cavalry in order of battle, attacks and charges 3 this way and that, a flourish of shields, a forest of pikes, brandishing of swords, 3 hurling of missiles, a glitter of golden accoutrements and armour of all kinds. 3
So everyone prayed that this manifestation might prove a good omen.^b 4

Then on the strength of a false report that Antiochus was dead, Jason took 5 at least a thousand men and launched an unexpected attack on the city. The 5 troops manning the wall were forced back, and Menelaus, with the city all but captured, took refuge in the Citadel. •Jason, however, was still making a pitiless slaughter of his own fellow citizens, not stopping to consider that success against his own countrymen was the greatest of disasters, but rather picturing himself as setting up trophies won from some enemy, not from his own flesh and blood. Even so, he did not succeed in seizing power; in the end his conspiracy brought him nothing but disgrace, and once again he took refuge in Ammonite territory. His career of wickedness was thus brought to a halt. Kept under restraint by Aretas the Arab despot,^c fleeing from town to town, the quarry of all men, hated as a rebel against the laws, abhorred as the butcher of his country and his countrymen, he drifted to Egypt, •and at last this man, who had exiled so many from their fatherland, himself perished on foreign soil, having travelled to Sparta in the hope that for kinship's sake they might harbour him. •So many carcasses he had thrust out to lie unburied; now he himself had none to mourn him, no funeral rites, no place in the tomb of his ancestors.

Antiochus Epiphanes plunders the Temple

[1 M 1:20-24]

When the king came to hear of what had happened, he concluded that Judaea was in revolt. He therefore marched from Egypt, raging like a wild beast, and began by storming the city. •He then ordered his soldiers to cut down without mercy everyone they encountered, and to butcher all who took refuge in their houses. •It was a massacre of young and old, a slaughter of women and children, a butchery of virgins and infants. •There were eighty thousand victims in the course of those three days, forty thousand dying by violence and as many again being sold into slavery. •Not satisfied with this, he had the audacity to enter the holiest Temple in the entire world, Menelaus, that traitor to the laws and to his country, acting as his guide; •with his unclean hands he seized the sacred vessels; and his impious hands swept away what other kings had presented for the advancement, the glory and the honour of the place. •Antiochus, so much above himself, did not realise that the Lord was angry for the moment at the sins of the inhabitants of the city, hence his unconcern for the Holy Place. •Had it not happened that they were entangled in many sins, Antiochus too, like Heliodorus when King Seleucus sent him to inspect the Treasury, would have been flogged the moment he arrived and checked in his presumption. •However, the Lord had not chosen the people for the sake of the place, but the place for the sake of the people;^d •and so the place itself, having shared the disasters that befell the people, in due course also shared their good fortune; forsaken by the Almighty in the time of his anger, it was reinstated in all its glory, once the great Sovereign had been reconciled.

High commissioners in Judaea

Antiochus went off with eighteen hundred talents he had stolen from the Temple, and hurried back to Antioch; in his arrogance he would have undertaken to make the dry land navigable and the sea passable on foot, so high his ambition soared. •But he left high commissioners to plague the nation: in Jerusalem, Philip, a Phrygian by race,^e and by nature more barbarous than the man who appointed him; •on Mount Gerizim,^f Andronicus;^g and besides these Menelaus, who lorded it over his countrymen worse than all the others. In his rooted hostility to the Jews, •the king also sent the mysarch Apollonius at the head of an army twenty-two thousand strong, with orders to put to death all men in their prime and to sell the women and children. •Arriving in Jerusalem and posing as a man of peace, this man waited until the holy day of the sabbath and then, taking advantage of the Jews as they rested from work, ordered his men to parade fully armed; •all those who came out to watch he put to the sword; then, running through the city with his armed troops, he cut down an immense number of people.

1 M 2:28 Judas called Maccabaeus, however, with about nine others, withdrew into the wilderness, and lived like wild animals in the hills with his companions, eating nothing but wild plants to avoid contracting defilement.^b

1 M 1:45-51 Pagan cults imposed

6 Shortly afterwards, the king sent an old man from Athens to compel the Jews to abandon their ancestral customs and live no longer by the laws of God; •and to profane the Temple in Jerusalem and dedicate it to Olympian Zeus, and that on Mount Gerizim to Zeus, patron of strangers, as the inhabitants had requested.^a •The imposition of this evil was oppressive and altogether intolerable. The Temple was filled with revelling and debauchery by the pagans, who took their pleasure with prostitutes and had intercourse with women in the sacred precincts, introducing other indecencies besides. •The altar of sacrifice was loaded with victims proscribed by the laws as unclean. •A man might neither keep the sabbath nor observe the traditional feasts, nor so much as admit to being a Jew. •People were driven by harsh compulsion to eat the sacrificial entrails at the monthly celebration of the king's birthday; and when a feast of Dionysus occurred they were forced to wear ivy wreaths and walk in the Dionysiac procession. •A decree was issued at the instance of the people of Ptolemais^b for the neighbouring Greek cities, enforcing the same conduct on the Jews there, obliging them to share in the sacrificial meals, •and ordering the execution of those who would not voluntarily conform to Greek customs. So it became clear that disaster was imminent.

1 M 1:60-61 For example, there were two women charged with having circumcised their children. They were paraded publicly round the town, with their babies hung at their breasts, and then hurled over the city wall. •Other people who had assembled in the caves to keep the seventh day without attracting attention were denounced to Philip and all burned together, since their consciences would not allow them to defend themselves, out of respect for the holiness of the day.

5:17-20; 7:6-19, 32-38 Providential interpretation of the persecution

Now I urge anyone who may read this book not to be dismayed at these calamities, but to reflect that such visitations are not intended to destroy our race but to discipline it. •Indeed when evil-doers are not left for long to their own devices but incur swift retribution, it is a sign of great benevolence. •In the case of the other nations the Master waits patiently for them to attain the full measure of their sins before he punishes them, but with us he has decided to deal differently, •rather than have to punish us later, when our sins come to a head. •And so he never entirely withdraws his mercy from us; he may discipline us by some disaster, but he does not desert his own people. •Let this be said simply by way of reminder; we must return to our story without more ado.

The martyrdom of Eleazar

Eleazar, one of the foremost teachers of the Law, a man already advanced in years and of most noble appearance, was being forced to open his mouth wide to swallow pig's flesh. •But he, resolving to die with honour rather than to live disgraced, went to the block of his own accord, •spitting the stuff out, the

- plain duty of anyone with the courage to reject what it is not lawful to taste, even from a natural tenderness for his own life. •Those in charge of the impious banquet, because of their long-standing friendship with him, took him aside and privately urged him to have meat brought of a kind he could properly use, prepared by himself, and only pretend to eat the portions of sacrificial meat as prescribed by the king; •this action would enable him to escape death, by availing himself of an act of kindness prompted by their long friendship. •But having taken a noble decision worthy of his years and the dignity of his great age and the well earned distinction of his grey hairs, worthy too of his impeccable conduct from boyhood, and above all of the holy legislation established by God himself, he publicly stated his convictions, telling them to send him at once to Hades. •Such pretence' he said 'does not square with our time of life; many young people would suppose that Eleazar at the age of ninety had conformed to the foreigners' way of life, •and because I had played this part for the sake of a paltry brief spell of life might themselves be led astray on my account; I should only bring defilement and disgrace on my old age. •Even though for the moment I avoid execution by man, I can never, living or dead, elude the grasp of the Almighty. •Therefore if I am man enough to quit this life here and now I shall prove myself worthy of my old age, •and I shall have left the young a noble example of how to make a good death, eagerly and generously, for the venerable and holy laws.'
- With these words he went straight to the block. •His escorts, so recently well disposed towards him, turned against him after this declaration, which they regarded as sheer madness. •Just before he died under the blows, he groaned aloud and said, 'The Lord whose knowledge is holy sees clearly that, though I might have escaped death, whatever agonies of body I now endure under this bludgeoning, in my soul I am glad to suffer, because of the awe which he inspires in me'.
- This was how he died, leaving his death as an example of nobility and a record of virtue not only for the young but for the great majority of the nation.'

The martyrdom of the seven brothers

↗ Heb 11:35

- 7 There were also seven brothers who were arrested with their mother. The king tried to force them to taste pig's flesh, which the Law forbids, by torturing them with whips and scourges. •One of them, acting as spokesman for the others, said, 'What are you trying to find out from us? We are prepared to die rather than break the laws of our ancestors.' •The king, in a fury, ordered pans and cauldrons to be heated over a fire. •As soon as they were red-hot he commanded that this spokesman of theirs should have his tongue cut out, his head scalped and his extremities cut off, while the other brothers and his mother looked on. •When he had been rendered completely helpless, the king gave orders for him to be brought, still breathing, to the fire and fried alive in a pan. As the smoke from the pan drifted about, his mother and the rest encouraged one another to die nobly, with such words as these, •'The Lord God is watching, and surely he takes pity on us, as in the song in which Moses bore witness against the people to their face, proclaiming that "he will certainly take pity on his servants" '.
- When the first had left the world in this way, they led on the second for their brutal amusement. After stripping the skin from his head, hair and all, they asked him, 'Will you eat, before your body is tortured limb by limb?' •But he retorted in the language of his ancestors, 'Never!' And so he too was put to the torture in his turn. •With his last breath he exclaimed, 'Inhuman fiend, you may discharge 9 us from this present life, but the King of the world will raise us up, since 12:44:14-46 it is for his laws that we die, to live again for ever'.^a

After him, they amused themselves with the third, who on being asked for 10 his tongue promptly thrust it out and boldly held out his hands, •with these 11 honourable words, 'It was heaven that gave me these limbs; for the sake of his 12:38-46+ laws I disdain them; from him I hope to receive them again'. •The king and his attendants were astounded at the young man's courage and his utter indifference to suffering.

When this one was dead they subjected the fourth to the same savage torture. 13
When he neared his end he cried, 'Ours is the better choice, to meet death at 14 men's hands, yet relying on God's promise that we shall be raised up by him;
whereas for you there can be no resurrection, no new life'.

Next they brought forward the fifth and began torturing him. •But he looked 15 at the king and said, 'You have power over men, mortal as you are, and can 16 act as you please. But do not think that our race has been deserted by God.
Only wait, and you shall see in your turn how his mighty power will torment 17 you and your race.'

After him they led out the sixth, and his dying words were these, 'Do not 18
delude yourself: we are suffering like this through our own fault, having sinned
5:17-20; 6:12-16 against our own God; the result has been terrible, •but do not think you yourself 19
Ac 5:39 will go unpunished for attempting to make war on God'.

But the mother was especially admirable and worthy of honourable remem- 20 brance, for she watched the death of seven sons in the course of a single day, and endured it resolutely because of her hopes in the Lord. •Indeed she 21 encouraged each of them in the language of their ancestors; filled with noble conviction, she reinforced her womanly argument with manly courage, saying to them, •'I do not know how you appeared in my womb; it was not I who 22 over the origin of all things, who in his mercy will most surely give^b you back both breath and life, seeing that you now despise your own existence for the sake of his laws.'

Antiochus thought he was being ridiculed, suspecting insult in the tone of 24 her voice;^c and as the youngest was still alive he appealed to him not with mere words but with promises on oath to make him both rich and happy if he would abandon the traditions of his ancestors; he would make him his Friend and entrust him with public office. •The young man took no notice at all, and so the king 25 then appealed to the mother, urging her to advise the youth to save his life.
After a great deal of urging on his part she agreed to try persuasion on her son. 26
Bending over him, she fooled the cruel tyrant with these words, uttered in the 27 language of their ancestors, 'My son, have pity on me; I carried you nine months in my womb and suckled you three years, fed you and reared you to the age you are now (and cherished you). •I implore you, my child, observe heaven and 28 earth, consider all that is in them, and acknowledge that God made them out of what did not exist, and that mankind comes into being in the same way. •Do 29 not fear this executioner, but prove yourself worthy of your brothers, and make death welcome, so that in the day of mercy I may receive you back in your brothers' company.'

She had scarcely ended when the young man said, 'What are you all waiting 30 for? I will not comply with the king's ordinance; I obey the ordinance of the Law given to our ancestors through Moses. •As for you, sir, who have contrived 31 every kind of evil against the Hebrews, you will certainly not escape the hands 5:17-20; 6:12-16 of God. •We are suffering for our own sins; •and if, to punish and discipline us, 32 our living Lord vents his wrath upon us, he will yet be reconciled with his own 33 servants. •But you, unholy wretch, bloodiest villain of all mankind, do not be 34

- carried away with senseless elation, crowing with false confidence as you raise 35 your hand against his servants, •for you have not yet escaped the judgement of 36 God the almighty, the all-seeing. •Our brothers already, after enduring their brief pain, now drink^d of ever-flowing life, by virtue of God's covenant, while you, by God's judgement, will have to pay the just penalty for your arrogance.
 37 I too, like my brothers, surrender my body and life for the laws of my ancestors, calling on God to show his kindness to our nation and that soon, and by trials and 38 afflictions to bring you to confess that he alone is God, •so that with my brothers and myself there may be an end to the wrath of the Almighty, rightly let loose on our whole nation.'
 39 The king fell into a rage and treated this one more cruelly than the others, 40 for he was himself smarting from the young man's scorn. •And so the last brother 41 met his end undefiled and with perfect trust in the Lord. •The mother was the last to die, after her sons.^e 42 But let this be sufficient account of the ritual meals and excessive torments.

V. THE VICTORY OF JUDAISM

THE DEATH OF THE PERSECUTOR AND PURIFICATION OF THE TEMPLE

Judas Maccabaeus and the resistance

- 1 8 Judas Maccabaeus and his companions made their way secretly among the ^{5:27}
 villages, rallying their kinsfolk; they recruited those who remained loyal ^{||1 M 3:10-26}
 2 to Judaism, and assembled about six thousand. •They called upon the Lord to have regard for the people oppressed on all sides, to take pity on the Temple 3 profaned by the godless, •to have mercy on the city falling into ruin and nearly levelled to the ground, to hear the blood of the victims that cried aloud to him, 4 to remember the criminal slaughter of innocent babies and to avenge the 5 blasphemies perpetrated against his name. •As soon as Maccabaeus had an ^{1 M 3:3-9} organised force he at once proved invincible to the pagans, the Lord's anger 6 having turned into compassion. •Making surprise attacks on towns and villages, he fired them; he captured favourable positions and inflicted a number of reverses 7 on the enemy, •generally availing himself of the cover of night for such enterprises. The fame of his valour spread far and wide.

Early exploits

- 8 When Philip^a saw Judas was making steady progress and winning more and more frequent successes, he wrote to Ptolemy, the military commissioner for ^{4:45; 10:12}
 Coele-Syria and Phoenicia, asking for reinforcements in the royal interest. ^{1 M 3:38} 9 Ptolemy appointed Nicanor son of Patroclus, one of the king's First Friends, and sent him without delay at the head of an international force of at least ^{1 M 2:18+; 7:26} twenty thousand men, to exterminate the entire Jewish race. As his associate he 10 appointed Gorgias, a professional general of wide military experience. •Nicanor

7 a. Belief in the resurrection of the body, not clearly expressed in Is 26:19 and Jb 19:26-27 (see notes) is here asserted for the first time, vv. 9,11,14,23,29,36, and in Dn 12:2-3 (again in the context of Antiochus Epiphanes' persecution, Dn 11). Cf. also 2 M 12:38-45+; 14:46. By the power of the creator the martyrs will rise again, v. 23, to a life, v. 14, cf. Jn 5:29, which is eternal, vv. 9,36. At this point we encounter the doctrine of immortality which will be developed, in the atmosphere of Greek thought and without reference to the resurrection of the body, by Ws 3:1-5:16. For Hebr. thought however, which makes no distinction between soul and body, the notion of survival implied a physical resurrection, as we see here. The text does not explicitly teach universal resurrection, and is only concerned with the case of the virtuous, cf. v. 14. Dn 12:2-3 is clearer.

b. 'will give' Vet. Lat.; 'gives' Greek.

c. She had spoken (as in v. 27f) in Aramaic, which the king did not understand.

d. 'now drink' corr.; 'have fallen' Greek.

e. Christian tradition honours these martyrs under the title 'the seven Maccabees'. Churches in Antioch, Rome, Lyons, and Vienna were dedicated to them.

determined to raise the two thousand talents of tribute money owed by the king to the Romans, by the sale of Jewish prisoners of war. •He lost no time in sending the seaboard towns an invitation to come and buy Jewish manpower, promising delivery of ninety head for one talent; but he did not reckon on the judgement from the Almighty that was soon to overtake him.

When news reached Judas of Nicanor's advance, he warned his men of the enemy's approach, •whereupon the fainthearted and those who lacked confidence in the justice of God took to their heels and ran away. •The rest sold all their remaining possessions, at the same time praying the Lord to deliver them from the godless Nicanor, who had sold them even in advance of any encounter—if not for their own sakes, then at least out of consideration for the covenants made with their ancestors, and because they themselves bore his sacred and majestic name.

||1 M 3:46f Maccabaeus marshalled his men, who numbered about six thousand, and exhorted them not to be dismayed at the enemy or discouraged at the vast horde of pagans wickedly advancing against them, but to fight bravely, •keeping before their eyes the criminal outrage inflicted by these men on the Holy Place, and the agony of the humiliated city, not to mention the destruction of their traditional way of life. •‘They may put their trust in their weapons and their exploits,’ he said ‘but our confidence is in almighty God, who is able with a nod to overthrow both those marching on us and the whole world with them.’ •He reminded them of the occasions on which their forbears had received help: that time when, under Sennacherib, a hundred and eighty-five thousand men had perished; •that time in Babylonia when in the battle with the Galatians the Jewish combatants numbered only eight thousand^b and four thousand Macedonians, yet when the Macedonians were hard pressed, the eight thousand wiped out a hundred and twenty thousand because of the help they received from heaven, and won incalculable gains.

Having so roused their courage by these words that they were ready to die for the laws and their country, he then divided his army roughly into four, putting his brothers, Simon, Joseph and Jonathan in command of one division each, and assigning them fifteen hundred men apiece. •Next, he ordered Esdras to read the sacred book aloud, and gave them their watchword ‘Help from God’; then he put himself at the head of the first division and joined battle with Nicanor. •With the Almighty for their ally, they slaughtered over nine thousand of the enemy, wounded and crippled the greater part of Nicanor's army and put them all to flight. •The money of their prospective purchasers fell into their hands. After pursuing them for a good while, they turned back, since time was pressing: •it was the eve of the sabbath, and for that reason they did not prolong their pursuit. •They collected the enemy's weapons and stripped them of their spoils, and then celebrated the sabbath with heartfelt praise and thanks to the Lord, who had reserved that day for distilling on them the first dew of his mercy.^d When the sabbath was over they distributed some of the booty among the victims of the persecution and the widows and orphans; the rest they divided among themselves and their children. •They then joined in public supplication, imploring the merciful Lord to be fully reconciled with his servants.

The defeat of Timotheus and Bacchides^e

They also challenged the forces of Timotheus and Bacchides and wiped out over twenty thousand of them, gaining possession of several high fortresses. They divided their enormous booty into two equal shares, one for themselves, the other for the victims of the persecution and the orphans and widows, not forgetting the aged. •They carefully collected the enemy's weapons and stored them in convenient places. The rest of the spoils they took to Jerusalem. •They killed the officer commanding Timotheus' bodyguard, an extremely wicked man who had done great harm to the Jews. •In the course of their victory celebrations in Jerusalem they burned the men that had fired the holy gates, who with Callisthenes had taken refuge in one small house; so these received a fitting reward for the sacrilege. 1:8

The flight and testimony of Nicanor

- 34 The triple-dyed scoundrel Nicanor, who had brought the thousand merchants 1 M 7:26
35 to buy the Jews, •finding himself humbled, with the Lord's help, by men he had 8:23-24 himself reckoned as of very little account, stripped off his robes of state, and made his way across country unaccompanied, like a runaway slave, reaching Antioch by a singular stroke of fortune, considering that his army was destroyed.
36 Thus the man who had promised the Romans to make good their tribute money by selling the prisoners from Jerusalem testified that the Jews had a defender, and that on this account the Jews were invulnerable, because they followed the laws which that defender had ordained.

The last days of Antiochus Epiphanes^a

1:11-17
|| 1 M 6:1-16

- 1 9 About that time, as it happened, Antiochus had retreated in disorder from 2 the country of Persia. •He had entered the city called Persepolis, planning to rob the temple and occupy the city; but the population at once sprang to arms to defend themselves, with the result that Antiochus was routed by the inhabitants
3 and forced to beat a humiliating retreat. •On his arrival in Ecbatana he learned
4 what had happened to Nicanor and to Timotheus' forces. •Flying into a passion, he resolved to make the Jews pay for the disgrace inflicted by those who had routed him, and with this in mind he ordered his charioteer to drive without stopping and get the journey over. But the condemnation of heaven travelled with him. He had said in his pride, 'When I reach Jerusalem I will turn it into 5 a mass grave for the Jews'. •But the all-seeing Lord, the God of Israel, struck him with an incurable and unseen complaint. The words were hardly out of his mouth when he was seized with an incurable pain in his bowels and with 6 excruciating internal torture; •and this was only right, since he had inflicted many
7 barbaric tortures on the bowels of others. •Even so he in no way diminished his arrogance; still bursting with pride, breathing fire in his wrath against the Jews, he was in the act of ordering an even keener pace when he suddenly hurtled from his chariot, and the violence of his headlong fall racked every bone
8 in his body. •He who only a little while before had thought in his superhuman boastfulness to command the waves of the sea, he who imagined he could weigh mountain peaks in a balance, found himself flat on the ground, borne in a
9 litter, a visible demonstration to all of the power of God, •in that the very eyes of this godless man teemed with worms and his flesh rotted away while he lingered on in agonising pain, and the stench of his decay sickened the whole
10 army. •A short while beforehand he had thought to grasp the stars of heaven; now no one could bring himself to act as his bearer, for the stench was unbearable.
11 In consequence he began there and then, in his shattered state, to shed his excessive pride and to come to his senses under the divine lash, for he was tormented with pain all the time. •His stench became unendurable even to himself, and he exclaimed, 'It is right to submit to God; no mortal should aspire to 12 equality with the godhead'. •The wretch began to pray to the Master, who would

d. Lit. 'reserved that day for the first drops of the dew of his mercy' following Lat.

e. The author, summarising the Books of Jason cf. 2:23, has put this fragment here to collate the punishments overtaking the persecutors. The interrupted narrative is resumed in v. 34.

9 a. After the defeats of Nicanor, Timotheus and Bacchides, and the temporary neutralisation of Nicanor, the summarist next describes the death of Antiochus. He thus demonstrates his thesis that persecutors are punished on earth. The various punishments are shown in crescendo, culminating in the tortures of the dying Antiochus, which counterbalance those he had inflicted on the seven brothers, ch. 7.

never take pity on him now, declaring that the Holy City, towards which he had been speeding to raze it to the ground and turn it into a mass grave, should be declared free; as for the Jews, whom he had considered as not even worth burying, so much carrion to be thrown out with their children for birds and beasts to prey on, he would make them all the equals of the citizens of Athens; the holy Temple which he had once plundered he would now adorn with the finest offerings; he would restore all the sacred vessels many times over; he would defray from his personal revenue the expenses incurred for the sacrifices; and to crown it all he would himself turn Jew and visit every place where men lived, proclaiming the power of God.

Antiochus writes to the Jews

Finding no respite at all from his suffering, because God had punished him with his righteous sentence, he abandoned all hope for himself and wrote the Jews the letter transcribed below, which takes the form of an appeal in these terms:^b

‘To the excellent Jews his citizens, Antiochus, king and commander-in-chief, sends hearty greetings, wishing them all health and prosperity. If you and your children are well and your affairs are as you would wish, then I am profoundly thankful. For my part, though prostrate with sickness, I cherish tender memories of you. On my return from the country of Persia I fell seriously ill, and thought it necessary to make provision for the common security of all. Not that I despair of my condition, for I have great hope of shaking off the malady, but considering how my father, whenever he was making an expedition into the uplands, would designate his successor, so that in case of any unforeseen event or disquieting rumour the people of the provinces might know to whom he had left the conduct of affairs and thus remain undisturbed: furthermore, being well aware that the princes on our frontiers and neighbours of our realm are watching for opportunities and waiting to see what will happen, I have designated as king my son Antiochus, whom I have more than once entrusted and commended to most of you when I was setting out for the upland satrapies; a transcript of my letter to him is appended hereto. I therefore urge and require you to remember past favours both public and personal, and to persist, each one of you, in your existing goodwill towards myself and my son. I am confident that he will pursue my own policy with benevolence and humanity, and will prove accommodating to your interests.’

And so this murderer and blasphemer, having endured the same terrible suffering as he had made others endure, met his pitiable fate, and ended his life among the remote and inhospitable mountains. His comrade Philip brought back his body, and then, fearing Antiochus’s son, withdrew to Egypt, to the court of Ptolemy Philometor.

11 M 4:36-61 The purification of the Temple^a

10 Maccabaeus and his companions, under the Lord’s guidance, restored the Temple and the city, and pulled down the altars erected by the foreigners in the market place, as well as the sacred enclosures. They purified the sanctuary and built another altar; then striking fire from flints and using this fire, they offered the first sacrifice for two years, burning incense, lighting the lamps and setting out the loaves. When they had done this they threw themselves flat on the ground, and implored the Lord never again to let them fall into such adversity, but if they should ever sin, to correct them with moderation and not to deliver them over to blasphemous and barbarous nations. This day of the purification of the Temple fell on the very day on which the Temple had been profaned by the foreigners, the twenty-fifth of the same month, Chislew. They kept eight festal days with rejoicing, in the manner of the feast of Tabernacles, remembering how, not long before at the time of the feast of Tabernacles, they

- 7 had been living in the mountains and caverns like wild beasts. •Then, carrying branches, leafy boughs and palms, they offered hymns to him who had brought 8 the cleansing of his own Holy Place to a happy outcome. •They also decreed by public edict, ratified by vote, that the whole Jewish nation should celebrate those same days every year.^b

VI. THE STRUGGLE OF JUDAS AGAINST THE NEIGHBOURING PEOPLES, AND AGAINST LYSIAS, EUPATOR'S HIGH COMMISSIONER

The disgrace of Ptolemy Macron

- 9 Such were the circumstances attending the death of Antiochus styled
 10 Epiphanes. •Our task now is to unfold the history of Antiochus Eupator, son 1 M 6:17
 11 of that godless man, and relate briefly the evil effects of the wars.^c •On coming to the throne, this prince put at the head of affairs a certain Lysias, high 12 commissioner for Coele-Syria and Phoenicia. •Now Ptolemy, Macron as he was 4:45; 8:8 styled, the first governor to treat the Jews with any justice, had done his best to govern them peacefully to make up for the wrongs inflicted on them in the past.
 13 Denounced to Eupator by the Friends of the King, he heard himself called traitor at every turn for having abandoned Cyprus, which had been entrusted to him by Philometor,^d and for going over to Antiochus Epiphanes; having shed no lustre on his illustrious office, he committed suicide by poisoning himself.

Gorgias and the Idumaeen fortresses

- 14 Gorgias now became military commissioner for that region; he maintained
 15 a force of mercenaries and a continual state of war with the Jews. •At the same ||1 M 5:1-8 time the Idumaeans, who controlled important fortresses, were exerting pressure on the Jews, welcoming outlaws from Jerusalem and endeavouring to maintain 16 a state of war. •Maccabaeus and his men, after making public supplication to 8:23-24
 God, entreating him to support them, hurled themselves against the Idumaeen 17 fortresses. •Vigorously pressing home their attack, they seized possession of these vantage points, beating off all who fought on the ramparts; they slaughtered 18 all who fell into their hands, accounting for not less than twenty thousand. •Nine thousand at least took refuge in two exceptionally strong castles with everything 19 they needed to withstand a siege, •whereupon Maccabaeus left Simon and Joseph, with Zacchaeus and his forces, in sufficient numbers to besiege them, and himself 20 went off to other places demanding his attention. •But Simon's men were greedy for money and allowed themselves to be bribed by some of the men in the castles; accepting seventy thousand drachmae, they let a number of them escape.
 21 When Maccabaeus was told what had happened, he summoned the people's commanders and accused the offenders of having sold their brothers for money 22 by setting free men who were at war with them. •Having executed them as 23 traitors, he at once proceeded to capture both castles. •Successful in all that he undertook by force of arms, in these two fortresses he slaughtered more than twenty thousand men.

Judas defeats Timotheus and captures Gezer

b. The letter is, in these circumstances, surprisingly mild; it may originally have been a document written on another occasion and addressed to other people besides the Jews of Jerusalem.

10 a. This incident (December, 164) took place before the death of Antiochus (Spring, 163).

b. For this feast, the Hanuc'kah, see 1 M 4:59+. This is the end of the first section of the book, of which one of the principal aims is to make this feast obligatory for all Jews, cf. the two preliminary letters, 2 M 1-2. The second section ends similarly, with an invitation to celebrate the day of Nicanor, 15:36.

an enormous force of mercenaries, mustering cavalry from Asia in considerable numbers, and appeared in Judaea, expecting to conquer it by force of arms. At his approach Maccabaeus and his men made their supplications to God, 25 sprinkling earth on their heads and putting sackcloth round their waists. •Pros- 26 trating themselves on the terrace before the altar, they begged him to support them and to show himself the enemy of their enemies, the adversary of their adversaries, as the Law clearly states.

After these prayers they armed themselves and advanced a fair distance 27 from the city, halting when they were close to the enemy. •As the first light of 28 dawn began to spread, the two sides joined battle, the one having as their pledge of success and victory not only their own valour but their recourse to the Lord, 29 the other making their own ardour their mainstay in the fight. •When the battle 30 was at its height the enemy saw five magnificent men appear from heaven on horses with golden bridles and put themselves at the head of the Jews; •sur- 31 rounding Maccabaeus and screening him with their own armour, they kept him unscathed, while they rained arrows and thunderbolts on the enemy until, 32 blinded and confused, they scattered^e in complete disorder. •Twenty thousand five 33 hundred infantry and six hundred cavalry were slaughtered. •Timotheus himself 34 fled to a strongly guarded citadel called Gezer,^f where Chaereas was in command. For four days^g Maccabaeus and his men eagerly besieged the fortress, •while 35 the defenders, confident in the security of the place, hurled fearful blasphemies and godless insults at them. •At daybreak on the fifth day, twenty young men 36 of Maccabaeus' forces, fired with indignation at the blasphemies, bravely stormed the wall, and cut down with brutal fury everyone they encountered. Others, in a similar scaling operation, took the defenders in the rear, and set 37 fire to the towers, lighting pyres on which they burned the blasphemers alive. Others broke down the gates and let in the rest of the army, and were the first 38 to occupy the town. •Timotheus had hidden in a cistern, but they killed him, 39 with his brother Chaereas, and Apollophanes. •When all this was over, they 40 blessed with hymns and thanksgiving the Lord, who had shown such great kindness to Israel and given them the victory.

11 M 4:26-35 The first campaign of Lysias

1 Almost immediately afterwards, Lysias, the king's tutor and cousin and 1 his vizir, much disturbed at the turn of events, •mustered about eighty 2 thousand foot soldiers and his entire cavalry and advanced against the Jews, intending to make the Holy City a place for Greeks to live in, •to levy a tax on 3 the Temple as was done with other national shrines, and to put the office of high priest up for sale every year; •he took no account at all of the power of 4 God, being sublimely confident in his tens of thousands of infantrymen, his thousands of cavalry, and his eighty elephants.

Invading Judaea, he approached Bethzur, a fortified position about twenty 5 miles^a from Jerusalem, and began to subject it to strong pressure. •When 6 Maccabaeus and his men learned that Lysias was besieging the fortresses, they and the populace with them begged the Lord with lamentation and tears to 7 send a good angel to save Israel. •Maccabaeus himself was the first to take up his weapons, and he urged the rest to risk their lives with him in support of their 8 brothers; so they sallied out resolutely, as one man. •They were still near 9 Jerusalem when a rider attired in white appeared at their head brandishing golden accoutrements. •With one accord they all blessed the God of mercy, and 10 found themselves filled with such courage that they were ready to lay low not men only but the fiercest beasts and walls of iron. •They advanced in battle order 11 with the aid of their celestial ally, the Lord having had mercy on them. •Charging 12 like lions on the enemy, they laid low eleven thousand of the infantry and sixteen hundred horsemen, and routed all the rest. •Of those, the majority got away, wounded and weaponless. Lysias himself escaped only by ignominious flight.

Lysias makes peace with the Jews. Four letters concerning the treaty

|| 1 M 6:57-61

13 Now Lysias was not lacking in intelligence, and as he reflected on the reverse he had suffered he realised that the Hebrews were invincible because the mighty
 14 God fought for them. He therefore sent to them •suggesting a reconciliation on just terms all round, and promising to induce even the king to become their 15 friend. •Maccabaeus, thinking only of the common good, agreed to all that Lysias proposed, and whatever Maccabaeus submitted to Lysias in writing concerning the Jews was granted by the king.

16 Here is the text of the letter Lysias wrote to the Jews, 'From Lysias to the 17 Jewish people, greetings. •John and Absalom, your envoys, have delivered to me the communication transcribed below, requesting me to approve its provisions.
 18 Anything requiring the king's attention I have put before him; anything coming 19 within my own competence I have granted. •Provided you maintain your good will towards the administration I will do my best in the future to promote 20 your advantage. •As for the details, I have given orders for your envoys and my 21 own officials to discuss these with you. •May you prosper. The year one hundred and forty-eight, the twenty-fourth day of the month of Dioscoros.'^b

22 The king's letter was as follows,^c 'King Antiochus to his brother Lysias, 23 greetings. •Now that our father has taken his place among the gods^d our will is that the subjects of the realm be left undisturbed to attend to their own affairs.
 24 We understand that the Jews do not approve our father's policy, the adoption of Greek customs, but prefer their own way of life and ask to be allowed to 25 observe their own laws. •Accordingly, since we intend this people to be free from vexation like any other, our ruling is that the Temple be restored to them and 26 that they conduct their affairs according to the customs of their ancestors. •It will therefore be your concern to send them a mission of friendship, so that on learning our policy they may have confidence and proceed happily about their own affairs.'

27 The king's letter to the Jewish nation was in these terms, 'King Antiochus 28 to the Jewish senate and the rest of the Jews, greetings. •If you are well, that is 29 as we would wish; we ourselves are in good health. •Menelaus informs us that 30 you wish to return home and attend to your own affairs. •Accordingly, all those who return before the thirtieth day of Xanthicus may rest assured that they have 31 nothing to fear. •The Jews may make use of their own kind of food and their own laws as formerly, and none of them is to be molested in any way for any 32 unwitting offences. •I am in fact sending Menelaus to set your minds at rest.
 33 Farewell. In the hundred and forty-eighth year, the fifteenth of Xanthicus.'^e

34 The Romans also sent the Jews a letter, which read as follows,^f 'Quintus Memmius, Titus Manius, ambassadors of the Romans, to the people of the Jews, 35 greetings. •Whatever Lysias, the king's cousin, has granted you we also approve.
 36 As for the matters he decided to refer to the king, consider them carefully and send someone without delay, if we are to interpret them to your advantage,
 37 because we are leaving for Antioch. •Lose no time, therefore, in sending us
 38 those who can tell us what your intentions are. •Farewell. In the hundred and forty-eighth year, the fifteenth of Xanthicus.'

f. The letter from the Romans should have been placed immediately after that of Lysias to which it refers; nor should it bear the same date as the letter from Antiochus. Negotiations between Jews and Romans begin a little earlier in 2 M than in 1 M 8:17-32 (under Demetrius I).

Incidents at Joppa and Jamnia

12 After these agreements had been concluded Lysias returned to the king 1 while the Jews went back to their farming. •Among the local military 2 commissioners, Timotheus and Apollonius son of Gennaëus, as also Hieronymus and Demophon, and Nicanor the Cypriarch^a as well, would not allow the Jews to live in peace and quiet.

^bThe people of Joppa went so far as to perpetrate the following outrage: they 3 invited the Jews living among them to go aboard some boats they had lying ready, taking their wives and children. There was no hint of any intention to harm them; •there had been a public vote by the citizens, and the Jews accepted, 4 as well they might, being peaceable people with no reason to suspect anything. But once out in the open sea they were all sent to the bottom, a company of at least two hundred.

When Judas heard of the cruel fate of his countrymen, he issued his orders 5 to his men •and after invoking God, the just judge, he attacked his brothers' 6 murderers. Under cover of dark he set fire to the harbour, burned the boats and put to the sword everyone who had taken refuge there. •As the town gates were 7 closed, he withdrew, intending to come back and wipe out the whole community of Joppa. •But hearing that the people of Jamnia were planning to treat their 8 resident Jews in the same way, •he made a night attack on the Jamnites and 9 fired the harbour with its fleet; the glow of the flames was seen as far off as Jerusalem, thirty miles away.

When they had left the town over a mile behind them in their advance on 10 Timotheus, Judas was attacked by an Arab force of at least five thousand foot soldiers, with five hundred cavalry. •A fierce engagement followed, and with 11 God's help Judas' men won the day; the defeated nomads begged Judas to offer them the right hand of friendship, and promised to surrender their herds and make themselves generally useful to him. •Realising that they might indeed 12 prove valuable in many ways, Judas consented to make peace with them and after an exchange of pledges the Arabs withdrew to their tents.

Judas also attacked a certain fortified town, enclosed by ramparts and 13 inhabited by a medley of races; its name was Caspin. •Confident in the strength 14 of their walls and their stock of provisions, the besieged adopted an insolent attitude to Judas and his men, reinforcing their insults with blasphemies and profanity. •But Judas and his men invoked the great Sovereign of the world 15 who without battering-ram or siege-engine overthrew Jericho in the days of Joshua; they then made a furious assault on the wall. •Capturing the city by the 16 will of God, they made such indescribable slaughter that the nearby lake, two furlongs across, seemed filled to overflowing with blood.

||1 M 5:37-44 The battle of Carnaim

Ninety-five miles further on from there, they reached the Charax, in the 17 country of Jews known as Tubians. •They did not find Timotheus himself in 18 that neighbourhood; he had already left the district, having achieved nothing apart from leaving a very strong garrison at one point. •Dositheus and Sosipater, 19 two of the Maccabaeen generals, marched out and destroyed the force Timotheus had left behind in the fortress, amounting to more than ten thousand men. Maccabaeus himself divided his army into cohorts to which he assigned com- 20 manders, and then hurried in pursuit of Timotheus, whose troops numbered one hundred and twenty thousand infantry and two thousand five hundred cavalry. •Timotheus's first move on learning of Judas' advance was to send 21 away the women and children and the rest of the baggage train to the place called Carnaim, since it was an impregnable position, difficult of access owing to the narrowness of all the approaches. •When the first of Judas' cohorts came into 22 sight, the enemy were seized with fright; panic-stricken at this manifestation of the All-seeing, they fled headlong in all directions, so that they were often wounded by their own men, running on the points of one another's swords.

 23 Judas pursued them with a will, cutting the sinners to pieces and killing something 24 like thirty thousand men. •Timotheus himself, having fallen into the hands of Dositheus and Sosipater and their men, very craftily pleaded with them to let him go with his life, on the grounds that he had the parents of most and the brothers of some in his power, and that these could otherwise expect short shrift.
 25 When at long last he convinced them that he would honour his promise and return these people safe and sound, they let him go for the sake of saving their brothers.
 26 Reaching Carnaim and the Atargateion,^d Judas slaughtered twenty-five thousand men.

The return by way of Ephron and Scythopolis

27 After the rout of these enemies he led his army against Ephron, a fortified town, where Lysias was living. Stalwart young men drawn up outside the walls offered vigorous resistance, while inside there were quantities of war-engines 28 and missiles in reserve. •But the Jews, invoking the Sovereign who by his power shatters enemies' defences, gained control of the city, and cut down nearly 29 twenty-five thousand of the people inside. •Moving off from there, they pressed 30 on to Scythopolis,^e seventy-five miles from Jerusalem. •But as the Jews who had settled there assured Judas that the people of Scythopolis had always treated them well and had been particularly kind to them when times had been at their 31 worst, •he and his men thanked them and urged them to extend the same friendship to his race in the future.

They reached Jerusalem shortly before the feast of Weeks.

The campaign against Gorgias

32 After Pentecost, as it is called, they marched against Gorgias, the military Ex 23:14+
 33 commissioner for Idumaea. •He came out at the head of three thousand infantry
 34 and four hundred cavalry; •in the course of the ensuing battle a few Jews lost their lives.

35 A man called Dositheus, one of the Tubians,^f who was on horseback and a powerful man, grasped Gorgias, taking him by the cloak, and was forcibly dragging him along, intending to take the accursed man alive, but one of the Thracian cavalry, hurling himself on Dositheus, slashed his shoulder, and 36 Gorgias escaped to Marisa. •Meanwhile since Esdrias and his men had been fighting for a long time and were exhausted, Judas called on the Lord to show them he was their ally and leader in battle.

37 Then, chanting the battle cry and other hymns at the top of his voice in the language of his ancestors, he routed Gorgias' troops.

The sacrifice for the fallen^g

38 Judas then rallied his army and moved on to the town of Adullam, and since 7:12 the seventh day of the week had arrived they purified themselves according to 39 custom and kept the sabbath in that place. •The next day they came to Judas (since the necessity was by now urgent)^h to have the bodies of the fallen taken up and laid to rest among their relatives in their ancestral tombs. •But when they 40 found on each of the dead men, under their tunics, amulets of the idols taken Dt 7:25 from Jamnia, which the Law prohibits to Jews, it became clear to everyone that this was why these men had lost their lives. •All then blessed the ways of the 41

Lord, the just judge who brings hidden things to light, •and gave themselves to 42 prayer, begging that the sin committed might be fully blotted out. Next, the valiant Judas urged the people to keep themselves free from all sin, having seen with their own eyes the effects of the sin of those who had fallen; •after 43 this he took a collection from them individually, amounting to nearly two thousand drachmae, and sent it to Jerusalem to have a sacrifice for sin offered, an altogether fine and noble action, in which he took full account of the resur-7:9+ rection. •For if he had not expected the fallen to rise again it would have been 44 superfluous and foolish to pray for the dead, •whereas if he had in view the 45 splendid recompense reserved for those who make a pious end, the thought was holy and devout. This was why he had this atonement sacrifice offered for the dead, so that they might be released from their sin.

Antiochus V and Lysias. The fate of Menelaus

13 In the year one hundred and forty-nine^a Judas and his men discovered 1 that Antiochus Eupator was advancing in force against Judaea, •and 2 1 M 6:30 with him Lysias his tutor and vizir; he had moreover a Greek force of one hundred and ten thousand infantry, five thousand three hundred cavalry, twenty-two elephants, and three hundred chariots fitted with scythes.

Menelaus sided with them, and with great duplicity kept encouraging 3 Antiochus, not for the welfare of his own country but in the hope of being 1 Tm 6:15 confirmed in office. •But the King of kings stirred up the anger of Antiochus 4
Rv 17:14; against the guilty wretch, and when Lysias made it clear to the king that 19:16 Menelaus was the cause of all the troubles, Antiochus gave orders for him to be taken to Beroea and there put to death by the local method of execution. •In that 5 place there is a tower fifty cubits high, filled with ash, with a circular construction sloping steeply down from all sides towards the ashes. •If anyone is convicted of 6 sacrilegious theft or notoriously guilty of certain other crimes, they take him up^b to the top and thrust him down to perish. •In such a manner was the renegade 7 fated to die; Menelaus had not even the privilege of burial. •Deserved justice, 8 this; since he had committed many sins against the altar whose fire, whose very ashes were holy, it was in ashes that he met his death.

The prayers and success of the Jews near Modein

The king, then, was advancing, his mind filled with barbarous designs, to 9 give the Jews a demonstration of far worse things than anything that had happened under his father. •When Judas heard of this he ordered the people to 10 call day and night upon the Lord, now if ever, for this once at least, to come to the help •of those who were in peril of being deprived of the Law, their 11 1 M 4:36+ fatherland and the holy Temple, and not to allow the people, just when they were beginning to breathe again, to fall into the power of the blaspheming pagans. •When they had all, as one man, obeyed his instructions and had made 12 their petitions to the merciful Lord, weeping, fasting and prostrating themselves for three days continuously, Judas spoke words of encouragement and told them to keep close to him. •After separate consultation with the elders he resolved not 13 to wait for the king's army to invade Judaea and take possession of the city, but to march out and bring the whole matter to a decision with the help of God.

Leaving the outcome to the creator of the world, and exhorting his soldiers 14 to fight bravely to the death for the laws, the Temple, the city, their country and their way of life, he halted his army near Modein. •Leaving his men with 15 8:23 the watchword 'Victory from God', he made a night attack on the king's pavilion with a picked band of the bravest young men. Inside the camp he destroyed about two thousand, and his men cut down the largest of the elephants with its driver; •in the end they filled the whole camp with terror and confusion before withdrawing in triumph. •Dawn was just breaking as this was brought to an end, through the protection of the Lord watching over Judas. 1 M 6:43

Antiochus in treaty with the Jews

11 M 6:48-63

18 The king, having had a taste of Jewish daring, now tried to attack their positions strategically. •He advanced on Bethzur, a strong fortress of the Jews, but was repulsed, and so checked and worsted.

20 Judas sent in to the garrison what they needed, •but Rhodocus, of the Jewish army, supplied the enemy with secret information; the man was identified, arrested, and dealt with. •For the second time the king parleyed with the garrison of Bethzur; he offered and accepted pledges of amity, retired, then attacked Judas and his men, but came off worst. •He was then told that Philip, left in charge of affairs at Antioch, had made a desperate move. He was stunned by this, opened negotiations with the Jews, capitulated, and swore to abide by all reasonable conditions. He reached an agreement, offered sacrifice, honoured the Temple, and made generous gifts to the Holy Place.

24 He received Maccabaeus kindly, then left Hegemonides behind as military commissioner from Ptolemais to the territory of the Gerrenians, •and went to Ptolemais. The inhabitants of the place disapproved of the treaty; they voiced their resentment and wanted to annul its articles.^c •Lysias mounted the rostrum and made a persuasive defence of the articles which convinced and calmed them, and so won their good will. He then withdrew to Antioch.

So much for the episode of the king's offensive and retreat.

VII. THE CONFLICT WITH NICANOR, GENERAL OF DEMETRIUS I. THE DAY OF NICANOR

Alcimus the high priest intervenes

11 M 7:1-21

14 Three years after this, Judas and his men learned that Demetrius son of Seleucus had landed at the port of Tripolis with a strong army and a fleet, •and that he had occupied the country and had killed Antiochus and his tutor Lysias. •A certain Alcimus, a former high priest, had wilfully incurred defilement at the time of the insurrection; realising that whichever way he turned there was no security for him, nor any further access to the holy altar, •he went to King Demetrius in about the year one hundred and fifty-one^a and presented him with a golden crown and a palm, together with the traditional olive branches from the Temple; there, for that day, he let the matter rest. 1 M 10:29+

5 Presently he found an opportunity that suited his perverse purpose. When Demetrius called him into his council and questioned him about the dispositions and intentions of the Jews, he replied, •'Those Jews called Hasidaeans, who are led by Judas Maccabaeus, are warmongers and rebels who are preventing the kingdom from finding stability. •That is why, after being deprived of my hereditary dignity, I mean the high-priesthood, I have come here now, •first, out of genuine concern for the king's interests, and secondly, out of a regard for our own fellow citizens, because the irresponsible behaviour of those I have mentioned has brought great degradation on our entire race. •When your majesty has taken note of all these points, may it please you to make provision for the welfare of our country and our oppressed nation, as befits the gracious benevolence you extend to all; •for as long as Judas remains alive the state will 10

1 M 2:18+ : When Alcimus had finished this speech, the rest of the Friends of the King, 11
17:26 who hated Judas, seized the occasion to arouse Demetrius' anger against him.
He at once selected Nicanor, who had been commander of the elephants, 12 promoted him military commissioner for Judaea and despatched him •with 13 instructions to dispose of Judas, disperse his followers and instal Alcimus as high priest of the greatest of temples. •The pagans in Judaea, who had fled before 14 Judas, flocked to join Nicanor, thinking that the misfortunes and troubles of the Jews would be to their own advantage.

11 M 7:27-28 Nicanor comes to terms with Judas

When the Jews heard that Nicanor was coming and that the pagans were 15 about to attack, they sprinkled dust over themselves and made supplication to him who had established his people for ever and had never failed to support his own heritage by his direct intervention. •On their leader's orders they at once 16 left the place where they were and came upon the enemy at the village of 1 M 7:31 Dessau.^b •Simon, brother of Judas, had engaged Nicanor, but because of the 17 unexpected arrival^c of his adversaries had suffered a slight check. •However, 18 Nicanor had heard how brave Judas and his men were and how resolutely they always fought for their country, and he did not dare allow bloodshed to decide the issue. •And so he sent Posidonius, Theodotus and Mattathias to offer the Jews 19 pledges of friendship and to accept theirs.

After careful consideration of his terms, the leader communicated them to 20 his troops, and since they were all clearly of one mind they agreed to the treaty.
A day was fixed on which the respective leaders were to meet privately on 21 neutral ground: a litter came out from either side and seats were set up. •Judas 22 had posted armed men on the alert in advantageous positions in case of a sudden treacherous move by the enemy. The leaders held their conference and reached agreement. •Nicanor took up residence in Jerusalem and did nothing out of 23 place there; he even sent away the crowds that had flocked to join him. •He kept 24
Judas constantly with him, becoming deeply attached to him •and he encouraged 25 him to marry and have children. Judas married, settled down and led a normal life.^d

Alcimus renews hostilities, and Nicanor threatens the Temple

When Alcimus saw how friendly the two men had become, he went to 26
Demetrius with a copy of the treaty they had signed and told him that Nicanor was holding ideas against the interests of the state, and was planning that Judas, an enemy of the realm, should fill the next vacancy among the Friends of the King.

The king flew into a rage; roused by the calumnies of this arch-villain, he 27 wrote to Nicanor, telling him of his strong displeasure at the treaty and ordering him to send Maccabaeus to Antioch in chains immediately.

When the letter reached Nicanor he was very much upset, for it went against 28
the grain with him to break his agreement with a man who had done nothing wrong. •However, there was no question of opposing the king, so he waited 29 11 M 7:29-30 for an opportunity to carry out the order by a stratagem. •Maccabaeus began 30 to notice that Nicanor was treating him more sharply and that his manner of speaking to him was more abrupt than it had been, and he concluded that such severity could have no very good motive. He therefore collected a consider-11 M 7:33-38 able number of his followers and withdrew from Nicanor. •The latter, realising 31 that the man had well and truly outmanoeuvred him, went to the great and holy Temple at a time when the priests were offering the customary sacrifices, and ordered them to surrender Judas. •When they protested on oath that 32 they did not know where the wanted man could be, •he stretched out his right 33 hand towards the Temple and swore this oath, 'If you do not hand Judas over to me as prisoner, I will raze this sanctuary of God to the ground, I will demolish the altar, and on this very spot I will erect a splendid temple to Dionysus'.

 34 With these words he left them. The priests stretched out their hands to heaven, calling on him who has at all times done battle for our nation; this was their 35 prayer: 'O Lord, you who stand in need of nothing at all, it has pleased you that 36 there should be in our midst a Temple for your dwelling place. •Now therefore, holy Lord of all holiness, preserve for ever from all profanation this house, so newly purified.'

Ac 17:25

The death of Razis

37 Now, a certain Razis, one of the elders of Jerusalem, was denounced to Nicanor. He was a man who loved his countrymen and stood high in their esteem, and he was known as the father of the Jews because of his kindness.
 38 In the earlier days of the insurrection he had been convicted of Judaism, and he 39 had risked both body and life for Judaism with the utmost zeal. •By way of demonstrating the enmity he had for the Jews, Nicanor sent over five hundred 40 soldiers to arrest him, •reckoning that if he eliminated this man he would be 41 dealing them a severe blow. •When the troops were on the point of capturing the tower and were forcing the courtyard gate and calling for fire to set the doors
 42 alight, Razis, finding himself completely surrounded, fell on his own sword, 1 S 31:4+
 43 nobly resolving to die rather than fall into the clutches of these villains and suffer
 44 outrages unworthy of his noble birth. •But in the heat of conflict he missed his thrust, and while the troops swarmed in through the doorways, he ran up with
 45 alacrity on to the wall and bravely threw himself down among the troops. •But as they instantly drew back some distance, he fell into the middle of the empty
 46 space. •Still breathing, and blazing with anger, he struggled to his feet, blood spurting in all directions, and despite his terrible wounds ran right through the 47 crowd; then, taking his stand on a steep rock, •although he had now lost every drop of blood, he tore out his entrails and taking them in both hands flung them
 48 among the troops, calling on the Master of his life and spirit to give them back to 7:9+
 49 him one day. Such was the manner of his passing.

Nicanor's blasphemies

1 15 Nicanor heard that Judas and his men were in the neighbourhood of Samaria, so he decided to attack them, at no risk to himself, on the day of
 2 rest. •Those Jews who had been compelled to follow him said, 'You must not massacre them in such a savage, barbarous way, but give its proper honour to the
 3 day on which the All-seeing has conferred a special holiness'. •At this the triple-dyed scoundrel asked if there was in heaven a sovereign who had ordered the 1 S 7:26
 4 keeping of the sabbath day. •When they answered, 'It is the living Lord himself, the heavenly sovereign, who has ordered the observance of the seventh day',
 5 he retorted, 'And it is I myself as sovereign on earth who order you to take up arms and carry through this business of the king'. For all that, he never managed to carry through his savage plan.

Judas harangues his men. His dream

6 While Nicanor, in his unlimited boastfulness and pride, was planning to erect
 7 a public trophy^a with the spoils taken from Judas and his men, •Maccabaeus
 8 remained firm in his confident conviction that the Lord would stand by him. •He urged his men not to be dismayed by the attacks of the pagans but, keeping in mind the help that had come to them from heaven in the past, to be confident that this time also victory would be theirs with the help of the Almighty. •He⁹ put fresh heart into them, citing the Law and the Prophets,^b and by stirring up memories of the battles they had already won he filled them with new enthusiasm. •Having thoroughly roused their courage, he ended his speech¹⁰ by detailing the treachery of the heathen and their violation of their oaths.

Having armed each one of them not so much with the safety given by shield¹¹ and lance as with that confidence that springs from noble language, he encouraged them all by describing to them a convincing dream—a vision, as it were.^c •What¹² he had seen was this: Onias, the former high priest, that paragon of men, modest of bearing and gentle of manners, suitably eloquent and trained from boyhood in the practice of every virtue—Onias was stretching out his hands and praying for the whole nation of the Jews. •Next there appeared a man equally remarkable¹³ for his great age and dignity and invested with a marvellous and impressive air of majesty. •Onias began to speak: ‘This is a man’ he said ‘who loves his¹⁴ brothers and prays much for the people and the Holy City—Jeremiah,^d the prophet of God’. •Jeremiah then stretched out his right hand and presented¹⁵ Judas with a golden sword, saying as he gave it, ‘Take this holy sword as a gift¹⁶ from God; with it you shall strike down enemies’.

The disposition of the combatants

Encouraged by the noble words of Judas, which had the power to inspire¹⁷ valour and give the young the spirit of grown men, they decided not to pitch camp but to make a spirited attack and settle the matter fighting hand to hand with all their courage, since the city, their holy religion and the Temple were in danger. •Their concern for their wives and children, their brothers and¹⁸ relatives, had shrunk to minute importance; their chief and greatest fear was for the consecrated Temple. •Those left behind in the city felt a similar¹⁹ anxiety, alarmed as they were about the forthcoming encounter in the open country. •Everyone now awaited the coming issue. The enemy had already²⁰ concentrated their forces and stood formed up in order of battle, with the elephants drawn up in a strategic position and the cavalry disposed on the wings. Maccabaeus took note of these masses confronting him, the glittering array of²¹ armour and the fierce aspect of the elephants; then, raising his hands to heaven, he called on the Lord who works miracles, in the knowledge that it is not by force of arms, but as he sees fit to decide, that victory is granted by him to such as deserve it. •His prayer was worded thus: ‘You, Master, sent your angel in²² the days of Hezekiah king of Judaea, and destroyed no less than one hundred and eighty-five thousand of Sennacherib’s army; •now once again, Sovereign of²³ heaven, send a good angel before us to spread terror and dismay. •May these men²⁴ be struck down by the might of your arm, since they have come with blasphemy on their lips to attack your holy people.’^e With this, he brought his prayer to an end.

The defeat and death of Nicanor

Nicanor and his men advanced to the sound of trumpets and war songs, ²⁵ but the men of Judas closed with the enemy uttering invocations and prayers. ²⁶ Fighting with their hands and praying to God in their hearts, they cut down at ²⁷ least thirty-five thousand men and were greatly cheered by this divine manifestation. •When the engagement was ended and they were withdrawing in ²⁸ triumph they recognised Nicanor, lying dead in full armour.

With shouting and confusion all around, they blessed the sovereign Master ²⁹ in the language of their ancestors. •The man who had devoted himself entirely,^f ³⁰ body and soul, to the service of his countrymen, and had always preserved the love he had felt even in youth for those of his own race, gave orders for Nicanor’s head to be cut off, together with his arm and shoulder, and taken to Jerusalem. When he arrived there himself, he called together his countrymen and the priests; ³¹

 33 Almighty. •Then, cutting out the tongue of the godless Nicanor, he gave orders for it to be fed piecemeal to the birds, and for the reward of his folly to be hung 34 up in sight of the Temple. •At this everyone sent blessings heavenward to the glorious Lord, saying, 'Blessings on him who has preserved his own dwelling from pollution!'

THE WISDOM BOOKS

INTRODUCTION TO THE WISDOM BOOKS

Five books of the Old Testament are called 'wisdom' books: Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Ecclesiasticus, Wisdom. With these is grouped, somewhat unaptly, the Song of Songs. The school of thought they represent is also that of a certain number of Psalms and, in part, of the books of Tobit and Baruch.

Wisdom literature flourished throughout the ancient East. Egypt produced wisdom writings in every period of its history. From Mesopotamia come proverbs, fables and poems on human suffering reminiscent of Job. From Aramaic-speaking areas we have the Wisdom of Ahikar, Assyrian in origin and translated into several ancient languages. This 'wisdom' ignores national boundaries. It gives little attention to religious thought, being concerned rather with human solutions. It treats of the meaning of life, not philosophically in the Greek manner but by appeal to experience. It offers a recipe for successful living and is itself regarded as a cultural accomplishment.

The Israelites were acquainted with this wisdom. The highest praise the Bible can give to Solomon is that his wisdom excelled the wisdom of the sons of the East and the wisdom of Egypt, 1 K 5:10. Arab and Edomite sages were well known, Jr 49:7; Ba 3:22-23; Ob 8. Job and the three sages who were his friends lived in Edom. The author of Tobit knew the Wisdom of Ahikar, and Pr 22:17-23:11 very faithfully follows the Egyptian maxims of Amene-mophis. Several Psalms are attributed to Heman and Ethan, Canaanite sages according to 1 K 5:11. Proverbs includes the Words of Agur, Pr 30:1-14, and the Words of Lemuel, Pr 31:1-9, both from Massa, a tribe in northern Arabia, Gn 25:14.

It is not surprising that the earliest wisdom works of Israel closely resemble those of neighbouring races; they are plants of the same soil. In the older sections of Proverbs we find little else than maxims born of human wisdom. With the exception of the latest books, Ecclesiasticus and Wisdom, this group of biblical literature does not touch on the great themes of the Old Testament: Law, Covenant, Election, Salvation. The sages of Israel show no concern for the past and future fortunes of their nation: like their pagan counterparts they are absorbed in the individual and his destiny. This, however, they view in a clearer light, that of the religion of Yahweh. Though the wisdom of Israel springs from the same root as, and thus resembles, the common wisdom of the East, it has an essential superiority, the effects of which become more marked as revelation progresses. The contrast once drawn between wisdom and folly now becomes an opposition between virtue and vice, between true religion and false. Real wisdom is found in the fear of God which is the very foundation of true religion. The wisdom of the East may be called humanistic; the wisdom of Israel is humanism spiritualised.

In particular, the wisdom of man is set in perspective with the wisdom of God. All wisdom comes from God since he alone is wise (Pr 21:30, an early text), with an excelling wisdom which man may read in the works of creation but never understand, Jb 28; 38-39; Si 1:1-10; 16:24f; 39:12f; 42:15-43:33. In the impressive prologue to Proverbs, Pr 1-9, divine Wisdom speaks as if she were a person, at once present in God from eternity, and acting with him in the work of creation, cf. especially Pr 8:22-31. In Jb 28, Wisdom is presented as distinct from God who alone knows where she lies hidden. In Si 24 Wisdom says of herself that she has come from the mouth of the Most High, that her home is in heaven whence God sends her to Israel. In Ws 7:22-8:1, she is an outpouring of the glory of the Almighty, an image of his perfection. Thus Wisdom as a divine attribute detaches herself from him, to assume a personality of her own. Striking though these expressions may be, it still does not seem that the personification is more than a poetic device: the monotheism of the Old Testament forbids it. On the other hand, the expressions provoke scrutiny and prepare the mind for a revelation of a plurality of Persons in God. St John's Logos, the Word, is at once in God and outside him, like divine Wisdom, and all these impressive texts find their deepest fulfilment in the incarnate Word.

Since the question of the individual and his destiny was the chief preoccupation of the sages, the problem of retribution was of primary importance for them. It was in their circles and by dint of their hard thinking that this doctrine developed. In the older sections of Proverbs, wisdom (which is to say, virtue) is sure to bring happiness, and folly (or vice) ruin. Thus God rewards the good and punishes the wicked. And such is still the position in the prologue of Proverbs, 3:33-35; 9:6 and 18. This is the doctrine, therefore, on which the teaching of wisdom is based, maintaining, as it does, that the world is ruled by a God who is just and wise. In its support it claims experience, despite the fact that experience often contradicts it. This contradiction is dramatically demonstrated in the Book of Job where the three friends defend the traditional thesis. But to the questionings of the good man in affliction there is no intellectually satisfactory answer as long as we hold the theory of adequate retribution on earth; to have unquestioning faith in God is all there is to do. The Book of Ecclesiastes, however differing in its approach, reaches the same conclusion; it, too, rejects the traditional thesis, maintaining that man has no right to call God to account or demand happiness as a due. Ecclesiasticus is of the same mind; true, he writes enthusiastically of the wise man's happiness, 14:20-15:10, but he is haunted by the thought of death and he knows that everything depends on that final hour: 'Yet it is a trifle for the Lord on the day a man dies to repay him as his conduct deserves', 11:26, cf. 1:13; 7:36; 28:6; 41:9. He has a presentiment of 'the four last things' but does not express it clearly. Shortly after him, Dn 12:2 makes a clear act of faith in retribution after death, which is here coupled with faith in the resurrection of the body, since the Hebrew mentality could not conceive the survival of a spirit separated from the flesh. Among the Jews of Alexandria greater progress was to be achieved by another, parallel course; once Platonic philosophy, with its doctrine of an immortal soul, has broken through the limitations of Hebrew thought, the Book of Wisdom can declare that 'God made man imperishable', 2:23, and that after death the faithful soul will enjoy unending happiness with God while the wicked will receive their punishment, 3:1-12. The sages of Israel at last have the answer to their great problem.

The oldest and simplest form of wisdom literature is the mashal. And this is (in the plural) the title of the book we call 'Proverbs', though, strictly speaking, the mashal is a striking sentence that catches the imagination, a popular saying, or a maxim. The older collections in Proverbs consist only of short sentences. Later, the mashal develops into more elaborate forms, becoming parable, allegory, discourse, argument. This development, already perceptible in the short appended sections of Proverbs and still more so in the prologue, Pr 1-9, crystallises in the subsequent books; with Job or Wisdom the mashal becomes a great literary composition.

These short, easily memorised sentences were intended for oral instruction. Parents taught them to their sons, Pr 1:8; 4:1; 31:1; Si 3:1, and the name 'son' is retained when master teaches pupil, since the sages ran schools, Si 51:23,26; cf. Pr 7:1f; 9:1f. 'Wisdom' became a privilege of the educated and therefore lettered classes; sages and scribes appear side by side in Jr 8:8-9, and Si 38:24-39:11 puts the scribe above the manual worker because his profession enables him to acquire wisdom. Scribes were needed for secretarial duties at court and it was at court that the doctrines of wisdom first began to develop. All these characteristics find their precise parallel in the other centres of Oriental wisdom, whether in Egypt or in Mesopotamia. One of the Solomonic collections in Proverbs was made by 'the men of Hezekiah, king of Judah', Pr 25:1. But the sages were not merely collectors of old sayings, they were also authors. They ended by becoming a class apart, a kind of Academy of Moral Science, in which the learned wrote for the learned.

The school of sages is therefore very different from the circles that produced the priestly and the prophetic writings, and Jr 18:18 carefully distinguishes three classes: priests, sages, prophets. The sages had their own preoccupations: they were not particularly interested in the liturgy, nor do they seem to have been stirred by the misfortunes of their people or stimulated by the great hope that held the nation together; Jeremiah evidently had a poor opinion of them, Jr 8:9. But from the Exile onwards, these three separate streams begin to merge. The prologue of Proverbs assumes the manner of a preaching prophet; Ecclesiasticus, ch. 44-49, and Wisdom, 10-19, dwell at some length on the history of salvation; Ecclesiasticus shows his veneration for the priesthood, he is a devout worshipper, and finally he identifies wisdom with the Law, Si 24:23-24: here we have the alliance of scribe (or sage) with doctor of the Law that we find in gospel times.

At the beginning of this long search for wisdom stands the figure of Solomon. Here again we find oriental parallels: two Egyptian wisdom writings were thought to be the teachings given by a pharaoh to his son. From 1 K 5:9-14, cf. 3:9-12 and 28; 10:1-9, to Si 47:12-17, Solomon is held up to admiration as the greatest sage of Israel, and the two oldest and most important collections in Proverbs, ch. 10-22 and 25-28, are attributed to him (hence the title of the book, Pr 1:1). Ecclesiastes, Wisdom and the Song were similarly attributed to him. All this teaching, gradually dispensed to the chosen people, was preparing the revelation of Wisdom incarnate: 'here is someone greater than Solomon', Mt 12:42.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF JOB

The Book of Job is the literary masterpiece of the wisdom movement. It opens with a prose narrative. There was once a faithful servant of God whose name was Job, a rich and happy man. God allows Satan to test him to see if he will remain faithful despite misfortune. Job loses his possessions and his children, but is resigned to God's taking back what he had given. Next, his own person is attacked; his sickness is revolting and painful, but still he is resigned; his wife advises him to curse God but he rebukes her. At this point, three of his friends, Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar, come to offer sympathy, ch. 1-2. After this introduction the long dialogue poem begins which constitutes the body of the book. It opens with a four-cornered conversation. In three series of speeches, ch. 3-14, 15-21, 22-27, Job and his friends oppose their different conceptions of divine justice; there is no very steady development of ideas, but rather an elaboration of principles laid down at the beginning. Eliphaz speaks with the moderation of advanced age but also with the severity learned of long experience of men; Zophar has the excitability of youth; Bildad is a prosy person of measured discourse. All three, however, defend the traditional thesis of retribution on earth: if Job suffers, it is because he has sinned; his own opinion may acquit him, but not God's. When Job protests his innocence they grow still more obstinate. Job confronts this theorising with his own sad experience and with the universal experience of injustice. He comes back to this repeatedly, and as repeatedly is brought up against the mystery of a God of justice who makes the good man suffer. Thus groping in the dark he makes no progress towards a solution. His tortured soul matches his suffering body: the body has its paroxysms and its times of ease, the soul its revolts and its surrenders. This alternating motion has two climaxes: its first in the act of faith of ch. 19, its second in the final protestation of innocence in ch. 31. A new character, Elihu, now appears: both Job and his friends are mistaken, he says, and then in a spate of words attempts to vindicate God's ways, ch. 32-37. Yahweh himself cuts him short and 'from the heart of the tempest' (the traditional setting of theophanies) gives Job his answer. Or rather there is no answer, since man is no judge of a God whose wisdom and power are infinite. Thereupon Job realises the folly of his words, 38:1-42:6. The book ends with an epilogue in prose: Yahweh rebukes the three friends, rewards Job with sons and daughters and doubles his possessions, 42:7-17.

The main character, Job, is a famous figure in ancient history, Ezk 14:14,20, believed to have lived in the patriarchal age on the borders of Arabia and Edom, a region which is well-known for its wise men, Jr 49:7; Ba 3:22-23, Ob 8, and from which his three friends also come. Job was traditionally regarded as a model of virtue, cf. Ezk 14, whose loyalty to God remained unshaken despite grievous trials. Our author has used this old story as the framework of his book and, though the dialogue poem is in style and tone so different from the prose prologue and epilogue, it can at no time have existed without them.

The authenticity of certain passages in the dialogue has been questioned. The poem on wisdom, ch. 28, sounds odd on Job's lips since it anticipates God's answer to Job's questions, ch. 38-39. Nevertheless, it is a product, if not of the same author, at least of the author's school of thought, and is closely associated with the theme of the book; but why it has been inserted just here, where it is alien to the context, is difficult to say. It has been argued, too, that the speeches of Yahweh, ch. 38-41, did not belong to the original poem. The argument is, however, based on a misunderstanding of the book's meaning. It is true that ch. 38-41 ignore all the preceding debate as well as Job's own plight, by transferring the discussion from the human plane to the divine; but it is for this very reason that these speeches of Yahweh provide what, in the author's eyes, is the only solution to the problem, namely the mysterious nature of the ways of God. Other scholars believe that two passages of this section at least are not authentic: the description of the ostrich, 39:13-18, and the long descriptions of Behemoth and Leviathan, 40:15-41:26; but the arguments are not decisive, nor is the matter of great importance. Finally, the arrangement of ch. 27-28 is not entirely satisfactory; the carelessness of copyists, or editorial readjustments, may be the explanation here.

The arguments against the authenticity of the speeches of Elihu, ch. 32-37, are weightier. Elihu appears abruptly and unannounced and Yahweh, who speaks next, ignores him completely. This is all the more strange in that Elihu anticipates the words of Yahweh, even giving the impression that his purpose is to supplement them. Moreover, he repeats to no purpose what the three friends have already said. Add to this that the vocabulary and style are different, and it begins to look as if these chapters have been added to the book and are from a different hand. But these chapters too are inspired and have their own contribution to make to the religious message of the book.

The author of Job is known to us only from his work: the book shows that he was without doubt an Israelite, brought up on the works of the prophets and the teachings of the sages. His home was most probably in Palestine but he must have visited other countries, particularly Egypt, or lived in them for a time. His date is conjectural. The prose narrative smacks of patriarchal times and made early writers think that the book was, like Genesis, the work of Moses. But this argument applies only to the prose framework of the book and, even here, traditional sources or literary imitation may explain the style. The book is later than Jeremiah and Ezekiel (with which it has certain expressions and ideas in common) and its language has a strong Aramaic flavour. We are therefore in post-exilic times when absorption in the destiny of the nation as a whole was giving way to an interest in the individual. The most likely, though still uncertain, date is the beginning of the 5th century, B.C.

The writer puts the case of the good man who suffers. This is a paradox for the conservative view then prevalent that a man's actions are rewarded or punished here on earth. This iron rule is plainly enunciated, so far as a nation as a whole is concerned, by the classic texts of Dt 28 and Lv 26; its working-out in history is demonstrated by the Books of Judges and Kings, and the same idea underlies the preaching of the prophets. With Ezekiel (ch. 18) the conception of individual responsibility finds clear expression, though it was already latent and occasionally expressed, Dt 24:16; Jr 31:29-30; 2 K 14:6. But even Ezekiel has only earthly retribution in mind and is therefore brought sharply up against harsh reality. Where a community is concerned, it may well be that the faults of the society as a society prevail, and that good men are therefore punished with the wicked. But if it is the rule that the individual is to be recompensed for his own actions, how is it that the good man suffers? Yet this is the fact, and Job is an example. The reader is indeed informed in the prologue that Job's distress is not God's doing but Satan's and that it is a test of his fidelity. But Job does not know this, nor do his friends. These offer the old solutions: the happiness of the wicked is short-lived, cf. Ps 37 and 73; the sufferings of the good man test his fortitude, cf. Gn 22:12, or possibly punish faults committed unwittingly or out of weakness, cf. Ps 19:12; 25:7. The three friends propose these explanations while they still think Job more or less innocent. But the cries that pain wrings from him and his impatience with God persuade them that his guilt goes deep: only grave sin can explain distress like this. The speeches of Elihu take up and develop these solutions: the suffering of those whom men judge virtuous is an atonement for sins of omission or of thoughtlessness, or possibly (the most original contribution of this section) a safeguard against still more serious faults and a cure for pride. But like the three friends, though not as harshly, Elihu holds that sin and suffering are connected, one with the other.

Job protests against this rigorous theory of cause and effect with the vigour of conscious innocence. He does not deny the principle of earthly recompense, indeed he lives in hope of it, and God gives it in the end (cf. the epilogue). But the recompense is, here and now, withheld; this is Job's problem and he seeks in vain for the meaning of it all. In his anguish he reaches out for God; God eludes him, but Job still trusts to his goodness. When God does appear it is to tell how inscrutable are his person and his designs, and Job falls to silence. This is the book's lesson: faith must remain even when understanding fails. At this stage of divine revelation, the author could go no further. More light cannot be thrown on the mystery of suffering innocence until God opens up the prospect of a future life in which recompense is made, and until man learns the worth of suffering when it is united with the sufferings of Christ. Two texts of St Paul give Job his answer: 'The sufferings of this present time cannot be compared with the glory that is to be revealed in us', Rm 8:18, and: 'In my flesh I make up what is lacking in Christ's trials, for the sake of his Body, which is the Church', Col 1:24.

THE BOOK OF JOB

I. PROLOGUE^a

Satan tests Job

Tb 12:13

- 1 There was once a man in the land of Uz^b called Job: a sound and honest
2 man who feared God and shunned evil. •Seven sons and three daughters
3 were born to him. •And he owned seven thousand sheep, three thousand camels,
4 five hundred yoke of oxen and five hundred she-donkeys, and many servants
5 besides. This man was indeed a man of mark among all the people of the East.^c
6 It was the custom of his sons to hold banquets in each other's houses, one after 7 the other, and to send and invite their three sisters to eat and drink with them.
8 Once each series of banquets was over, Job would send for them to come and 9 be purified,^d and at dawn on the following day he would offer a holocaust for 10 each of them. 'Perhaps' Job would say 'my sons have sinned and in their hearts
11 affronted^e God.' So that was what he used to do after each series.
12 One day the Sons of God^f came to attend on Yahweh, and among them was 13 Satan.^g •So Yahweh said to Satan, 'Where have you been?' 'Round the earth,' 14 he answered 'roaming about.' •So Yahweh asked him, 'Did you notice my 15 servant Job? There is no one like him on the earth: a sound and honest man 16 who fears God and shuns evil.' •'Yes,' Satan said 'but Job is not God-fearing 17 for nothing, is he? •Have you not put a wall round him and his house and all 18 his domain? You have blessed all he undertakes, and his flocks throng the 19 countryside. •But stretch out your hand and lay a finger on his possessions:
20 I warrant you, he will curse you to your face.' •'Very well,' Yahweh said to 21 Satan 'all he has is in your power. But keep your hands off his person.' So 22 Satan left the presence of Yahweh.
23 On the day when Job's sons and daughters were at their meal and drinking 24 wine at their eldest brother's house, •a messenger came to Job. 'Your oxen' 25 he said 'were at the plough, with the donkeys grazing at their side, •when the 26 Sabaeans^h swept down on them and carried them off. Your servants they put 27 to the sword: I alone escaped to tell you.' •He had not finished speaking 28 when another messenger arrived. 'The fire of God'ⁱ he said 'has fallen from 29 the heavens and burnt up all your sheep, and your shepherds too: I alone escaped

1 a. In this prose narrative the author has preserved the flavour of a folk tale.

b. Probably in the S. of Edom. Cf. Gn 36:28; Lm 4:21.

c. The phrase is used of all who lived E. of Palestine, more particularly in Edomite or Arab territory, cf. Nb 24:21+.

d. Lit. 'sanctified'. The reference is to the ritual removal of impediments to sacred functions, cf. Lv 11:1+.

e. Hebr. 'blessed'. So also in 1:11 and 2:5,9. The original word 'curse, blaspheme' has been replaced in Hebr. from motives of reverence.

f. Cf. 38:7; Gn 6:1-4; Ps 29:1; 82:1; 89:6. These are superhuman creatures who make up God's court and council. They are identified with the angels (LXX translates 'the angels of God').

g. I.e. 'the Adversary'. A legal term, apparently, cf. Ps 109:6, but becoming increasingly common for an evil being, Zc 3:1-2, and eventually a proper name, 1 Ch 21:1, of the power of evil, cf. Lk 10:18. In Rv 12:9; 20:2 it is synonymous with the Dragon, the Devil, the Serpent, cf. Gn 3:1+, alternative names or personifications of the evil spirit. Here Satan, like the serpent of Gn 3, tempts man to sin.

h. Sabaeans and Chaldaeans (v. 17) here mean predatory nomads.

i. Lightning. Cf. 2 K 1:10,12,14.

to tell you.' •He had not finished speaking when another messenger arrived. 17
 'The Chaldaeans,' he said 'three bands of them, have raided your camels and made off with them. Your servants they put to the sword: I alone escaped to tell you.' •He had not finished speaking when another messenger arrived. 18
 'Your sons and daughters' he said 'were at their meal and drinking wine at their eldest brother's house, •when suddenly from the wilderness a gale sprang 19 up, and it battered all four corners of the house which fell in on the young people. They are dead: I alone escaped to tell you.'

Job rose and tore his gown and shaved his head.^f Then falling to the ground 20
 he worshipped •and said: 21

'Naked I came from my mother's womb, naked I shall return.*

Yahweh gave, Yahweh has taken back.

Blessed be the name of Yahweh!

In all this misfortune Job committed no sin nor offered any insult to God. 22

2 Once again the Sons of God came to attend on Yahweh, and among them was, 1
 Satan. •So Yahweh said to Satan, 'Where have you been?' 'Round the earth,' 2
 he answered 'roaming about.' •So Yahweh asked him, 'Did you notice my 3 servant Job? There is no one like him on the earth: a sound and honest man who fears God and shuns evil. His life continues blameless as ever; in vain you provoked me to ruin him.' •'Skin for skin!'^a Satan replied. 'A man will give 4 away all he has to save his life. •But stretch out your hand and lay a finger on 5 his bone and flesh; I warrant you, he will curse you to your face.' •'Very well,' 6 Yahweh said to Satan 'he is in your power. But spare his life.' •So Satan left 7 the presence of Yahweh.

He struck Job down with malignant ulcers from the sole of his foot to the top of his head. •Job took a piece of pot to scrape himself, and went and sat 8 in the ashpit. •Then his wife said to him, 'Do you now still mean to persist 9 in your blamelessness? Curse God, and die.' •'That is how foolish women 10 talk' Job replied. 'If we take happiness from God's hand, must we not take sorrow too?' And in all this misfortune Job uttered no sinful word.

The news of all the disasters that had fallen on Job came to the ears of three of 11 his friends. Each of them set out from home—Eliphaz of Teman, Bildad of Shuah and Zophar of Naamath^b—and by common consent they decided to go and offer 12 him sympathy and consolation. •Looking at him from a distance, they could 13 not recognise him;^c they wept aloud and tore their garments and threw dust over their heads.^d •They sat there on the ground beside him for seven days and seven nights. To Job they spoke never a word, so sad a sight he made.

II. THE DIALOGUE

A. FIRST SERIES OF SPEECHES

Jr 20:14-18 Job curses the day of his birth

3 In the end it was Job who broke the silence and cursed the day of his birth. 1
 This is what he said: 2

Si 23:14 May the day perish when I was born, 3
 Mt 26:24 and the night that told of a boy conceived.^a 4

May that day be darkness,
 may God on high have no thought for it,
 may no light shine on it. 5

May murk and deep shadow^b claim it for their own, clouds hang over it,
 eclipse swoop down on it. 6

- 6 Yes, let the dark lay hold of it, to the days of the year let it not be joined,^c
into the reckoning of months not find its way.
- 7 May that night be dismal,
no shout of joy come near it.
- 8 Let them curse it who curse the day,^d
who are prepared to rouse Leviathan.^e
- 9 Dark be the stars of its morning, let it wait in vain for light and never see the opening eyes of dawn.
- 10 Since it would not shut the doors of the womb on me to hide sorrow from my eyes.
- 11 Why did I not die new-born,
not perish as I left the womb?
- 12 Why were there two knees to receive me,
two breasts for me to suck?
- 13 Had there not been, I should now be lying in peace, wrapped in a restful slumber,
with the kings and high viziers of earth who build themselves vast vaults,^f
- 14 or with princes who have gold and to spare and houses crammed with silver.^g
- 15 Or put away like a still-born child that never came to be,^h like unborn babes that never see the light.
- 16 Down there,ⁱ bad men bustle no more,
there the weary rest.
- 17 Prisoners, all left in peace,
hear no more the shouts of the gaoler.
- 18 Down there, high and low are all one,
and the slave is free of his master.
- 20 Why give light to a man of grief?
Why give life to those bitter of heart,
who long for a death that never comes,
and hunt for it more than for a buried treasure?
- 21 They would be glad to see the grave-mound^j
and shout with joy if they reached the tomb.

j. Mourning ritual.

2 a. Apparently likening mother earth to the womb.
a. Probably a proverb drawn from customs of barter. It could be expanded as 'a skin is fair exchange for a skin', i.e. a man only gives himself away when his own person is affected.

b. The three towns are situated in Idumaeon and Arab territory. Edom and 'the East', cf. 1:3+, were regarded by the Israelites as the homeland of the sages 1 K 5:10-11; 10:1-3; Pr 30:1; 31:1; Jr 49:7; Ob 8; Ba 3:22-23.

c. He was so disfigured (like the suffering servant in Is 52:14).

d. Penitential gesture and common sign of mourning. The three friends consider Job as good as dead. The text adds 'towards heaven', possibly a gloss, which turns the act into a gesture of indignation, cf. Ac 22:23, either calling down divine vengeance or sheltering oneself from it.

3 a. Two parallel curses: one of the day of birth, the other of the night of conception.

b. Hebr. 'shadow of death'. 'eclipse' corr.; 'like the bitterness of the day' Hebr.

c. 'Yes' (lit. 'behold') taken from v. 7; 'that night'

Hebr. 'be joined' versions; 'rejoice' Hebr.

d. Either the enemies of light, those who work in the dark, cf. 24:13f; 38:15; or those who, like Job, curse the day they were born; or, more probably, sorcerers or magicians whose curses and spells were believed capable of making lucky days unlucky or even of producing eclipses, when 'Leviathan' temporarily swallowed the sun.

e. Leviathan (also called the Dragon or Fleeing Serpent), cf. 40:25+; Is 27:1; 51:9; Am 9:3; Ps 74:14; 104:26, was a monster of primeval chaos, cf. 7:12+; there was a common superstitious fear that a powerful curse against the present order might stir him to action. The Dragon of Rv 12:3, who embodies Evil's hostility to God, has certain characteristics in common with this serpent of chaos.

f. The Hebr. word means ruins, deserted spots, but the context suggests tombs (often built in deserted places); a possible translation 'who build (houses) in solitary places'.

g. Apparently in their tombs, like the kings of Ur or the pharaohs.

h. 'that never came to be' corr.

i. In Sheol, cf. Nb 16:33+.

j. 'grave-mound' corr.

Confidence in God^a

4 Eliphaz of Teman spoke next. He said:

	If one should address a word to you, ^b will you endure it?	1
	Yet who can keep silent?	2

Ps 17:12; 22: 14, 22 Pr 28:15	A breath from God will bring them to destruction, a blast of his anger will wipe them out.	9
	The lion's roar, his savage growls, like the fangs of lion cubs are broken off.	10

- 7 It is man who breeds trouble for himself
as surely as eagles fly to the height.^e
- 8 If I were as you are, I should appeal to God,
and lay my case before him.
- 9 His works are great, past all reckoning,
marvels, beyond all counting.
- 10 He sends down rain to the earth,
pours down water on the fields.
- 11 If his will is to rescue the downcast,
or raise the afflicted to the heights of joy,
he wrecks the plans of the artful,
and brings to naught their intrigues.
- 12 He traps the crafty in the snare of their own shrewdness, turns subtle counsellors to idiots.
- 13 In daylight they come against darkness,
and grope their way as if noon were night.
- 14 He rescues the bankrupt^f from their jaws,
and the poor man from the hands of the violent.
- 15 Thus the wretched can hope again
and wickedness must shut its mouth.
- 16 Happy indeed the man whom God corrects!
Then do not refuse this lesson^g from Shaddai.^h
- 17 For he who wounds is he who soothes the sore,
and the hand that hurts is the hand that heals.
- 18 Six times he will deliver you from sorrow,
and the seventh,ⁱ evil shall not touch you.
- 19 In time of famine, he will save you from death,
and in wartime from the stroke of the sword.

b. 'address' corr.; 'venture' Hebr.

c. A message from heaven in sleep, possibly communicated by an angel; cf. Gn 2:21; 15:12. The teaching of the Sages, therefore, is not merely human knowledge handed down; divine revelation plays its part, giving the doctrine a 'charismatic' quality.

g. In the Babylonian cosmogonies Tiamat (the Sea) co-operated in the birth of the gods and was then conquered and subdued by one of their number. The imagination of the people, or of poets, seized on this story: Yahweh became the conqueror who then set Chaos in order and ever after held the Sea and its monsters in control. Cf. 3:8+; 9:13; 26:12; 40:25f; Ps 65:7; 74:13-14; 77:16; 89:9-10; 93:3-4; 104:7,26; 107:29; 148:7; Is 27:1; 51:9.

h. Unlike the Egyptian when 'tired of life', Job does not contemplate suicide. Apart from the case of soldiers preferring death to dishonour, Jg 9:54; 1 S 31:4, the O.T. has only one suicide, that of Ahithophel, 2 S 17:23+.

i. 'Sufferings' corr.

j. Bitterly ironical, the author seems to echo phrases from Ps 8. God's 'care' for man here becomes relentless scrutiny. The author of Ps 139 finds in this a cause for trust, but Job sees hostility in it. Reacting against a legalistic view of religion and of sin, he gropes for a God of mercy, v. 21.

b. Hiding them and preventing their shining. Ba 3:34 speaks of the opposite process.

 since his tale of months depends on you,
 since you assign him bounds he cannot pass, 6 turn your eyes from him, leave him alone,^d like a hired drudge, to finish his day.
 7 There is always hope for a tree:
 when felled, it can start its life again;
 its shoots continue to sprout.
 8 Its roots may be decayed in the earth,
 its stump withering in the soil, 9 but let it scent the water, and it buds,
 and puts out branches like a plant new set.
 10 But man? He dies, and lifeless he remains;
 man breathes his last, and then where is he?
 11 The waters of the seas may disappear,
 all the rivers may run dry or drain away;
 12 but man, once in his resting place, will never rise again.

13 a. Job returns to legal procedure, cf. v. 18 and 9:14+. He himself elects to cross-examine God, spurning the so-called sages who presume to plead his cause.

b. Omitting the first two words. Proverbial expressions meaning to gamble for life, to stake all, cf. Jg 12:3; 1 S 19:5; 28:21.

c. Job is not out to win back his happiness but to vindicate his innocence before man and, in particular, before God.

d. Job sees this as a legal action between himself and God. On this occasion he forgets that there is no independent judge, 9:32-33; he no longer sees God as a judge but only as an opponent.

e. Job turns against God the legal accusation which Yahweh, Is 1:18; Ho 2:4; Mi 6:1-2, and his servant, Is 50:8, have already hurled at his people. The second line, lit. 'for now I shall be silent and die', may be another legal formula. The man who challenges his refutations is already prepared to be proved wrong and take the consequences. Sure of his case, Job accepts this.

f. The first: to face God as an equal and to be left free; the second: to speak first in the debate.

g. God 'hides his face' when he withholds signs of his benevolent presence.

h. 'my life' corr.; 'he' Hebr.

14 a. This elegy on human misery is linked with the preceding passage by v. 28: Job, cf. 7:1f, sees his own suffering as the state of every man and thence draws his argument: why God should use his strength against such a mean creature is incomprehensible.

b. 'him' corr.; 'me' Hebr.

c. Lit. 'Not one'. Targ. adds 'but God'. Vulg. 'Is it not you, the only one?' Job acknowledges man's essential vileness but pleads it as an excuse. The emphasis is laid on the physical (and therefore ritual) uncleanness which man contracts from the moment of his conception, cf. Lv 15:19f, and birth, cf. Lv 12:2f, since he is born of woman, Jb 14:1, cf. Ps 51:5. But this ritual uncleanness involves a corresponding moral weakness, a tendency to sin, and Christian interpretation has seen in this passage at least an allusion to what was later recognised as 'original sin' passed on from parent to child. Cf. Rm 5:12+.

day after day of my service I would wait for my relief to come.

you would want to see the work of your hands once more.

water wears away the stones,

the cloudburstⁱ erodes the soil;
just so do you destroy man's hope.

you mar him, and then you bid him go.

B. SECOND SERIES OF SPEECHES

Job's own words condemn him

15 Eliphaz of Teman spoke next. He said: 1

Does a wise man answer with airy reasonings, 2 or feed himself on an east wind?

Does he defend himself with empty talk 3
and ineffectual wordiness?

25:6

You do worse: you flout piety, 4
you repudiate meditation in God's presence.

A guilty conscience prompts your words, 5
you adopt the language of the cunning.

Your own mouth condemns you, and not I; 6 your own lips bear witness against you.^a

Sl 49:16

Are you the first-born of the human race, 7 brought into the world before the hills?^b

Pr 8:25

Have you been a listener at God's council, 8 or established a monopoly of wisdom?

Is 40:13

Jr 23:18

Rm 11:34

What knowledge have you that we have not, 9
what understanding that is not ours too?

A grey-haired man, and an ancient, are of our number; 10
these have seen more summers than your father.

Do you scorn the comfort that God gives, 11
and the moderation we have used in speaking?

See how passion carries you away! 12
How evil you look,

- 13 when you thus loose your anger on God
and utter speeches such as these!
- 14 How can any man be clean?
Born of woman, can he ever be good?^e 4:17-18; 14:41; Si 17:31-32
- 15 In his own Holy Ones God puts no trust, and the heavens themselves are not, in his eyes, clean.
- 16 Then how much less this hateful, corrupt thing, mankind, that drinks iniquity like water! 34:7
- 17 Listen to me, I have a lesson for you:
I will tell you of my own experience, 18 and of the teaching of the sages, those faithful guardians of the tradition of their fathers, 8:8-10
Dt 32:7-8
- 19 to whom alone the land was given,
with never a foreigner to mix with them.
- 20 The life of the wicked is unceasing torment, the years allotted to the tyrant are numbered. Ws 17:3f
- 21 The danger signal ever echoes in his ear, in the midst of peace the marauder swoops on him. 18:11; 20:25
- 22 He has no hope of fleeing from the darkness,
but knows that he is destined for the sword, 23 marked down as meat for the vulture.
He knows that his ruin is at hand.^d
- 24 The hour of darkness makes him terrified;
distress and anguish close in on him,
as though some king were mounting an attack.
- 25 He raised his hand against God, Ps 75:5
he ventured to defy Shaddai.
- 26 Blindly he bore down on him
from behind his massive shield.
- 27 His face had grown full and fat, Ps 73:7
and his thighs too heavy with flesh.
- 28 He had taken possession of ruined towns and made his dwelling in deserted houses.
But all his careful building^e will go once more to ruin;
29 not for him increase of wealth, his riches will not last,
no longer will he cast his shadow over the land.^f
- 30 A flame will wither up his tender buds;
the wind will carry off his blossom.^g

e. 'will wear away' corr. with Syr. and Vulg.

f. The eschatological imagery, by indefinitely postponing the possibility of awakening, is here used to stress man's disappearance without hope of return. The expectation of a resurrection at the end of time is apparently not yet within the scope of the author, cf. 19:25+.

g. This is not a reference to a return from Sheol after death, cf. 7:9+, though the hypothetical situation suggests the possibility. It is simply that Job is reduced to imagining the one place of refuge that is not this earth, heaven being reserved to God, cf. Ps 115:16. If Job could hide somewhere until God's fury is exhausted, he might once more look on a God of mercy. The idea is developed in vv. 14-17: we see Job awaiting his 'relief' while God, no longer angry, longs to see Job again; every possible fault has been forgiven and therefore all question of sin is forgotten.

h. Lit. 'The mountain falling falls' versions.

i. 'cloudburst' corr.

j. 'life' corr. (lit. 'it', feminine); 'him' Hebr. In Sheol, therefore, there is a certain consciousness of the self; cf. Nb 16:33+. The author wishes to say either that the shade has no thought and no concern except for itself, or else that it looks back with longing to the days of its earthly life.

15 a. Job's tongue betrays him: his protestations of innocence reveal anxiety to conceal guilt.

b. The first question contrasts Job with the first member of the human race, a being who might have been able to claim great wisdom. The second goes so far as to contrast him with Wisdom herself, brought forth before the hills were made, Pr 8:25, and ever afterwards a member of God's council, Pr 8:22-31; cf. Jb 28:23-27; Ws 8:3-4.

c. Eliphaz resumes his earlier theme, 4:17, and that of Job, 14:4, but gives it another direction. Man's intrinsic uncleanness is not now considered as the reason for his frailty, 4:17-19, or as an excuse for unavoidable transgression, 14:1-4, but as the root from which great sins grow ('iniquity' in the vocabulary of Eliphaz).

d. 'destined', 'marked down' corr. 'vulture', 'ruin', Greek.

e. Corr.; lit. 'what he has prepared for himself'; 'which are destined to' Hebr.

f. 'shadow' Greek.

	16 Job spoke next. He said:	1

Job, mortally wounded (v. 12f), wishes to leave behind a lasting appeal for vindication: on earth, his blood; with God, the sound of his prayer. This last, personified, cf. Ps 79:11; 88:2; 102:1; Lm 3:44, will be his witness and advocate with God. In 19:25f, Job's champion is God himself.

b. Gesture of legal procedure, cf. Pr 6:1; 17:18; 22:26; Si 29:14-20, by which the guarantor went surety for the debtor to defer distraint and offered bail. His friends being unhelpful, Job, apparently, asks God himself to be his guarantor.

e. 'wear away' corr.; Hebr. 'all'.

f. Biblical expression for the emotion of those who witness divine punishment inflicted on the guilty. So it is with Job's friends: seeing his sufferings they expatiate in conventional terms on the justice of God. Job derides this ready-made wisdom and formal piety.

g. Lit. 'from my plans' corr., cf. Greek.

Facts give the lie

- 1 21 Job spoke next. He said: Jr 12:1-5 2 Listen, only listen to my words;
 this is the consolation you can offer me.
 3 Let me have my say;
 you may jeer when I have spoken.
 4 Do you think I bear a grudge against man?
 Have I no reason to be out of patience? 6:3,26; 16:
 5 Hear what I have to say, and you will be dumbfounded, 4-6 will place your hands over your mouths.^a 29:9; 40:4 6 I myself am appalled at the very thought,
 and my flesh begins to shudder.
 7 Why do the wicked still live on, Ps 37 their power increasing with their age? Jr 12:1-2

h. Vv. 25-27 follow Hebr., correcting v. 26 (Hebr. corrupt). The versions disagree. Greek 'I know that he who will deliver me is eternal, (is) on earth (in order to) restore (anastesai) my skin that suffers this. It is the Lord who has performed for me what I myself know, what my own eye has seen and no other.' Syr. 'I know that my redeemer is living and that in the end he will appear on earth. And these things encompass both my skin and my flesh. If my eyes see God they will see the light.' Vulg. 'I know that my redeemer lives and that at the last day I shall rise from the earth and be clothed in my skin again; and in my flesh I shall see my God; I myself shall see him and no other'.

i. The word goel, approximately translated 'avenger', is a technical term of Israelite law, cf. Nb 35:19+. It is often used of God, the saviour of his people and avenger of the oppressed. The early Jewish rabbis applied the term to the Messiah, and this probably induced Jerome to translate here 'my Redeemer'. Job, slandered and condemned by his friends, awaits a Defender who this time (cf. 16:18-21+) is God himself. Job still believes his happiness to be lost for ever and his death to be at hand; when God undertakes to avenge his cause, it will be after his death. Nonetheless Job hopes to witness this and to 'see' his vindication. In 14:10-14 he had envisaged the possibility of a temporary shelter in Sheol, and here it would seem that he is counting on a brief return to earthly life to see his vindication accomplished; in this he is prompted by his faith in a God who can bring men back from Sheol, cf. 1 S 2:6; 1 K 17:17-24; Ezk 37. Job's faith thus momentarily defies mortal horizons in his desperate need for justice; it prepares us for the explicit revelation of bodily resurrection, cf. 2 M 7:9+.

j. 'will take his stand': legal phrase, used often of witness or of judge, 31:14; Dt 19:16; Is 2:19,21; Ps 12:5. 'the Last' recalls Is 44:6; 48:12.

20 a. The Bible often alludes to the monstrous pride of early man, cf. Ezk 28:2,17; Is 14:13-14; Gn 11:4. This tradition, which has a mythological colouring, is in line with the Gn 3 tradition which makes pride the cause of man's fall.

b. 'his children' corr.; 'his hands' Hebr.

c. Lit. '(streams) of oil' corr.

d. 'glad face', 'his gains'; corr.

e. 'huts' corr.; 'he has abandoned' Hebr.

f. The text of vv. 20-21 is apparently disordered; the order differs in Greek. 'his hoarding will not save him' corr.

g. The Hebr. has at the beginning 'While he filled his belly', omitted by Greek. 'arrows' corr. The same metaphors are used to describe the collective punishment of Israel or of the pagans.

h. 'Out through his back' Syr. 'an arrow' following Greek. 'arsenal' lit. 'store', taken from v. 26a.

i. The darkness of Sheol, one of the plagues of Egypt, Ex 10:21-22.

C. THIRD SERIES OF SPEECHES

God punishes only to vindicate justice

- 1 22 Eliphaz of Teman spoke next. He said:
- 2 Can a man be of any use to God,
when even the wise man's wisdom is of use only to himself?
- 3 Does Shaddai derive any benefit from your integrity, or profit from your blameless conduct? 35:7
Lk 17:7-10
- 4 Would he punish you for your piety,
and hale you off to judgement?
- 5 No, rather for your manifold wickednesses,
for your unending iniquities! 29:11-17,31
- 6 You have exacted^a needless pledges from your brothers, and men go naked now through your despoiling; 29:11
Ex 22:25-26
Dt 24:12-13
- 7 you have grudged water to the thirsty man,
and refused bread to the hungry;
- 8 you have narrowed the lands of the poor man down to nothing^b to set your crony in his place, sent widows away empty-handed 31:16-20
Ex 22:21
- 9 and crushed the arms of orphans.
- 10 No wonder, then, if snares are all around you, or sudden terrors make you afraid. 18:8-11; 19:6
- 11 Light has turned to darkness^c and it blinds you, and a flood of water overwhelms you. Is 58:10-11
Ps 69:1-2
- 12 Does not God live at the height of heaven, and see^d the zenith of the stars? Is 40:26-27
- 13 Because he is far above, you said, 'What does God know?
Can he peer through the shadowed darkness?'^e 35:13
Ps 10:3,12;
73:11
Is 29:15
- 14 The clouds, to him, are an impenetrable veil, and he prowls on the rim of the heavens. 26:10
Si 24:5
Jr 23:23-24
- 15 And will you still follow the ancient trail
trodden by the wicked?
- 16 Those men who were borne off before their time,
with rivers swamping their foundations,
- 17 because they said to God, 'Go away!
What can Shaddai do to us?' 21:14
- 18 Yet he himself had filled their houses with good things, while these wicked men shut him out of their counsels.
- 19 At the sight of their ruin, good men rejoice,
and the innocent deride them: Ps 58:10; 107:42
- 20 'See how their greatness^f is brought to nothing!
See how their wealth has perished in the flames!'

b. 'grow' corr.

c. 'like deer' conj. addition.

d. 'go down' corr.

e. Lit. 'and the counsel of the wicked is far from me'; 'me' here corrected to 'him' i.e. God.

f. Lit. 'his goods destroyed' corr.; Hebr. 'does he destroy the wicked?'; or 'does he distribute portions?'

g. An old and respectable theory, Ex 34:7; Dt 5:9, later qualified, Dt 24:16; Jr 31:29; Ezk 18. Cf. Jn 9:1-3. Job demonstrates its inadequacy: the sinner will neither know nor feel the punishment, cf. 14:21-22.

h. 'his ruin' corr.

i. Another shocking consideration: death strikes indiscriminately.

j. 'thighs', 'fat': versions.

k. The text adds 'and in front of him countless numbers', probably a gloss.

22 a. The list of faults with which Eliphaz falsely taxes Job is notable for its insistence on sins against justice and charity towards others, even by omission. This recalls the teaching of the prophets, cf. Job's apologia, 29:11-17,31.

b. Corr. following Greek.

c. Corr. following Greek.

d. 'and see' corr.; 'See!' Heb.

e. Job has not said this, but Eliphaz is drawing conclusions from his words, among them this blasphemous conclusion: if God is not concerned, it is because he does not know.

f. Lit. 'depart from us'; 'us' versions.

g. 'greatness' versions.

5:17f	Well then! Make peace with him, be reconciled, and all your happiness will be restored to you. ^a	21
	Welcome the teaching from his lips, and keep his words close to your heart.	22
	If you return, humbled, ^c to Shaddai and drive all injustice from your tents,	23
Mt 6:19	if you reckon gold as dust and Ophir as the pebbles of the torrent, ^d	24
Ps 4:7; 16: 5-6; 84:10 Is 58:14	then you will find Shaddai worth bars of gold or silver piled in heaps.	25
27:10	Then Shaddai will be all your delight, and you will lift your face to God.	26
	You will pray, and he will hear; you will have good reason to fulfil your vows.	27
	Whatever you undertake will go well, and light will shine on your path;	28
Ps 18:27 Is 2:11-17 Lk 1:52-53 1 P 5:5	for he that casts down the boasting of the braggart ^e is he that saves the man of downcast eyes.	29
	If a man is innocent, he will bring him freedom, and freedom for you if your hands are kept unstained.	30

God is far off, and evil is victorious

23

Job spoke next. He said:

	My lament is still rebellious, that heavy hand of his ^a drags groans from me.	1
	If only I knew how to reach him, or how to travel to his dwelling!	2
9:14+	I should set out my case to him, my mouth would not want for arguments.	3
	Then I could learn his defence, every word of it, taking note of everything he said to me.	4
13:21	Would he use all his strength in this debate with me? No, he would have to give me a hearing. ^b	5
	He would see he was contending with an honest man, and I should surely win my case. ^c	6
9:11 Ps 139:7-10	If I go eastward, he is not there; or westward—still I cannot see him.	7
	If I seek him in the north, he is not to be found, invisible still when I turn to the south. ^d	8
33:9 Ps 17:3; 139:1-6 Wg 3:6 Jr 11:20+	And yet he knows of every step I take! ^e Let him test me in the crucible: I shall come out pure gold.	9
Ps 17:5	My footsteps have followed close in his, I have walked in his way without swerving;	10
	I have kept every commandment of his lips, cherishing the words from his mouth ^f in my breast. ^g	11
Is 55:10-11	But once he has decided, ^h who can change his mind? Whatever he plans, he carries out.	12
	No doubt, then, but he will carry out my sentence, like so many other decrees that he has made.	13
Ps 119:120	That is why I am full of fear before him, and the more I think, the greater grows my dread of him.	14
	God has made my heart sink, Shaddai has filled me with fear.	15
	For darkness hides me from him, and the gloom veils his presence from me. ⁱ	16

A hymn to God's omnipotence^a 25 Bildad of Shuah spoke next. He said:

1

What sovereignty, what awe, is his who keeps the peace in his heights!^b

2

Can anyone number his armies, or boast of having escaped his ambushes?^c

3

Could any man ever think himself innocent, when confronted by God?
Born of woman, how could he ever be clean?

with his wisdom struck Rahab down.

his hand transfixed the Fleeing Serpent.^j

13

All this but skirts the ways he treads,
a whispered echo is all that we hear of him.

14

But who could comprehend the thunder of his power?

Bildad's words are empty

Job spoke next. He said:^k

1

To one so weak, what a help you are,
for the arm that is powerless, what a rescuer!

2

What excellent advice you give the unlearned, never at a loss for a helpful suggestion!

3

But who are they aimed at, these speeches of yours,
and what spirit is this that comes out of you?

4

Job reaffirms his innocence while acknowledging God's power

27 And Job continued his solemn discourse. He said:

1

I swear by the living God who denies me justice,
by Shaddai who has turned my life sour,

2

that as long as a shred of life is left in me, and the breath of God breathes in my nostrils,

3

my lips shall never speak untruth, nor any lie be found on my tongue.

25 a. This speech (possibly not intact) anticipates the speech of Yahweh. Some connection with the dialogue is not, however, impossible: it may be taken as Bildad's reply to Job's insinuation that God is helpless.

c. Job repeats what Eliphaz has said about the punishment of the wicked but refuses to apply it to himself.

d. Job is apparently saying that he has given a true and factual account of God's disconcerting and mysterious attitude. His friends have shut their eyes to the plain facts.

e. The fragmentary speech in 27:13-23 can hardly belong to Job; it repeats the argument of one of his friends, most probably that of Zophar.

f. 'that God has in store' corr. (lit. 'from God'); 'with God' Hebr.

 in places where there is no foothold, and hang suspended far from mankind.^c
 That earth from which bread comes 5
 is ravaged underground by fire.^d Down there, the rocks are set with sapphires, 6 full of spangles of gold.
 Down there is a path unknown to birds of prey, 7
 unseen by the eye of any vulture;
 a path not trodden by the lordly beasts,^e 8
 where no lion ever walked.
 Man attacks its flinty sides, 9
 upturning mountains by their roots, driving tunnels^f through the rocks, 10
 on the watch for anything precious.
 He explores the sources of rivers,^g 11
 and brings to daylight secrets that were hidden.
 But tell me, where does wisdom come from?^h 12
 Where is understanding to be found?
 The road to it is still unknown to man,ⁱ 13
 not to be found in the land of the living.
 'It is not in me' says the Abyss; 14
 'Nor here' replies the Sea.

Where is understanding to be found?
21 It is outside the knowledge of every living thing, hidden from the birds in the sky.
22 Perdition and Death can only say,
'We have heard reports of it'.
23 God alone has traced its path assessed it, fathomed it.^d

'Wisdom? It is fear of the Lord.
Understanding?—avoidance of evil.'

E. CONCLUSION OF THE DIALOGUE

Job's lament and final defence

a. His former happiness^a

- 1 29 And Job continued his solemn discourse. He said:
2 Who will bring back to me the months that have gone,
and the days when God was my guardian, 3 when his lamp shone over my head,
and his light was my guide in the darkness?
4 Shall I ever see my autumn days again when God hedged round my tent;^b
- Ps 18:28

24 1. This section, 24:18-24, is placed here only conjecturally. The text is in a bad state and requires many corrections, 'from the daylight'; Hebr. 'on the face of the waters'.

m. Text corr.

n. 'his name' corr.

o. Text corr. The saltwort or mallow, lit. 'the salty plant', is an edible green plant found on the shores of the Dead Sea. V. 25 is after 24:17.

28 a. The original position and significance of this poem in the context of the dialogue are obscure. Its thesis is a preparation for that of the speech of Yahweh: Wisdom is inaccessible to man (cf. Ba 3:9-4:6, though here God reveals it exclusively to Israel) who must be content with 'the fear of God', v. 28, the only 'wisdom' suitable to him. Wisdom is sublime, not subject to cosmic law, but its mistress. Wisdom is an attribute of God, but this literary personification paves the way for the theology of the Word, cf. Pr 8:22-31+.

b. 'smelted' corr.; 'hard' Hebr.

c. 'Mines', lit. 'ravines', 'lamp-folk' corr. (ancient name for miners?). 'hang' corr.

Ps 127:3-5; 128:3	when Shaddai dwelt with me,	5
	and my children were around me;
20:17	when my feet were plunged in cream, and streams of oil poured from the rocks? ^e	6
5:4 +	When I went out to the gate of the city, when I took my seat in the square, as soon as I appeared, the young men stepped aside, while the older men rose to their feet.	7 8
Lv 19:32 21:5 Ws 8:10-12	Men of note interrupted their speeches, and put their fingers on their lips; the voices of rulers were silenced, and their tongues stayed still in their mouths.	9 10
	^d They waited anxiously to hear me, and listened in silence to what I had to say.	21
	When I paused, there was no rejoinder, and my words dropped on them, one by one.	22
Dt 32:2	They waited for me, as men wait for rain, open-mouthed, as if to catch the year's last showers.	23
Pr 16:15	If I smiled at them, it was too good to be true, they watched my face for the least sign of favour.	24
	In a lordly style, I told them which course to take, and like a king amid his armies, I led them where I chose. ^e	25
22:6-9	My praises echoed in every ear, and never an eye but smiled on me;	11
6:14 Ps 72:12f Is 11:4-5	because I freed the poor man when he called, and the orphan who had no one to help him.	12
	When men were dying, I it was who had their blessing; if widows' hearts rejoiced, that was my doing.	13
19:9 Ps 132:9 Is 59:17 Si 4:9	I had dressed myself in righteousness like a garment; justice, for me, was cloak and turban.	14
	I was eyes for the blind, and feet for the lame.	15
Pr 29:7	Who but I was father of the poor? The stranger's case had a hearing from me.	16
	I used to break the fangs of wicked men, and snatch their prey from between their jaws.	17
Pr 30:14	So I thought to myself, 'I shall die in honour, my days like a palm tree's for number.' ^f	18
Ps 1:1-3	My roots thrust out to the water, my leaves freshened by the falling dew at night.	19
	My reputation will never fade, and the bow ^g in my hands will gain new strength.'	20

b. His present misery

	And now I am the laughing-stock of my juniors, the young people, whose fathers I did not consider fit to put with the dogs that looked after my flock. ^a	1
24:4f	The strength of their hands would have been useless to me, enfeebled as they were, ^b worn out by want and hunger.	2
	They used to gnaw the roots of desert plants, and brambles from abandoned ruins; ^c	3

- 4 and plucked mallow, and brushwood leaves, making their meals off roots of broom.
- 5 Outlawed from the society of men, who, as against thieves, raised hue and cry against them,
- 6 they made their dwellings on ravines' steep sides,
in caves or clefts in the rock.
- 7 You could hear them wailing from the bushes,
as they huddled together in the thistles.
- 8 Their children are as worthless a brood as they were,
nameless people, outcasts of society.^d
- 9 And these are the ones that now sing ballads about me,
and make me the talk of the town!
- 10 To them I am loathsome, they stand aloof from me,
do not scruple to spit in my face.
- 11 Because he has unbent my bow and chastened me they cast the bridle from their mouth.^e
- 12 That brood of theirs rises to right of me, stones are their weapons,^f
and they take threatening strides towards me.
- 13 They have cut me off from all escape,
there is no one to check their attack.^g
- 14 They move in, as though through a wide breach,
and I am crushed^h beneath the rubble.
- 15 Terrors turn to meet me,
my confidence is blown awayⁱ as if by the wind;
my hope of safety passes like a cloud.
- 16 And now the life in me trickles away,
days of grief have gripped me.
- 17 At night-time, sickness^j saps my bones,
I am gnawed by wounds that never sleep.
- 18 With immense power it has caught me^k by the clothes, clutching at the collar of my coat.
- 19 It has thrown me into the mud
where I am no better than dust and ashes.
- 20 I cry to you, and you give me no answer;
I stand before you, but you take no notice.^l
- 21 You have grown cruel in your dealings with me,
your hand lies on me, heavy and hostile.
- 22 You carry me up to ride the wind,
tossing me about in a tempest.
- 23 I know it is to death that you are taking me,
the common meeting place of all that lives.
- 24 Yet have I ever laid a hand on the poor
when they cried out for justice in calamity?^m

b. Job begins with the most hidden sins, just pandered to by the eyes, cf. v. 7.

r. Job is not speaking of retaliation, commonly practised and regarded as common law (though cf. Ex 23:4-5; Lv 19:8; Pr 20:22; 25:21-22); he is refusing even to rejoice over an enemy's misfortune or to call down curses on him.

III. THE SPEECHES OF ELIHU^a

Elihu joins the discussion

32 These three men said no more to Job, because he was convinced of his 1 innocence.^b •But another man was infuriated—Elihu son of Barachel the 2 Buzite, of the clan of Ram. He fumed with rage against Job for thinking that Gn 22:21 Jr 25:23 he was right and God was wrong; •and he was equally angry with the three 3 friends for giving up the argument and thus admitting that God could be unjust.^c While they were speaking,^d Elihu had held himself back, because they were older 4 than he was; •but when he saw that the three men had not another word to say 5 in answer, his anger burst out. •Thus Elihu son of Barachel the Buzite spoke 6 next. He said:

Prologue

Ps 119:100

I am still young,
and you are old,
so I was shy, afraid,
to tell you what I know.

12:12; 15:10
Sl 25:4-6

I told myself, 'Old age should speak, 7 advancing years will utter wisdom'.

Pr 2:6

But now I know that it is a breath in man, 8
the inspiration of Shaddai, that gives discernment.^e

Ws 4:8

Great age does not give wisdom, 9 nor longevity sound judgement.

And so I ask you for a hearing;^f 10
now it is my turn to tell what I know.

There was a time when I hoped for much from your speeches: 11

I gave your reasonings a ready hearing, and watched you choose your words.

I gave you all my attention, 12 and I can say that no one gave Job the lie, not one of you disproved his statements.

4:12f; 11:6

So do not dare to say that you have found wisdom, 13
or that your teaching is from God not man.^g

I am not going to follow the same line of argument;^h 14
my reply to Job will be couched in different terms.

They have been nonplussed, baffled for an answer, 15 words have failed them.

I have been waiting. Since they are silent, 16 and have abandoned all efforts to reply,

now I will have my say, 17

my turn has come to say what I know.

For I am filled with words, 18

choked by the rush of them within me.

- 19 I have a feeling in my heart like new wine seeking a vent,
and bursting a brand-new wineskin.ⁱ
20 Nothing will bring relief but speech,
I will open my mouth and give my answer.
21 I shall not show any partiality towards anyone,
nor heap on any fulsome flatteries.
22 I have no skill in flattery,
my creator would soon silence me otherwise.

Job's presumption

- 1 33 Now, Job, be kind enough to listen to my words,
and attend to all I have to say.
2 Now as I open my mouth,
and my tongue shapes words against my palate, 3 my heart shall utter sayings full of wisdom,^a and my lips speak the honest truth.
5 Refute me, if you can.
Prepare your ground to oppose me.
6 See, I am your fellow man, not a god;^b like you, I was fashioned out of clay.
4 God's breath it was that made me,
the breathing of Shaddai that gave me life.
7 Thus, no fear of me need disturb you,
my hand will not lie heavy over you.^c 8 How could you say in my hearing—for the sound of your words did not escape me—9 'I am clean, and sinless,
I am pure, free of all fault.'^d
10 Yet he is inventing grievances^e against me,^f and imagining me his enemy.
11 He puts me in the stocks,
he watches my every step?^g
12 In saying so, I tell you, you are wrong:
God does not fit man's measure.
13 Why do you rail at him
for not replying to you, word for word?
14 God speaks first in one way,
and then in another, but no one notices.
15 He speaks by dreams, and visions that come in the night,

x. Lit. 'Here is my tau' (last letter of the alphabet).

y. The scroll with the accusation written on it. Job, confident of refuting the charge, would wear it as a badge of honour.

z. Editorial note. Vv. 38-40 will be found before v. 16.

32 a. Elihu's intervention comes unexpectedly, nor is it referred to in the epilogue. Elihu's argument, style and vocabulary are very different from those of the dialogue, and certain passages anticipate the speech of Yahweh. The speech of Elihu, therefore, seems to have been added to Jb by another author.

b. Nothing can shake Job's conviction; further words are useless.

c. The text reads '(declaring) Job (in the wrong)', a scribal correction.

d. 'While they were speaking' corr.

e. Elihu contrasts 'charismatic' wisdom, revealed by the spirit, with the wisdom of experience. The traditional wisdom of the East, brought into Israel by the sages, insisted on the primacy of divine wisdom, cf. Pr 21:30, the connection between wisdom and righteousness, cf. Pr 1:7; 10:31; 15:33; Ps 119:99-100, and the conviction that God is the giver of wisdom, Pr 2:6; 16:33. Inspired wisdom was also known outside the schools of the sages, cf. Is 11:2; Gn 41:38-39. In Dn 5:11,12,14, Wisdom is the sphere of operation of the spirit. This is developed in Ws (1:5-7; 7:22-23; 9:17) in preparation for the new revelation of the Spirit in the N.T., cf. 1 Co 2:6-16.

f. Lit. 'Hear you me' versions; 'Hear thou me' Hebr.

when slumber comes on mankind,
 and men are all asleep in bed.
 Then it is he whispers in the ear of man, 16 or may frighten him with fearful sights,^g to turn him away from evil-doing,^h 17
 and make an end of his pride;
 to save his soul from the pit 18
 and his life from the pathway to Sheol.
 With suffering, too, he corrects man on his sick-bed,ⁱ 19
 when his bones keep trembling with palsy;
 when his whole self is revolted by food, 20
 and his appetite spurns dainties;
 when his flesh rots as you watch it, 21
 and his bare^j bones begin to show;
 when his soul is drawing near to the pit, 22
 and his life to the dwelling of the dead.^k
 Then there is an Angel by his side, 23
 a Mediator,^l chosen out of thousands,
 to remind a man where his duty lies,
 to take pity on him and to say, 24
 'Release him from descent into the pit, for I have found a ransom for his life';^m his flesh recovers the bloomⁿ of its youth, 25
 he lives again as he did when he was young.
 He prays to God who has restored him to favour, 26
 and comes, in happiness, to see his face.
 He publishes^o far and wide the news of his vindication, singing before his fellow men this hymn of praise, 27
 'I sinned and left the path of right, but God has not punished me as my sin deserved.'^p
 He has spared my soul from going down into the pit, 28 and is allowing my life to continue in the light.'
 All this God does 29
 again and yet again for man, rescuing his soul from the pit, 30
 and letting the light of life shine bright on him.
 Job, give me your attention, listen well;
 keep silence: I have more to say. 31
 If you have anything to say, refute me, 32 speak out, for I would gladly recognise your innocence.
 If you have not, then listen: 33
 keep silence, while I teach you wisdom.

The three Sages have failed to justify God

34 Elihu continued his speech. He said: 1
 You men of wisdom, listen to my words: 2 lend me your ears, you learned men.
 The ear is a judge of speeches, 3
 just as the palate can tell one food from another.
 Let us discover together where justice lies, 4
 and settle among us what is best.
 Now Job has said, 'I am in the right, 5 and God refuses to grant me justice.
 The judge who judges me is ill-disposed, 6 and though I have not sinned, my wounds are past all cure.'^a

g. Text corr.

h. Lit. 'from his deeds' Vulg. and Targ.; 'from the deed' Hebr. 'make an end' corr.; 'hide', 'cover' Hebr.

i. God's message comes to man in revelation (vv. 15-18) or (v. 14) by ordeal such as Job's.

j. 'bare' corr.

k. 'dwelling of the dead' corr.

l. Lit. 'an interpreter'. The Angel 'interprets' the meaning of suffering to the sick man, makes him realise his sinfulness, v. 27, and intercedes for him with God, v. 24. Cf. 5:1+. This idea has roots in the O.T.: the just man's intercession, cf. 42:8+, and his atonement for others, Is 53:10; the angels as intermediaries of prophetic revelation (Ezekiel and Zechariah) and as man's protectors, Ps 91:11-13, conveying his prayers to God, Tb 12:12; cf. Rv 8:3f. Later, Jewish apocryphal literature exemplifies this doctrine. There is an easy transition from this to the 'guardian angel', or mediating angel, of Christian revelation, cf. Tb 5:4+; Mt 18:10; Ac 12:15.

b. Misreading Job's attitude, Elihu classifies him as one of the 'scornful men' attacked in wisdom literature, cf. Pr 21:24.

c. Classical formulation of the doctrine of retribution. In the N.T. this is usually referred to the Last Day.

d. The argument seems to be this: God is not the vicegerent of the universe; he does not administer the laws of someone else: they are the creation of his own omnipotence. Neither self-interest, therefore, nor force, can make him violate justice. Cf. Ws 11:20-26; 12:11-18.

e. 'draw back' versions; 'set' Hebr. qere. 'his heart' is omitted and 'his breath' transposed.

f. Reading present participle with versions.

g. Lit. 'he removes'; text corr.

h. Lit. 'a stated time' (corr.), i.e. to appear for judgement.

'He strikes them down for their wickedness,
 and makes them prisoners for all to see.
 You may say,^f 'They have so turned from him,
 and so ignored his ways,
 that the poor have cried out to him against them and the wailing of the humble has assailed his ears, yet he is unmoved, and nothing can touch him;
 he hides his face and nobody can see him'.
 But nonetheless he does take pity on nations and on men, freeing the godless man from the meshes of distress.
 If such a man says to God,
 'I was led astray, I will sin no more.
 If I did wrong, tell me about it, if I have been unjust, I will be so no more'— in such a case, do you think he ought to punish him,^g
 you who reject his decisions?
 Since it is you who make this choice, not I,
 let us all share your knowledge!
 But this is what all sensible folk will say,
 and any wise man among my hearers,
 'There is no wisdom in Job's speech,
 his words lack sense.
 Put him unsparingly to the proof since his retorts are the same as those that the wicked make.'^h
 For to sin he adds rebellion, calling justice into question in our midst^m
 and heaping abuse on God.'

God is not indifferent to what happens on earth

35

Elihu continued his speech. He said:

Do you presume to maintain that you are in the right, to insist on your innocence before God,
 even to ask him, 'How does it affect you, what harm has it done you if I have sinned?'^a Well then, this is how I will answer you, and your friends as well.
 Look up at the skies, look at them well,
 and see how high the clouds are above you.^b
 If you sin, what do you achieve against him?
 If you heap up crimes, what is the injury you do him?
 If you are just, what do you give him,
 what benefit does he receive at your hands?
 Your fellow men are the ones to suffer from your crimes, humanity is the gainer if you are good.
 When people groan^c under the weight of oppression,
 or cry out under the tyranny of the mighty,
 no one thinks to ask, 'Where is God, my maker,
 who makes glad songs ring out at dead of night,
 who makes us cleverer than the earth's wild beasts, wiser than the birds in the sky?'
 Then they cry aloud, but he does not answer
 because of man's base pride.
 How idle to maintain that God is deaf, that Shaddai notices nothing!

my cause is exposed before him, and yet I wait and wait'.^d
- 15 Or even, 'His anger never punishes,
he does not seem to know of men's rebellion'.^e
- 16 Hence when Job opens his mouth, it is for idle talk:
his spate of words comes out of ignorance.

21

The real meaning of Job's sufferings^a

5:17; 22:23-30

- 1 36 Elihu went on speaking. He said:
- 2 Be patient with me a little longer while I explain,
for I have more to say on God's behalf.
- 3 I will range far afield for my arguments to prove my Maker just.
- 4 What I say contains no fallacies, I assure you,
you see before you an enlightened man.
- 5 ^bGod does not spurn the blameless man or let the sinner live on in all his power.
- 6 He accords justice to the poor,
and upholds the good man's rights.
- 7 When he raises kings to thrones,
if they grow proud of their unending sway,
- 8 then he fetters them with chains,
binding them in the bondage of distress.
- 9 He shows them all that they have done,
and all the sins of pride they have committed.
- 10 He whispers a message in their ears, urging them to amend themselves.
- 11 If they listen and do as he says,
their days end in happiness,
and their closing years are full of ease.
- 12 If not, then a thunderbolt destroys them,
and death comes on them unawares.
- 13 Yes the stubborn who cherish^c anger,
and when he shackles them, do not ask for help:
- 14 they die in their youth,
or lead a life despised by all.^d
- 15 The wretched, however, he saves by their very wretchedness, and uses distress to open their eyes.^e
- 16 ^fFor you, no less, he plans relief from sorrow.
Once you lived in luxury unbounded,
with rich food piled high on your table.
- 17 But you did not execute justice on the wicked,
you cheated orphaned children of their rights.

j. Objection from experience: notorious sinners are allowed to go unpunished. Elihu replies that this is mercy tempering judgement. Cf. Ws 11:23; 12:2.

k. Job's criticism of God's methods is based on too rigid an idea of distributive justice which, if it were accurate, would admit of no exception and would forbid God ever to pardon. It would follow that Job should not apply this rigid idea to his own case; he should rather believe that God is testing him from a different motive. Elihu's own conclusion, however, is that Job adds contumacy to sin, v. 37.

The first shows that from a very early period Jb was thought to contain the idea of resurrection 'It is written that he will rise again with those whom the Lord will raise up'. The second tells us that Job lived 'in the land of Ausitis on the borders of Idumaea and Arabia'; it identifies Ausitis with Jobab, Gn 36:33.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PSALMS

Lyric poetry in all its forms was popular in Israel from the earliest times, as it was among her neighbours in Egypt, Mesopotamia and Canaan. Some samples are to be found in the historical books: the Song of Moses, Ex 15, the Song of the Well, Nb 21:17-18, the victory song of Deborah, Jg 5, David's elegy on Saul and Jonathan, 2 S 1 etc., and many years later the panegyric of Judas Maccabaeus, 1 M 3:3-9, and of his brother Simon, 1 M 14:4-15; in the New Testament, the Magnificat, Benedictus and Nunc Dimittis. In the prophetic books many passages belong to the same type of literature. Ancient collections once existed of which only the name or a few scraps survive: the Book of the Wars of Yahweh, Nb 21:14, and the Book of the Just, Jos 10:13; 2 S 1:18. But the bulk of the religious poetry of Israel is preserved in the Psalter.

Designation

The Psalter (Greek, Psalterion, the string-instrument used for the accompaniment of these songs or psalms) is a collection of one hundred and fifty psalms. From Ps 10 to Ps 148 the numbering of the Hebrew Bible (adopted here) is one figure ahead of the Greek and the Vulgate which join 9 and 10 and also 114 and 115, but divide both 116 and 147 into two.

The Hebrew name for the Psalter is Tehillim, 'Hymns', but this designation fits only a certain number of psalms. In the 'inscriptions' at the head of most of the psalms the word 'hymn' is in fact used only once (Ps 145). The usual inscription is mizmor, which implies musical accompaniment; our word 'psalm' is therefore apt. Some of these 'psalms' are also entitled 'songs', and this term, standing alone, is found in the inscription of every psalm in the collection known as the 'Songs of Ascents', 120-134. Other designations are less frequent and sometimes difficult to explain.

Literary forms

A more satisfying classification is obtained by study of the various literary types of which there are, broadly speaking, three: hymn, entreaty, thanksgiving. The classification is not exhaustive since there are secondary forms which are exceptional or composite; nor does it always correspond to a grouping of the psalms by subject-matter or purpose.

1. Hymns (Ps 8, 19, 29, 33, 46-48, 76, 84, 87, 93, 96-100, 103-106, 113, 114, 117, 122, 135, 136, 145-150). Their structure is fairly uniform. Each opens with an invitation to praise God. The body of the hymn indicates motives for praise, the wonders of God as shown in nature, particularly in his work of creation, and as shown in human history, particularly in his saving work for his people. The conclusion either repeats the introductory formula or expresses a prayer.

Within this group two subdivisions may be identified according to subject-matter. The 'Songs of Zion', 46, 48, 76, 87, in markedly eschatological terms, hymn the glories of the Holy City, which is both dwelling place of the Most High and goal of pilgrimage, cf. 84 and 122. The 'Psalms of the Kingship of God', particularly 47, 93, 96-98, in a style reminiscent of the prophets, celebrate the universal sovereignty of Yahweh. Since they make use of the vocabulary and metaphors of human coronation ceremonies, the theory has been advanced that these were associated with a feast of the Enthroning of Yahweh possibly celebrated annually in Israel as the Enthroning of Marduk was in Babylon. But there is little evidence of the existence of such a feast in Israel.

2. Entreaty. These supplicatory psalms (or psalms of suffering, laments), unlike the hymns, do not celebrate the glories of God but are addressed directly to him. They usually begin by invoking God, adding either an appeal for help, a prayer, or an expression of confidence. In the body of the psalm an effort is made to win God's sympathy by a description of the psalmist's misfortunes. Here conventional figures of speech are used, so that it is rarely possible to define the historical or personal background of the prayer: waters of the abyss, snares of death or of Sheol, savage beasts (lions, bulls, dogs) symbolising the psalmist's enemies, bones that grow dry or break, heart wildly beating and overcome with fear; all these conventional images recur. In these psalms there are protestations of innocence, 7, 12, 26, and acknowledgment of sin as in the Miserere, 51, and the other penitential psalms. God is reminded of his former kindnesses or reproached for his seeming absence or forgetfulness, 9-10, 22, 44. But expressions of persistent confidence are also common, 3, 5, 42-43, 55-57, 63, 130, etc. and at times the psalm of entreaty is one long confident appeal, 4, 11, 16, 23, 62, 121, 125, 131. Not infrequently the entreaty ends, abruptly on occasion, with a sense of assurance that the prayer is heard, and with an act of thanksgiving, 6, 22, 69, 140.

These entreaties may be collective or individual.

a. Collective entreaties (Ps 12, 44, 60, 74, 79, 80, 83, 85, 106, 123, 129, 137). Some national catastrophe is the occasion: defeat, the destruction of Jerusalem, a national emergency; on these occasions God is entreated to save and restore his people. Two psalms at least, 74 and 137, as also the collection of lamentations attributed to Jeremiah, reflect the situation after the destruction of Jerusalem in 587, and 85 expresses the emotions of those who came back from exile. Ps 106 is a general confession of the sins of the nation.

b. Individual entreaties (Ps 3, 5-7, 13, 17, 22, 25, 26, 28, 31, 35, 38, 42-43, 51, 54-57, 59, 63, 64, 69-71, 77, 86, 102, 120, 130, 140-143). This type is especially common and the content widely varied: besides the perils of death, persecution, exile and senility, these individual prayers beg for deliverance in particular from sickness, slander and sin. The enemies complained of, or denounced, 'those who do evil', are barely defined; but whoever they may be, they are certainly not sorcerers, as some have thought, whose spells these psalms are intended to repel. It was at one time thought that the 'I' of these psalms was collective; this is not the case. Nor is it always the king speaking in the name of the people, as has been recently suggested. The accent is too individual and the absence of allusion to the king's person or office too marked to make these theories tenable. It is doubtless true that several of these psalms have been adapted to serve as national laments, thus 22, 28, 59, 69, 71, 102; it is also true that some, which we shall discuss later, are 'royal' psalms; and lastly, it is true that all of these psalms did ultimately come into collective use (which is why they are found in the Psalter). Nonetheless, these prayers were composed for, or by, individuals to meet individual needs; the faith they express is entirely personal, and their entreaty comes straight from the heart.

3. Thanksgiving. The psalms of entreaty may end, as we have seen, with gratitude to God for granting the request. In the thanksgiving psalms this gratitude becomes the main theme. These are relatively few in number: 18, 21, 30, 33, 34, 40, 65-68, 92, 116, 118, 124, 129, 138, 144. Some are collective, others individual. The people as a whole thanks God for danger averted, a successful harvest, divine favour shown to the king. The individual, having recalled past distress and God's answer to his prayer, expresses his gratitude and exhorts all good men to join him in praising God. This last is often the occasion for a doctrinal development. The literary structure of the thanksgiving psalms resembles that of the hymns.

4. Exceptional and composite forms. The three forms we have just described are not in watertight compartments: there is very often a mutual infiltration. Lamentation may be preceded by confident prayer, 27, 31, or followed by thanksgiving, 28, 57. Ps 89 begins as a hymn, passes into a long prophetic oracle and ends with a lament. Ps 119 throughout is a hymn to the Law but it is also an individual lament and it develops a theme of the wisdom literature. This last characteristic, already noticed in certain thanksgiving psalms, shows that not a few topics are found in the Psalter which in themselves are unnatural to lyric poetry. Wisdom themes may take such a prominent place that we speak, somewhat inaccurately, of 'Didactic Psalms'. Ps 1, 112, 127, are wisdom literature pure and simple. Other psalms, however, preserve something of their lyrical quality: 25 is akin to the lamentations, 32, 37, 73, to the thanksgiving psalms, etc.

Certain other psalms have incorporated prophetic oracles, or are simply expanded oracles, 2, 50, 75, 81, 82, 85, 95, 110. These have recently been explained as actual oracles delivered in the course of Temple ceremonies by priest or prophet. But it is still often maintained that they had no direct connection with the Temple worship and merely adopted the prophetic style. It is an open question; but there is no doubt that on the one hand the relationship between Psalms and prophetic literature extends beyond the oracles themselves to many other themes (theophanies, metaphors of fire, chalice, crucible, etc.) and, on the other hand, that some connection must be recognised between Psalms and Temple worship. We shall return to this point.

Royal psalms and messianic psalms

We have already drawn attention to the prophetic element in the Psalter by mentioning the eschatological character of the Songs of Zion and of the Psalms of the Kingship of God. The universal renewal foretold by these poems is the messianic age; other psalms, more specifically, speak of the Messiah in person.

Scattered throughout the Psalter, and of varying literary form, is a group of royal psalms. These are divine oracles addressed to the king, 2, 110, prayers for the king, 20, 61, 72, 84, a thanksgiving for the king, 21, prayers of the king himself, 18, 28, 63, 101, a royal procession song, 132, a hymn of the king, 144, even a bridal ode for a royal marriage, 45. They are ancient poems dating from the time of the monarchy and reflecting the idiom and ceremonial of the court. As originally composed they referred to the king as a contemporary, and had a royal successor to David in mind, or even (45 according to one theory) a monarch of the Northern Kingdom.

But the king of the chosen people is divinely anointed (in Hebrew a 'messiah', an anointed one); he is the recipient of God's blessing, and this blessing ensures the prosperity of his people. But this is not all. The divine promises to the dynasty of David made it possible to glimpse, beyond this king, another and privileged descendant of David, in whom God would take particular delight and whom he would designate to do his saving work. This king is the Anointed without equal, the Messiah. The prophecy of Nathan, 2 S 7, is the first in this series of prophecies relating to the Messiah, son of David. This promise was essentially a promise of stability for the House of David, and this is the sense in which Ps 89:29-38 and 132:11-12 quote it; but it was not long before it was interpreted as referring to an individual, and thus in Ac 2:30 comes to be applied to Christ.

It was natural, therefore, for some of these ancient royal songs, remaining in use after the fall of the monarchy, and included with minor adjustments and additions in the Psalter, to become messianic psalms in the strictest sense of the word. The messianic character of 2, 72, 110 is plain; and 110 is more frequently quoted in the New Testament than any other psalm. Even the wedding song of 45, interpreted in the light of the marriage allegory beloved of the prophets, came to express the union of the Messiah with his new Israel, and Heb 1:8 applies it to Christ. Following the same trend, the New Testament and early Christian tradition apply other psalms to Christ which, although not royal psalms, anticipated the situation and mind of the Messiah, the essentially Good Man, thus 16 and 22 and selected passages from many psalms, particularly 8, 35, 40, 41, 68, 69, 97, 102, 118, 119. Similarly, the Kingship Psalms have been applied to the kingship of Christ. Even if these applications go beyond the immediate literal sense of the text applied, they are legitimate in that the hopes inspiring the Psalter could not be fully realised until the coming of the Son of God to earth.

The psalms and public worship

The Psalter is Israel's hymn-book. The Temple, as we know, had its cantors from the beginning, though they are not mentioned until after the Exile. The festivals of Yahweh were celebrated with song and dance, Jg 21:19-21; 2 S 6:5,16. According to Am 5:23, sacrifice was offered to the accompaniment of song, and since the court had its cantors in David's day, 2 S 19:36, and (according to the Annals of Sennacherib) in the time of Hezekiah, the Temple of Solomon like all the great sanctuaries of the East must have had its cantors also. Psalms are in fact attributed to Asaph, to the sons of Korah, to Heman and to Ethan (or Jeduthun) who, according to Chronicles, were all cantors in the pre-exilic Temple. Tradition attributes many psalms to David and also credits him with organising public worship, including the cantors, 1 Ch 25; and this harmonises with those ancient texts representing him as dancing and singing in the presence of Yahweh, 2 S 6:5,16.

Many of the psalms carry musical or liturgical directions. The text of some refers to a public liturgy, 20, 26, 27, 66, 81, 107, 116, 134, 135. These last, and others, 48, 65, 95, 96, 118, were evidently recited in the Temple court. The Songs of Ascents, 120-134, like 84, were songs used on the Temple pilgrimage. These are some of the clearest examples, but are enough to show that many psalms, even individual psalms, were composed for Temple worship. Others, if not composed primarily for this purpose, have at least been adapted for it by the addition of benedictions, 125, 128, 129.

It is therefore certain that the psalms were related to public worship and that the Psalter, taken as a whole, is liturgical in character. But there is rarely enough evidence to identify the ceremony or feast for which any given psalm was used. The Hebrew title of 92 assigns it to the sabbath day, and the Greek titles of 24, 48, 93, 94 apportion them severally to other days of the week. Ps 30 was used, according to the Hebrew, for the feast of Dedication, and 29, according to the Greek, for the feast of Tabernacles. These instructions are perhaps later additions, but, like the detailed allocations made in the Jewish period, prove that the Psalter was the hymn-book of Temple and synagogue before it was adopted by the Christian Church.

Authors and dates

The inscriptions attribute seventy-three psalms to David, twelve to Asaph, eleven to the sons of Korah, one each to Heman, Ethan (or Jeduthun), Moses and Solomon. The inscriptions in the Greek version do not always correspond with the Hebrew text and credit David with eighty-two psalms. The Syriac version shows still greater divergence.

It is possible that the original purpose of these inscriptions was not to name the actual author. The Hebrew formula used merely establishes some kind of relationship between the psalm and the person named, either because of an aptness of theme or because the psalm belonged to a collection named after him. The psalms 'for (or 'of') the sons of Korah' were part of the repertoire of this family of cantors, just as the numerous psalms 'for the choirmaster', 4, 5, 6, 8, etc., were pieces performed under his direction. Similarly there was Asaph's collection and a Davidic collection. But it was not long before these notices of origin were taken to be indications of authorship, and to the inscription 'of David' at the head of some psalms were added details of the exact circumstances in the life of the king at the time when these psalms were composed, 3, 7, 18, 34, 51, 52, 54, etc. Finally tradition made David the author not only of the psalms that bear his name but of the whole Psalter.

Notwithstanding mistaken deductions of this kind, it would be wrong to neglect the ancient and valuable information embodied in the inscriptions. It is reasonable to admit that the collections of Asaph and the sons of Korah were composed by poets attached to the Temple. It is equally reasonable to hold that there must be some connection between the Davidic collection and David himself. Taking into account what the historical books have to say of his musical talent, 1 S 16:16-18; cf. Am 6:5, his poetic gifts, 2 S 1:19-27; 3:33-34, and his love of the liturgy, 2 S 6:5,15-16, it would seem inevitable that the Psalter should contain some of David's compositions. Indeed, Ps 18 is simply a different edition of a poem attributed to David in 2 S 22. Not all the psalms of the Davidic collection are by him, no doubt, but the collection must have had a few of these for nucleus. It is difficult, however, to be more definite than this. The Hebrew inscriptions are not decisive, as we have seen, and when the New Testament writers quote a psalm as being by David, they are speaking as their contemporaries spoke. Even so, this evidence should not be rejected without good reason, and David, who 'sang the songs of Israel', 2 S 23:1, must be conceded an essential part in the formation of the religious poetry of the Chosen People.

The original impulse given by David continued to have effects and the Psalter covers several centuries of poetic activity. After an erroneous assessment, assigning a very late date to the majority of the psalms, more moderate views now prevail. Apart from those psalms which may have been composed by David, many go back to the monarchical period, in particular all the royal psalms, but their content is too general for more than conjectural dating. The Psalms of the Kingship of God, on the other hand, with their many echoes of earlier psalms and of the second part of Isaiah, must have been written during the Exile, as also those, such as 137, which speak of the destruction of Jerusalem and the deportation. Ps 126 celebrates the return from exile. The period that followed seems to have been fertile in psalmody. The restored Temple saw a refflorescence of public worship, the status of the cantors was so raised that they became assimilated with the Levites, while sages like Ben Sira adopted psalm form to popularise their teaching. Are any psalms of later date than the end of the Persian period? Are there any Maccabaeen psalms? The question arises in particular connection with 44, 74, 79, 83, but the arguments advanced are not strong enough to prove so late a date of composition.

Formation of the Psalter

The Psalter as we have it is the result of lengthy activity. At first there were partial collections. Ps 72 (though its title assigns it to Solomon) is followed by the note: 'End of the prayers of David', although there are non-Davidic psalms before it and Davidic psalms after it. In fact there are two Davidic groups, 3-41 and 51-72, in which every psalm (except 72 and four anonymous psalms) is attributed to David. Originally there must have been other separate collections of the same sort: the psalters of Asaph, 50 and 73-83, of the sons of Korah, 42-49 and 84, 85, 87, 88, of Ascents, 120-134, of the Hallel, 105-107, 113-118, 135, 136, 146-150. That there were several collections existing side by side is proved by the way certain psalms duplicate each other almost word for word, thus 14 and 53; 40:13-17 and 70; 108 with 57:7-11 and 60:5-12.

Furthermore, the activities of the collectors can be detected in the use of the divine names: 'Yahweh' is almost exclusively used in 1-41 (first Davidic group), 'Elohim' in 42-83 (covering the second Davidic group; part of the psalter of the sons of Korah; psalter of Asaph), all the remainder are 'Yahwistic' with the exception of 108 (combination of the two 'Elohistic' psalms 57 and 60). This second 'Yahwistic' group, in which many of the psalms are anonymous and in which there is considerable quotation of, or borrowing from, earlier literature, must be the most recent group of all; though this does not prejudice the dating of individual psalms within the group.

The Psalter was ultimately divided into five books, doubtless on the model of the Pentateuch; the books were divided from each other by short doxologies: 41:13; 72:18-20; 89:51; 106:48. Ps 150 is a protracted final doxology while 1 serves as an introduction to the whole Psalter.

Spiritual value

The spiritual riches of the Psalter need no commendation. The psalms were the prayers of the Old Testament in which God inspired the feeling that his children ought to have towards him and the words they ought to use when speaking to him. They were recited by Jesus himself, by the Virgin Mary, the apostles and the early martyrs. The Christian Church has adopted them unchanged for her official prayer. Unchanged: the cries of praise, entreaty and thanksgiving, wrung from the psalmists by events of their own times and by their personal experiences, have a universal note, expressing as they do the attitude that every man should have towards God. Unchanged as regards the words, but with a great enrichment of the sense: in the New Covenant, the faithful man praises and thanks God for unveiling the secret of His inmost nature, for redeeming him by the blood of his Son, for filling him with his Spirit; hence each psalm ends with the trinitarian doxology: Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit. The ancient entreaties have become more ardent since the last supper, the cross and the resurrection have taught mankind the infinite quality of the love of God, the universality and gravity of sin, the glory promised to the faithful. The hopes sung by the psalmists have been fulfilled, the Messiah has come, he reigns and all nations are summoned to praise him.

|| Jon 2:10

Pause 28:9

1 a. Ps 1 and 2 serve as preface to the Psalter; they summarise its moral teaching and messianic ideas. Ps 1 contrasts 'the two ways' to the advantage of the Law, man's true way to happiness. Cf. 19:7-14 and 119.

b. Reading in an undertone, a meditative prayer (63:6; 77:12; 143:5) as opposed to the loud cry of the sufferer (3:4; 5:2 etc.).

c. The great Judgement to come, according to the Massoretic text ('the' Judgement); any divine judgement in this life, according to Greek ('a' judgement).

2 a. Jewish and Christian tradition regard this psalm as messianic in the same way as 110 on which it possibly depends. Its horizon is the future messianic age. In the liturgy it is used for feasts of the incarnate Word.

b. The rebels speak, v. 3, then Yahweh himself, v. 6, finally the Messiah, v. 7f. By consecrating him king of Israel, v. 6, God pronounces him 'his son'; the phrase in this context is familiar in the ancient East, but in conjunction with the messianic promise of 2 S 7 it will be given a deeper meaning; Heb 1:5, followed by Christian tradition and liturgy, applies v. 7 to the eternal generation of the Word.

c. The messianic King is here portrayed as a warrior, a traditional representation.

d. Corr. Hebr. 'and shake with trembling; kiss the Son'.

3 a. The Fathers apply this passage to the death and resurrection of Christ.

4 a. Trust and thanks: God is the one source of happiness. Vv. 4 and 8 show that it is an evening prayer.

b. Versions; 'answer me!' Hebr.

c. Lit. 'why be dull-hearted' Greek; 'my honour is shamed' Hebr.

d. We should shrink from offending God and pray to him in the calm silence of adoration. 'spend... meditation' lit. 'speak in your hearts on your beds and be silent'.

e. Biblical phrase, common in the Psalter, for royal or divine favour. Lit. 'Lift up the light of your face on us'. The Greek and Vulg. translation 'The light of your face is sealed (or: signed) on us' has been applied in the baptismal liturgy to the signing with the baptismal 'character' which makes the Christian a 'child of the light', Lk 16:8; Jn 8:12+; 1 Th 5:5; Ep 5:8.

5 a. The morning is regarded as the time of God's favour, 17:15+.

b. Translations vary: I present my request; I offer my prayer; I prepare my sacrifice. . .

c. Lit 'because of my enemies'.

d. Such appeals for vengeance on the enemies of God or the psalmist are very frequent, cf. for example 10:15; 31:17; 54:5; 58:6f; 59:11f; 69:22-28; 79:12; 83:9-18; 104:35; 109:6-20; 125:5; 137:7-9; 139:19-22; 140:9-11. Under the Old Covenant retribution in this life was still the rule, and against this background these appeals betray simply a hunger for justice. Personal experience and growing revelation will show the inadequacy of this outlook: the way of God's justice must remain a mystery to man (cf. Jb). The N.T. refines the outlook still further: justice must give way to love, Mt 5:43-48. Thus purged of personal resentment, the psalms of revenge remain, for the Church and the individual Christian, an expression of that same hunger for justice in the face of forces which are ever-present in the world.

6 a. First of the seven 'Penitential Psalms' (32,38, 51,102,130,143). A sick man speaks to God.

b. The Hebr. word means life-giving breath (and by extension 'throat') which is the source of life and which disappears at death. 'My soul' is often used for the reflexive pronoun 'myself', as are also 'my life', 'my glory', 'my face'.

c. In Sheol, cf. Nb 16:33+, the dead are silent shadows of their former selves and can no longer speak with God, Is 38:18; Ps 30:9; 88:5,10-12.

d. 'I have grown old' Greek. The psalmist's 'foes' regard the sick man's misfortune as a punishment for some hidden sin (cf. Job's friends). The theme is elaborated in other places (31; 35; 38; 69).

7 a. Two protestations of innocence have been combined in this psalm. The first, vv. 1-5, 12b-16, in the wisdom style, demands strict retaliation; the second, vv. 6-12a, modelled on Jeremiah, appeals for the intervention of God the Judge. V. 17 is a liturgical conclusion.

b. The versions read 'Cushite', cf. 2 S 18:21, the messenger who informed David of the death of Absalom. But 'the Benjaminite' suggests one of David's enemies: Saul, Sheba or Shimei.

c. The law of talion, cf. Ex 21:25+, required that good be rendered for good, evil for evil. The text must not be watered down as in the versions 'if I requited with evil the man who wronged me', or, 'robbed (my persecutor)'; the morality of gospel times has yet to come, Mt 5:38f.

d. 'me'; lit. 'my soul', cf. 6:6+.

e. Lit. 'my glory', but the word also means 'liver', for the Semites the seat of thought and emotion. 'Glory' also means 'soul'. The 'dust' is that of the tomb.

f. 'awake, my God' (Greek) comes after 'enemies' in the text.

g. This gloss indicates that the peoples are gathered for judgement.

h. The text adds 'that is on me'.

i. 'slow to (show his) anger' Greek; absent from Hebr.

j. These lines should follow v. 5; 'enemy' has had, therefore, to be supplied.

k. The Hebr. verb zamar, Greek psallein, strictly means to play on a string instrument, or to sing with musical accompaniment.

8 a. Possibly the harp, or a Philistine melody.

b. Corr. 'may you (sing.) give' Hebr.

c. Christ quoted this text when the children had acclaimed his solemn entry into Jerusalem. In the liturgy it is used for the feast of the Holy Innocents (Mt 2:16).

d. I.e., the firmament or heavenly vault (Gn 1:6) on which stands the impregnable citadel from which God routs his foes (Mi 1:2; Ps 2:4; 150:1).

e. The author is thinking of man in comparison with the mysterious beings that constitute the court of Yahweh, Ps 29:1+, the 'angels' of Greek and Vulg. Cf. Ps 45:6+.

f. Man, frail yet made in the likeness of God, on the border between the spiritual and material worlds, rules the natural creation.

9 a. Ps 9 and 10 were originally one poem (as they are in Greek and Vulg.). The spokesman of the 'poor', cf. Zp 2:3+, describes in a hymn and invokes in a prayer the execution of God's judgement on the wicked. The psalm is 'alphabetical' (cf. Pr 31:10+) but in our present text, which is in a poor state, several letters have no corresponding strophe.

b. Translation uncertain.

c. The divine judgement is regarded as already given; the 'day of Yahweh' will reveal its content. This eschatological theme is common in Ps.

b. Lit. 'The grasping man blesses and spurns Yahweh, & the wicked, his anger on high...' We follow the Greek punctuation. Cf. v. 13. 'blesses' is a euphemism as in 1 K 21:10,13 and Jb 1:5,11; 2:5,9.

c. Denying the action of Providence, he speaks and acts as if there were no God at all.

d. 'reeds' cf. Is 35:7; Hebr., wrongly vocalised, 'settlements'.

e. 'questing of eye' absent from Hebr. 'stoops' Greek. 'into his power': meaning uncertain.

11 a. The faithful man is hunted like a bird, 55:6; 91:3; 124:7. The hill country is the place of refuge, Gn 19:17; Ezk 7:16; Ps 121:1; Mt 24:16.

b. 'the world' versions.

c. 'coals' Symmachus; 'snare's' Hebr.

d. Lit. 'a scorching wind will be their cup-portion'.

This is a metaphor for destiny (the cup may have been used to contain lots), either happy (16:5; 23:5) or more frequently unhappy (75:8; Mt 20:22; Rv 14:10; 16:19); the cup of divine anger is one of the prophetic themes, Jr 25:15; Hg 2:16; Ezk 23:31f; Is 51:17+; Lm 4:21.

e. Corr.; the Hebr. reading 'his face will look on the upright' is perhaps the result of a theological scruple, since man cannot see God, cf. Ex 33:20+. Nevertheless, the expression 'to contemplate God's face' is common in Ps in the sense of standing in the presence of God like servants before a kindly master (15:1), cf. 16:11; 17:15; 24:6; 27:8+; 105:4; Is 38:11; Gn 33:10; Jb 33:26.

12 a. Prayer in the manner of the prophets. Human deceit is contrasted with God's reliability in word and promise.

b. Lit. 'smelted at the going into the earth', i.e. already refined when found. God's word is pure of any deceit.

c. Lit. 'like a mound'.

13 a. Greek and Vulg. add 'Let me sing to the name of Yahweh the Most High'. Cf. 7:17.

14 a. The 'godless' man, cf. 10:4+, is a fool. His hour will come. Cf. Jr 5:12f.

b. Certain Greek MSS and Vulg. insert 3 verses here, quoted in Rm 3:10-18; they are to be found in 5:9; 140:3; 10:7; Pr 1:16; Is 59:7-8; Ps 36:1.

c. Figure of speech derived from the prophets.

d. Lit. 'where there was no dread' (Greek and 53) absent from Hebr. Either such fear as has never been known before, or mysterious fear without apparent cause, cf. Lv 26:36; Dt 28:67; 1 S 14:15; 2 Ch 14:13; Jb 3:25.

Prayer Of David

- 1 Yahweh, hear the plea of virtue,

lend an ear to my prayer,
my lips free from dishonesty.
- 2 From your presence will my sentence come,
your eyes are fixed on what is right.
- 3 You probe my heart, examine me at night,
you test me yet find nothing, no murmuring from me:
my mouth has never sinned •as most men's do.
- 4 No, I have treasured the words from your lips;
in the path prescribed •walking deliberately in your footsteps, so that my feet do not slip.
- 5 I invoke you, God, and you answer me;
turn your ear to me, hear what I say,
display your marvellous kindness, saviour of fugitives!
- 6 From those who revolt against you guard me like the pupil of your eye;
hide me in the shadow of your wings
from the onslaughts of the wicked.

entrenched in their fat, their mouths utter arrogant claims; •now they are closing in,
they have eyes for nothing but to see me overthrown.

e. The Hebr. verb (85:1; 126:1; Am 9:14; Ho 6:11; Jr 29:14, etc.; Ezk 16:53; Dt 30:3; Jb 42:10) means primarily the return from exile but frequently has the wider sense of re-establishing, restoring, changing the fortune.

15 a. Summary of moral conduct, cf. the moral precepts of the Decalogue, Ex 20:1+.

b. God's loyal subjects. The phrase, common in Ps, is synonymous with 'faithful', 'pious', 'devout'. Later it is used for all in sympathy with Judaism, cf. Ac 2:11+; 10:2+.

16 a. Meaning uncertain.

b. Vv. 2-3 are addressed to the psalmist's contemporaries who thought they could combine the worship of Yahweh as supreme god, v. 2, with that of local deities (lit. 'holy ones', cf. 1 S 2:2), v. 3; such syncretism was Israel's great and persistent temptation. The translation changes (supported by the versions) only two vowels of the Hebr. text, keeping all the consonants.

c. Line corr. 'idols', lit. 'weaknesses' (euphemism).

d. Alluding to the levitical state. Their portion (the traditional 'cup', cf. 11:6+, or 'measuring line', Mt 2:4-5) is Yahweh. The name Hilkiah, 'Yahweh-is-my-portion', is common.

e. Lit. 'loins', like the heart, the seat of intimate thought and sentiment, cf. Jr 11:20; Pr 23:16; Ps 7:9.

f. Lit. 'my glory', but cf. 7:5+.

g. The psalmist has set his heart on Yahweh. His lively faith and total commitment to God call for a union that defies dissolution, hence he must pray to escape death which would break that union, 6:5, cf. 49:15+. The hope, though vague as yet, is leading towards a belief in resurrection, Dn 12:2; 2 M 7:9+. The versions translate 'pit' by 'corruption'. The text, which was applied to the Messiah in pre-Christian Judaism, finds its full sense in the resurrection of Christ.

17 a. The text reads 'our steps' at the beginning.

b. Text uncertain.

c. Lit. 'from that which you hide'. Scarcely a question of punishment here, as many think, but of passing pleasures to which the psalmist prefers God's friendship. 'have all the sons they wish for' Greek.

Song of triumph for the king^a

For the choirmaster. Of David, the servant of Yahweh, who addressed the words of this song to Yahweh at the time when Yahweh delivered him from the power of his enemies and of Saul. He said:

I love you, Yahweh, my strength
(my saviour, you rescue me from violence.)^b 1

Yahweh is my rock and my bastion,
my deliverer is my God. 2

I take shelter in him, my rock,^c
my shield, my horn of salvation,^d
my stronghold and my refuge.
From violence you rescue me.

He is to be praised; on Yahweh I call and am saved from my enemies. 3

The waves^e of death encircled me,
the torrents of Belial burst on me;
the cords of Sheol girdled me,
the snares of death were before me. 4 5

In my distress I called to Yahweh and to my God I cried;
from his Temple he heard my voice,
my cry came to his ears. 6

Then the earth^f quivered and quaked,
the foundations of the mountains trembled (they quivered because he was angry);
from his nostrils a smoke ascended,
and from his mouth a fire that consumed (live embers were kindled at it). 7 8

He bent the heavens and came down,
a dark cloud under his feet;
he mounted a cherub^g and flew,
and soared on the wings of the wind. 9 10

Darkness he made a veil to surround him, his tent a watery darkness, dense cloud;
before him a flash enkindled hail and fiery embers. 11 12

Yahweh thundered from heaven,
the Most High made his voice heard;
he let his arrows fly and scattered them,
launched the lightnings and routed them. 13 14

The bed of the seas was revealed,
the foundations of the world were laid bare,
at your muttered threat, Yahweh,
at the blast of your nostrils' breath. 15

Yahweh, the sun of righteousness^a*For the choirmaster Psalm Of David*

- 3 No utterance at all, no speech, Si 43▲

no sound that anyone can hear;^b
- 4 yet their voice goes out through all the earth, and their message to the ends of the world.
- 5 High above, he pitched a tent for the sun, Jb 9:7
who comes out of his pavilion like a bridegroom, exulting like a hero to run his race.^c
- 6 He has his rising on the edge of heaven, 65:8
the end of his course is its furthest edge, and nothing can escape his heat.
- 7 The Law of Yahweh is perfect, 12:6; 119
new life for the soul;
the decree of Yahweh is trustworthy, Dt 4:6
wisdom for the simple.
- 8 The precepts of Yahweh are upright,
joy for the heart;
the commandment of Yahweh is clear,
light for the eyes.
- 9 The fear of Yahweh is pure, 119:89
lasting for ever;
the judgements of Yahweh are true,
righteous, every one,
- 10 more desirable than gold, 119:127
even than the finest gold;
his words^d are sweeter than honey, 119:103
Si 24:20
even than honey that drips from the comb.
- 11 Thus your servant is formed by them, 119:33 observance brings great reward.
- 12 But who can detect his own failings?
Wash out my hidden faults.
- 13 And from pride^e preserve your servant,
never let it dominate me.
So shall I be above reproach,
free from grave sin.
- 14 May the words of my mouth always^f find favour,
and the whispering of my heart,
in your presence, Yahweh,
my Rock, my Redeemer!^g

i. Lit. 'your gentle care fosters me', cf. 71:21; Ezk 19:2.

19 a. This hymn celebrates Yahweh as creator of the heavens, and particularly of the sun (vv. 4b-6), and the author of the Law; Nature and Law both manifest the perfection of God. In the ancient East the sun symbolised justice, cf. MI 3:20; Ws 5:6; hence the conjunction of the psalm's two sections. The Christmas liturgy applies the psalm to the Word of God, the Sun of Righteousness, MI 3:20; Jn 1:9; Lk 1:78. V. 4 is applied to the apostles, cf. Rm 10:18.

b. The versions interpret '(theirs is not a language) whose sound cannot be heard'; but in what follows there is allusion to the Assyro-Babylonian idea that the stars are the silent 'writing of the heavens'.

c. The psalmist, speaking of the sun as a creature of God, uses expressions found also in Babylonian mythology.

d. 'his words' corr.; 'plentiful and' Hebr.

e. 'from pride', lit. 'from proud men' (or 'proud things'); Greek 'alien (gods)', cf. Jr 3:13 (false gods). Ps 119 persistently contrasts pride with obedience to the Law.

f. 'always' Greek.

g. In Hebr. goel. Originally meaning the avenger of blood, cf. Nb 35:19+, the word is used of Yahweh as avenger, saviour and rescuer of his servants and his people from death, in Is (41:14; 44:6), and in the psalms, 9:12; 49:7,15; 69:18; 72:14; 74:2; 77:15; 103:4; 107:2.

20 a. Prayer for the king as he sets out to war, cf. 1 K 8:44; 2 Ch 20:18f. Each of the two sections is followed by a choral antiphon.

b. 'his anointed' (Greek christos), cf. Ex 30:22+; 1 S 9:26+: the king of Israel.

c. 'answer us' versions; 'he answers us' Hebr.

21 a. This psalm of two sections followed by choral antiphons, vv. 7 and 13, strikes a messianic and eschatological note, and for this reason is applied to Christ the King.

b. Lit. 'in the day of your face', i.e., when you come to judge. Vv. 8-12 are addressed to the king, but the expression 'the day of your face' and the mention of fire suggest a more distant, eschatological perspective. It is possible that in the original text this passage was addressed to Yahweh (cf. Greek MSS).

22 a. This lament and entreaty of an innocent man under persecution ends in thanksgiving for his rescue, vv. 22-26, and deserves its place in the national liturgy by virtue of v. 23 and its conclusion, vv. 27-31, where the coming of the kingdom of God throughout the world seems to result from the ordeal of the faithful servant. Reminiscent of the poem of the suffering servant in Is 52:13-53:12, this psalm, the opening line of which was spoken by Christ on the cross, and into which the evangelists read an anticipatory description of several episodes in the Passion, is messianic at least in the typical sense.

b. Possibly the first words of a familiar song. Versions 'For morning solace'.

c. Or 'You who dwell in the sanctuary, the praise of Israel', cf. Greek.

d. 'He relied on' versions; 'Rely on' Hebr.

(41:20; 42:16) etc.

23 a. The care of God for the righteous, illustrated by two images: the shepherd, vv. 1-4, and the host of the messianic banquet, vv. 5-6. The psalm is traditionally applied to the sacramental life, particularly to baptism and the Eucharist.

b. Hebr. inserts 'you are' before 'beside me'.

c. Gesture of hospitality in the East, Am 6:6; Ps 92:10; 133:2; Qo 9:8; Lk 7:46.

d. 'my home' versions; 'I shall return to' Hebr.

24 a. Possibly vv. 7-10 refer to the translation of the ark in the days of David, 2 S 6:12-16, cf. Ps 68:24f; 132. The first part, vv. 1-6, seems to be of later date, cf. Ps 15: the creator of the universe is also the befriender of the upright.

b. The earth is represented as resting on the waters of the nether ocean (cf. Ex 20:4).

27 a. 'awning' and 'tent': the Temple in Jerusalem.

b. 'seek (sing.) his face' corr.; 'seek (plur.) my face' Hebr. This expression, cf. Am 5:4+, originally signifying 'to consult Yahweh' in his sanctuary, 2 S 21:1, took on a wider sense: to seek to know God to live in his presence. To 'seek God', Dt 4:29; Ps 40:16; 69:6; 105:3, etc., is to serve him faithfully. Cf. Am 5:4+.

c. Or 'Oh, if I were sure of seeing!'

28 a. 'Yahweh' here and in v. 4 is absent from Hebr.

b. 'my flesh has bloomed again' Greek.

c. The parallelism suggests that the 'anointed' is here the people of God consecrated to his service, cf. Ex 19:6+; Hab 3:13; Ps 105:15, and not the king, 20:6, or the high priest, 84:9.

Prayer in time of ordeal

For the choirmaster Psalm Of David

- 1 In you, Yahweh, I take shelter; =71:1-2
never let me be disgraced.
In your righteousness deliver me, rescue me,^a
- 2 turn your ear to me, make haste!

Be a sheltering rock for me, 18:2; 71:3
a walled fortress to save me!
- 3 For you are my rock, my fortress;
for the sake of your name, guide me, lead me!
- 4 Pull me out of the net they have spread for me,
for you are my refuge;
- 5 into your hands I commit my spirit, [✓]Lk 23:46
you have redeemed me, Yahweh. [✓]Ac 7:59
- 6 God of truth, •you hate^b
those who serve worthless idols;
but I put my trust in Yahweh:
- 7 I will exult, and rejoice in your love!

You, who have seen my wretchedness, 10:14
and known the miseries of my soul, have not handed me over to the enemy,
you have given my feet space and to spare.
- 9 Take pity on me, Yahweh, 35; 38; 69;
I am in trouble now. 71
Grief wastes away my eye,
my throat, my inmost parts.

29 a. The tempest, cf. Ex 13:22+ and Ex 19:16+, evokes the glory and power of God, subduing the enemies of Israel and assuring peace to the Chosen People.

b. Lit. 'sons of the gods', cf. 82:1; 89:6; Jb 1:6+, i.e. the angels who constitute the heavenly court. The passage is sometimes applied to Israel, the 'son of God', Ex 4:22; Dt 14:1; Ho 11:1. After this line Greek and Vulg. add 'Bring sons of rams to Yahweh'.

c. 'court' versions; 'adornments' Hebr. The 'sacred court' is heaven, invisible counterpart of the Temple of Jerusalem, 11:4; 78:69.

d. Sidonian name for Lebanon, Dt 3:9.

e. God sharpens arrows to transfix his enemies, cf. 18:14; Dt 32:23,42; Hab 3:11; Zc 9:14.

f. 'the terebinths' corr.; '(makes) the hinds (calve)' Hebr. The tall trees, here and in v. 5, perhaps symbolise the proud enemies of God and of his people, cf. Is 2:13; 10:18,33; 32:19; Jr 21:14; 46:23; Ezk 21:2; Zc 11:2.

g. Either in heaven, v. 2, or in the Temple where the liturgy echoes the praise of the heavenly court, or else in the Holy Land, consecrated to Yahweh, 114:2, and his dwelling place, Jr 12:7; Zc 9:8.

h. The Flood was the first great act of God's triumphant justice which will be always exercised on behalf of his people.

30 a. Lit. 'in the evening, tears pass the night'.

b. Text corr.; 'on my mountain you have set up a fortress' Hebr. Allusion to Zion, or a metaphor of safety.

c. 'my God' Greek; 'Lord' Hebr.

d. I.e. my death; life resides in the blood, Gn 9:6+; Lv 1:5+; Ps 72:14 and 116:15.

31 a. 'rescue' Greek; it is put after 'make haste' in Hebr.

b. 'you hate' versions; 'I hate' Hebr.

Of David Poem

- 1 Happy the man whose fault is forgiven, whose sin is blotted out;^b
- 2 happy the man whom Yahweh accuses of no guilt,
whose spirit is incapable of deceit!
- 3 All the time I kept silent, my bones were wasting away with groans, day in, day out;
- 4 day and night your hand
lay heavy on me;
my heart grew parched as stubble^c
in summer drought. Pause
- 5 At last I admitted to you I had sinned;
no longer concealing my guilt,
I said, 'I will go to Yahweh
and confess my fault'.
And you, you have forgiven the wrong I did,
have pardoned^d my sin. Pause
- 6 That is why each of your servants prays to you in time of trouble;^e
even if floods come rushing down,
they will never reach him.
- 7 You are a hiding place for me,
you guard me when in trouble,
you surround me with songs^f of deliverance. Pause
- 8 I will instruct you, and teach you the way to go;
I will watch over you and be your adviser.
- 9 Do not be like senseless horse or mule that need bit and bridle to curb their spirit^g (to let you get near them).
- 10 Many torments await the wicked,
but grace enfolds the man who trusts in Yahweh.
- 11 Rejoice in Yahweh,
exult, you virtuous,
shout for joy, all upright hearts.

145:2 Aleph

I will bless Yahweh at all times,
his praise shall be on my lips continually;

1

- 2 Beth my soul glories in Yahweh,
let the humble hear and rejoice.
- 3 Ghimel Proclaim with me the greatness of Yahweh, together let us extol his name.
- 4 Daleth I seek Yahweh, and he answers me and frees me from all my fears.
- 5 He Every face turned to him grows brighter and is never ashamed.
- 6 Zain A cry goes up from the poor man, and Yahweh hears,
and helps him in all his troubles.
- 7 Heth The angel of Yahweh pitches camp round those who fear him; and he keeps them safe.
- 8 Teth How good Yahweh is—only taste and see!
Happy the man who takes shelter in him.
- 9 Yod Fear Yahweh, you his holy ones:
those who fear him want for nothing.
- 10 Kaph The young lion^b may go empty and hungry,
but those who seek Yahweh lack nothing good.
- 11 Lamed Come, my sons, listen to me,
I will teach you the fear of Yahweh.

- 17 since the arms of the wicked are doomed to break,
and Yahweh will uphold the virtuous.
- 18 Yod Yahweh takes care of good men's lives,
and their heritage will last for ever;
- 19 they will not be at a loss when bad times come,
in time of famine they will have more than they need.
- 20 Kaph As for the wicked—they will perish,
these enemies of Yahweh;
they will vanish like the beauty of the meadows,
they will vanish in smoke. Ws 5:14
- 21 Lamed The wicked man borrows without meaning to repay,
but a virtuous man is generous and open-handed;
- 22 those he blesses will have the land for their own,
those he curses^d will be expelled.
- 23 Mem Yahweh guides a man's steps,

Happy the man who cares for the poor^a and the weak: 1
if disaster strikes, Yahweh will come to his help.

Yahweh will guard him, give him life and happiness^b in the land; 2 ah, do not let his enemies treat him as they please!

Yahweh will be his comfort on his bed of sickness; 3 most carefully you make his bed^c when he is sick.

I for my part said, 'Yahweh, take pity on me! 4
Cure me, for I have sinned against you.'

My enemies say of me with malice, 5
'How long before he dies and his name perishes?'

They visit me, their hearts full of spite, 6 they offer hollow comfort, and go out to spread the news.

All who hate me whisper to each other about me, 7
reckoning I deserve the misery I suffer,^d

'This sickness is fatal^e that has overtaken him, 8
he is down at last, he will never get up again'.

Even my closest and most trusted friend, 9 who shared my table, rebels^f against me.

But Yahweh, take pity on me! 10

Raise me up, and I will pay them back; 11 and by this I shall know that I enjoy your favour,

if my enemy fails to triumph over me; 12
and I, whom you uphold, go unscathed, set by you in your presence for ever.

Blessed be Yahweh, the God of Israel, 13

42 a. Exile, a symbol of the troubles of the devout,
'exiled far from the Lord', 2 Co 5:6-8, here means absence from the Temple which is God's dwelling place, and from the festivals uniting his people there.

b. 'doe' Greek; 'hart' Hebr., but the verb is feminine.

c. 'to see' versions. 'To see the face of God' (cf.
Hebr. 'appear before') here means to visit his sanctuary, the Temple in Jerusalem, cf. Dt 31:11; Ps 27:8+. For the primary meaning of the phrase, cf. Ex 33:20+.

d. 'wonderful' Greek and Syr.; Hebr. uncertain (corr. 'in stately procession'). The 'Tent' was the desert sanctuary of ancient times; its memory was recalled annually by the 'feast of Tents', or 'of Tabernacles', Ex 23:14+; here the word is used for its successor, the Temple, God's dwelling place, the object of yearly pilgrimage for every devout Israelite, Ex 23:14.

e. Lit. 'salvation of my face' corr., cf. v. 11.

f. 'you, humble mountain' corr. referring to Mount Zion. Hebr. 'from the lowly mountain' or 'from Mount Misar', alluding to Zaorah not far from the sources of Jordan; the 'you' would then refer to God.

g. Corr. (lit. 'with a rending cry in my bones').

43 a. Hebr. here adds 'God'. In the Roman rite, Ps 43 was formerly said at the beginning of the Mass.

45 a. According to some scholars, this psalm may be a secular song to celebrate the marriage of an Israelite king, Solomon, Jeroboam II, or Ahab (whose bride was a Tyrian princess, 1 K 16:31). But Jewish and Christian tradition understand it as celebrating the marriage of the messianic King with Israel (prefiguring the Church), cf. Ezk 16:8-13; Is 62:5; Sg 3:11, etc., and the liturgy develops the allegory still further by applying it to our Lady and to the Virgin Saints. The poet first addresses the messianic King, vv. 2-9, crediting him with attributes of Yahweh (145:4-7, 12-13, etc.) and of Immanuel (Is 9:5-6); he then addresses the queen,
vv. 10-16.

b. Possibly 'On the six-stringed lute'.

Sg 5:10-16	Of all men you are the most handsome, your lips are moist with grace, for God has blessed you for ever.	2
21:5	Hero, strap your sword at your side, in majesty and splendour; •on, ride on, in the cause of truth, religion and virtue!	3 4
	Stretch the bowstring tight, ^c lending terror to your right hand. Your arrows are sharp; nations lie at your mercy, the king's enemies are losing heart.	5
Heb 1:8-9	Your throne, God, ^d shall last for ever and ever, your royal sceptre is a sceptre of integrity: virtue you love as much as you hate wickedness.	6 7
	This is why God, your God, has anointed you with the oil of gladness, above all your rivals; myrrh and aloes waft from ^e your robes.	8
	From palaces of ivory harps entertain you, daughters of kings are among your maids of honour; ^f on your right stands the queen, in gold from Ophir.	9
Gn 12:1 Jos 24:2 Ezk 16:3	Listen, daughter, pay careful attention: forget your nation and your ancestral home, ^g then the king will fall in love with your beauty. He is your master now, bow down to him.	10 11
72:10-11 Is 60:5f	The daughter of Tyre will solicit your favour with gifts, the wealthiest nations, •with jewels set in gold. ^h	12 13
Ezk 16:10-13	Dressed ⁱ •in brocades, the king's daughter is led in to the king, with bridesmaids in her train.	14

Gn 17:6; 35:11	Your ancestors will be replaced by sons whom you will make lords of the whole world.	16

The futility of riches^a

V 48

For the choirmaster Of the sons of Korah Psalm

- 1 Hear this, all nations,
pay attention all who live on earth,
important people, ordinary people,
rich and poor alike!
- 2 My lips have wisdom to utter,
my heart whispers sound sense;
I turn my attention to a proverb,
and set my solution to the harp.
- 3 Why should I be afraid in evil times, when malice dogs my steps and^b hems me in,
of men who trust in their wealth and boast of the profusion of their riches?
- 4 But man could never redeem himself or pay his ransom to God:
it costs so much to redeem his life,
it is beyond him; •how then could he live on for ever and never see the Pit—
- 5 when all the time he sees that wise men die,
that foolish and stupid perish both alike,
and leave their fortunes to others.
- 6 Their tombs^c are their eternal home,
their lasting residence,
though they owned estates that bore their names.
- 7 Man when he prospers forfeits intelligence:^d
he is one with the cattle doomed to slaughter.
So on they go with their self-assurance, with men to run after them when they raise their voice.^e Pause

h. The psalmist trusts God to keep him beyond the reach of Sheol. It cannot be asserted that here he glimpses the possibility of being 'taken up' to heaven like Enoch and Elijah, cf. 16:10+; 73:24; but he does think that the ultimate fate of the upright must differ from that of the godless and that the friendship of God can have no end. This implicit faith in a retribution to come prepares for the later revelation of the resurrection of the dead, and eternal life, 2 M 7:9+.

i. In contrast, God will glorify the upright, 73:24; 91:15.

c. Man is born in a state of impurity, Jb 14:4+, cf. Pr 20:9, which is an implicit recognition of his tendency to evil, Gn 8:21. This basic impurity is here pleaded as a mitigating circumstance, cf. 1 K 8:46, which God should take into account. The doctrine of original sin will be proposed explicitly, Rm 5:12-21, in connection with the revelation of redemption by Jesus Christ.

h. Lit. 'blood spilt'. The reference here is to premature death, which according to traditional teaching was the punishment for sin, rather than to the murder of Uriah (2 S 12:9,13), or to future crimes in which the psalmist might be involved whether as agent or as victim. Hebr. adds 'O God' before 'God my saviour'.

i. 'My sacrifice' corr.; 'God's sacrifices' Hebr. The Hebr. adds 'O God' to the following line.

j. After the return from exile the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem was eagerly looked forward to as a sign of divine forgiveness, Jr 30:15-18; Ezk 36:33.

k. Liturgical annotation; inserted later. In the restored Jerusalem sacrifice will recover its value because it will be offered with devotion. (lit. 'righteous sacrifice').

The Judge of earthly judges^a*For the choirmaster Tune: 'Do not destroy' Of David Miktam*

1	Gods ^b you may be, but do you give the sentences you should, and dispense impartial justice to mankind?
2	On the contrary, in your hearts you meditate oppression, with your hands you dole out tyranny on earth.	82:2 Dt 16:19 Mi 2:1

h. This verse may be understood as the ironical remarks of the false friend, or as self-encouragement uttered by the sufferer.

56 a. 'of the gods' cf. Greek and 58:1.

b. 'Raise me up' corr.

c. Here, as in v. 10, the 'word' of God is his promise on which his servant relies, cf. 106:12; 119:42, 65; 130:5.

d. 'are they to go unpunished?' lit. 'deliverance for them'; the versions interpret 'for nothing you will deliver them'.

e. This line, possibly an addition, brings the idea of a general judgement of all nations (cf. 79; 9:5, etc.) into the psalmist's narrower perspective of a judgement on his particular enemies.

f. The text adds a tentative gloss 'Should this not be: "in your book"?, cf. Jb 19:23; Mt 3:16; Ps 139:16.

g. Lit. 'my soul from Death'; Hebr. adds 'Should this not be: "my feet from death"?'; some Greek MSS 'my eyes from tears', cf. v. 8 and 116:8.

57 a. The psalmist wants God to manifest his sovereignty by rescuing the oppressed and destroying the godless.

b. Personified as in Jb 3:9; 38:12; 41:10. Dawn is the hour of rescue, 17:15+.

58 a. Like the prophets of old the poet apostrophises unjust judges, and calls divine judgement down on them.

b. 'Gods' corr.; 'in silence' Hebr. The expression here embraces judges and rulers. Cf. Ex 21:6; 22:7; Dt 19:17; 2 S 14:17; Ps 45:6; 82.

	Right from the womb these wicked men have gone astray, these double talkers have been in error since their birth; their poison is the poison of the snake, they are deaf as the adder that blocks its ears so as not to hear the magician's music and the clever snake-charmer's spells.	3 4 5

d. Or 'by his holiness', i.e., guaranteeing his promises.

e. An ancient custom, Dt 25:9; in Rt 4:7+, it signifies appropriation.

f. Ironical; 108:9 'and shout, "Victory!" over Philistia'.

g. Hebr. repeats 'God'.

61 a. Lament of a Levite in exile from Mt. Zion, vv. 1-5, followed by a prayer for the king, vv. 6-7.

b. Others translate 'that is higher than I'.

c. These personified divine attributes will accompany the messianic King, 85:10f; 89:14,24, as they protect the king, Pr 20:28, or the faithful Levite, Ps 40:11. Vv. 6-7 may be an ancient prayer for the king, but their emphasis on a reign indefinitely prolonged recalls the prophecy of Nathan, 2 S 7:16; 1 Ch 17:14, and their close resemblance to the messianic passages of Ps 72 and 89 makes them applicable to the royal Messiah.

62 a. Didactic psalm: human malice, hollowness of things created, vanity of riches, impartiality of the divine judge. The theme of the refrain, vv. 1-2, 5-6, is that of the following psalm.

b. 'Deceit' corr.; 'from his eminence' Hebr.

c. Lit. 'sons of Adam', 'sons of men', ordinary people and men of rank respectively, as in 49:2.

d. The literary device of 'numerical proverbs' is found in Am 1:3f; Pr 6:16; 30:15; Jb 40:5.

e. Doctrine of individual retribution taught by the prophets (especially Ezekiel, 14:12+), the wisdom writers and the psalmists, 37:1+.

63 a. Versions 'from early morning I am with you'.

5 Your righteousness repays us with marvels,
God our saviour,
hope of all the ends of the earth and the distant islands.^d

6 Your strength holds the mountains up, such is the power that wraps you;
7 you calm the clamour of the ocean,
the clamour of its waves.

8 The nations are in uproar,^e in panic
those who live at the ends of the world, as your miracles bring shouts of joy to the portals^f of morning and evening.

9 You visit the earth and water it,^g
you load it with riches; God's rivers brim with water^h
to provide their grain.

10 This is how you provide it:
by drenching its furrows, by levelling its ridges,
by softening it with showers, by blessing the first-fruits.

Corporate act of thanksgiving^a*For the choirmaster Song Psalm*

65:13	Acclaim God, all the earth,	1
	play music to the glory of his name,	2
Ep 1:12,14	glorify him with your praises, say to God, 'What dread you inspire!'	3
18:44; 81:15	Your achievements are the measure of your power. Your enemies cringe in your presence; all the earth bows down to you, playing music for you, playing in honour of your name.	4
	Pause
	Come and see what marvels God has done, so much to be feared for his deeds among mankind:	5
114:3 Is 44:27; 50:2	he turned the sea into dry land, they crossed the river on foot! ^b	6
	So let us rejoice in him, who rules for ever by his power: his eyes keep watch on the nations, let no rebel raise his head!	7
	Pause
	You nations, bless our God and make his praise resound, who brings our soul to life ^c	8
121:3	and keeps our feet from faltering.	9
Is 48:10	You tested us, God, you refined us like silver, you let us fall into the net, you laid heavy burdens on our backs, you let people drive over our heads; but now the ordeal by fire and water is over, and you allow us once more to draw breath. ^d	10
Is 51:23 32:6; 81:7 Is 43:2		11
	I bring holocausts to your house, I bring them to fulfil those vows that rose to my lips, those vows I spoke when in trouble.	12
	I bring them to fulfil those vows that rose to my lips, those vows I spoke when in trouble.	14
	I offer you fat holocausts and the smoke of burning rams, I offer you bullocks and he-goats.	15
	Pause
	Come and listen, all you who fear God, while I tell you what he has done for me: when I uttered my cry to him and high praise was on my tongue,	16
		17

18 had I been guilty in my heart,
the Lord would never have heard me.
19 But God not only heard me,
he listened to my prayer.

20 Blessed be God,
who neither ignored my prayer
nor deprived me of his love.

National song of triumph^a

For the choirmaster Of David Psalm Song

1	Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered, let those who hate him flee before him!	132:8 Nb 10:35 Is 33:3
---	---	--------------------------------

i. The chariot of God, 68:4,17; Is 66:5, traverses the earth dispensing fertility.

j. Lit. 'they acclaim, yes they sing'.

66 a. This liturgical thanksgiving on behalf of the community, the leader of which speaks from v. 13 onwards, recalls in style and worldwide outlook the second half of Is.

b. The crossing of the Red Sea, Ex 14-15, and of the Jordan, Jos 3: two great 'typical' events of Israel's history, also found together in 74:13-15; 114.

c. Hence the title 'Resurrection Psalm' given to this psalm by some Greek MSS and Vulg. The Easter liturgy uses this verse.

d. 'To draw breath' versions; 'to abundance' Hebr.

67 a. Probably recited at the harvest-home festival, cf. Ex 23:14+.

b. This refrain is in the spirit of the second part of Is: by the example of the Chosen People and the lessons of its history the pagan nations also are summoned to serve the one God.

c. Lit. 'you judge the world with justice, you judge'; 'the world ... judge' Sinaiticus; omitted by Hebr.

68 a. This hymn of thanksgiving covers the chief stages in the history of the people of God, like those of a triumphal progress by Yahweh: the Exodus from Egypt, the journey through the desert, the victories of the period of the Judges (Deborah, Gideon), the installation of the ark on Zion, the story of Elijah and Elisha, the tragic fate of the family of Ahab, the solemn Passover of Hezekiah, and finally the worldwide perspectives of the closing chapters of Is. Between Prelude (vv. 1-6) and Conclusion (vv. 32-35) are six groups of two strophes, the strophes being paired off on the basis of subject-matter. A copyist's error has upset the order of strophes 6 and 7.

Ws 5:14	As smoke disperses, they disperse; ^b	2
97:5	as wax melts when near the fire,
92:9	so the wicked perish when God approaches.
	But at God's approach, the virtuous rejoice,	3
	exulting and singing for joy.
18:9-10	Sing to Yahweh, play music to his name,	4

Blessed be God.

68 b. 'they disperse' versions; 'you disperse them' Hebr.

c. 'rejoice' corr.; 'in his name' Hebr.

d. Hebr. gloss 'that is, Sinai', as in Jg 5:5. This strophe shows Yahweh taking the field; his departure from Egypt in the cloud, Ex 13:21; Nb 14:14, and the theophany of Sinai, Ex 19:16+.

e. The miracles of the Exodus: the manna, the quails and the entry into the Promised Land.

f. Hebr. divides differently 'the couriers are a huge army'.

g. The victories of the conquest. 'Women' (lit. 'fair one') means possibly Jael, Jg 5:24, or perhaps the wives of the conquerors, cf. Jg 5:30; 11:34; 1 S 18:6.

h. Lit. 'in the middle of the two walls' (leading in to the sheepfold); some translate 'between the hearth-stones' or 'between the two panniers' (carried by a donkey), cf. Gn 49:14.

i. Text corr. The Hebr. of v. 14 has 'When Shaddai routed the kings on it (fem.) snow fell on Dark Mountain'. 'Dark Mountain' is probably a wooded hill near Shechem (cf. Jg 9:48-49). In imitation of Jg 5:16f, the poet here seems to address the unco-operative clans who took no part in the fighting. He jibes at them with his boast of abundant spoil (cf. Jos 22:8; Jg 8:26) which the womenfolk divide: the precious stones gleam on their dusky skin (cf. Sg 1:5) like a dove's plumage or like snow on dark ground (Sg 2:14; Lm 4:7).

j. The hill of Zion, God's dwelling place on earth,

S.E.—P*

2 S 5:9+.

k. Not the chariots of Solomon, 1 K 10:26, but the heavenly chariots seen by Elisha, 2 K 6:17; cf. 7:6; Is 66:15. What follows refers to the victories of the monarchical period.

l. 'has left...' corr.; 'in them, Sinai in the sanctuary' Hebr.

m. Zion.

n. 'O God' follows 'Yahweh' in Hebr. Text uncertain.

o. Allusion to the death of Ahab, 1 K 21:19; 22:38, of Jehoram, 2 K; 9:24, and of Jezebel, 2 K 9:36.

p. Liturgical antiphon. For 'you who spring from' (lit. 'fountain') some suggest the similar Hebr. word for 'assembly'.

q. Meaning doubtful.

r. Vv. 24-27 refer to the Passover of Hezekiah, 2 Ch 30, in which the N. tribes took part.

s. Text corr., cf. versions; 'your God has commanded your strength' Hebr. The text and rhythm of the two following strophes are rather uncertain.

t. Alluding to Egypt. The 'bulls' and 'calves' are leaders and people.

u. Lit. 'great men' corr.; 'bronze(?)' Hebr. 'stretch out' corr.

v. Hebr. adds 'the Lord, Pause'.

w. 'his sanctuary' cf. versions; 'your sanctuary' or 'your sanctuaries' Hebr.

when I was thirsty they gave me vinegar to drink.
- 22 May their own table prove a trap for them,
and their plentiful supplies, a snare!
23 may their eyes grow dim, go blind, strike their loins with chronic palsy!
- 24 Vent your fury on them,
let your burning anger overtake them;
25 may their camp be reduced to ruin,
and their tents left unoccupied:
26 for hounding a man after you had struck him,
for adding more wounds to those which you inflicted.^h
- 27 Charge them with crime after crime, deny them further access to your righteousness, 28 blot them out of the book of life,
strike them off the roll of the virtuous!
- 29 For myself, wounded wretch that I am,
by your saving power, God, lift me up!
30 I will praise the name of God with a song,
I will extol him with my thanksgiving,
31 more pleasing to Yahweh than any ox or bull with horn and hoof.
- 32 Then, seeing this, the humble can rejoice:
long life to your hearts, all you who seek for God!
33 Yahweh will always hear those who are in need,
will never scorn his captive people.
34 Let heaven and earth acclaim him,
the oceans and all that moves in them!
- 35 For God will save Zion, and rebuild the towns of Judah:
they will be lived in, owned, 36 handed down to his servants' descendants,
and lived in by those who love his name.

69 a. This psalm is composed of two laments of differing rhythms, each containing a lamentation followed by a prayer. The first, vv. 1-6 and 13-15, elaborates the themes of the nether waters, 18:4+, and enemies, 35 etc. The second, vv. 7-12 and 16f, is a cry of distress of a devout man who suffers for his zeal, cf. Is 53:10; Jr 15:15; Ps 22. The psalm ends as a hymn of national application, vv. 30f, cf. 22:27f and 102:13f. The messianic character of the psalm is brought out by the use made of it in the N.T.

b. Or 'up to my soul'.

c. Lit. 'than my tresses' corr.; 'those who would destroy me' Hebr.

d. This line, recalling Lv 5:23, has perhaps been added.

e. Hebr. inserts 'Lord' before 'Yahweh'.

f. Lit. 'humble' cf. versions; 'weep' Hebr.

g. 'are past cure' corr.; 'I tremble' Hebr.

h. 'adding' versions; 'recounting' Hebr. The object of persecution in v. 26 is plural in Hebr., adapting the psalm to liturgical use.

70 a. Doublet of 40:13-17, where see notes.

71 a. 'sheltering' ('of security') MSS, versions. 'a walled fortress' Greek and 31:2.

b. Meaning uncertain (versions 'my strength?').

c. Because of his sufferings: they are surprised to see a good man suffer, cf. Jb.

d. Hebr. adds 'I have not known how to read the letters', doubtless the gloss of a scribe puzzled by the following word.

e. Meaning uncertain; possibly 'strengthened by Yahweh I shall come (into the sanctuary)'. Hebr.

inserts 'Lord' before 'Yahweh'.

f. This passage could be applied to Israel, whose 'youth' and 'old age' were often referred to by the prophets.

g. Lit. 'your arm', a figure of speech found in the prophets, Is 51:9; 53:1, referring to the miracles of the Exodus.

72 a. This psalm dedicated to Solomon whose wealth, glory and just and peaceful reign it celebrates (1 K 3:9, 12,28; 4:20; 10:1-29; 1 Ch 22:9), evokes the image of the future ideal king. Jewish and Christian tradition see it as a portrait of the messianic King foretold by Isaiah, 9:5; 11:1-5, and Zechariah, 9:9f.

b. Division of verse according to Greek. Text uncertain.

c. 'He will endure' Greek; 'they will fear you' Hebr.

d. The versions translate 'fleece', cf. Jg 6:37f.

e. 'virtue' MSS and versions; 'the virtuous man' Text. Rec., cf. Jr 23:5; Zc 9:9.

f. The messianic age will last to the end of time.

g. The boundaries of an ideal Palestine, cf. Jg 20:1+.

h. The word, meaning the animals or demons of the desert, Is 13:21; 34:14; Jr 50:39; Ezk 34:28, here refers to subjugated heathen states, cf. Is 27:1; Dn 7:3, etc.; Rv 13:1, etc.

i. Probably a prayer for the Messiah added later.

j. Another translation 'He (the Messiah) will pray (intercede) for him (the poor man) and bless him'.

k. 'abundant', lit. 'May it abound'. 'Its harvest', lit. 'putting forth' (or 'making it rise'), misplaced in Hebr. to after 'luxuriant' (lit. 'may they [the mountains] be luxuriant'), is often translated 'from the city' (Zion). Some interpret 'May the inhabitants of Zion flourish'.

l. 'blessed' and 'every race in the world': Greek; absent from Hebr. 'enduring' one MS and versions;

'branching forth is his name' Hebr., alluding to the messianic title 'Branch', Is 4:2; Jr 23:5; 33:15; Zc 3:8; 6:12.

m. The colophon and preceding doxology close the second book of the Psalter.

73 a. The poet-sage is troubled by the prosperity of the godless and the sufferings of the upright, cf. Jr 12:1f; Mt 3:15; Qo 7:15, etc.; Jb 21 etc., but goes on to contrast the passing pleasures of the sinner with the enduring peace of God's friendship.

b. It is possible that 'Israel' is the result of dittography and that we ought to read 'the virtuous man'.

c. 'the Lord' conj.; 'and I' Hebr. (after 'hearts').

d. 'For them' corr.; 'At their death' Hebr.

e. 'spite' versions; 'eye' Hebr. Fatness symbolises the hardened heart.

f. Lit. 'they set their mouth against heaven, their tongue goes about on earth'.

g. Lit. 'waters come to them in abundance'. Verse translated according to versions. Meaning obscure. Possibly read 'They are crammed with riches, and days (Greek) of plenty come to them'.

Had I said, 'That talk appeals to me', 15
 I should have betrayed your children's race.
 Instead, I tried to analyse the problem, 16
 hard though I found it—

119:130 until the day I pierced the mystery^h not found 17 and saw the end in store for them:
 they are on a slippery slope, you put them there, 18
 you urge them on to ruin,

until suddenly they fall, 19 done for, terrified to death.
 When you wake up, Lord, you shrug them off 20
 like the phantoms of a morning dream.ⁱ

When my heart had been growing sourer 21
 with pains shooting through my loins,
 I had simply failed to understand, 22
 my stupid attitude to you was brutish.^j

121:5 Even so, I stayed in your presence, 23
 you held my right hand;
 now guide me with advice 24
 and in the end receive me into glory.^k

16:10+; 49:15 I look to no one else in heaven, 25
 I delight in nothing else on earth.
 17:15 My flesh and my heart are pining with love,^l 26
 my heart's Rock, my own, God for ever!

So then: those who abandon you are doomed, 27
 you destroy the adulterous deserter;^m whereas my joy lies in being close to God. 28
 I have taken shelter in the Lord, continually to proclaim what you have done.ⁿ

Lament on the destruction of the Temple^a*Poem Of Asaph*

10:1; 44:23; 77:7; 80:4 1
 Is 63:17 God, have you finally rejected us, Dt 7:6+ raging at the flock you used to pasture? 2

 your hereditary tribe whom you redeemed,
 Ex 15:17 and this Mount Zion where you came to live. 3
 Jr 10:16; 51:19

 then, God, setting fire to your sanctuary, they burned down every shrine of God in the country. 9

h. Lit. 'the sanctuaries of God'. The psalmist is not referring to the Temple where God may have enlightened him, nor to divine mysteries, Ws 2:22, revealed to him, but to the teaching contained in the scriptures, dwelling place of wisdom, Pr 9:1f; Si 14:21f, and staple of Jewish piety, Si 39:1.

i. On God's 'awakening', cf. 35:23; 44:23; 59:5; 78:65; Is 51:9. On the 'phantom', or 'shape', cf. 49:14; 90:5; Jb 20:8; Is 29:7-8.

j. Lit. 'Behemoth', crassness personified, cf. Jb 40:15+.

k. Probably not a reference to heavenly glory (Enoch, Gn 5:24; Elijah, 2 K 2:3). The versions translate 'with glory', giving the word its usual sense when used of men; this interpretation suggests that God preserves the just man from an early and shameful death and will vindicate him, even though the upright man dies while the wicked survive. Moreover, as in 16:9f, the psalmist yearns for unbreakable union with God; this is a milestone on the road to a formulated belief in resurrection and eternal life, cf. 16:10+.

l. Lit. 'are fainting', i.e. with desire, cf. 84:2; Jb 19:27, not with weakness, cf. 143:7.

m. Lit. 'those who are adulterous towards you'. In prophetic literature the expression means infidelity to God.

n. Greek adds 'in the gates of the daughter of Zion', cf. 9:14.

74 a. According to the Targum, the 'madman' (v. 22) is Antiochus Epiphanes, the 'mad king' who burned the Temple gates, 1 M 4:38; 2 M 1:8, and profaned the sanctuary, 1 M 1:21f, 39; 2 M 6:5. But the psalm can also apply to the sack of the Temple by the army of Nebuchadnezzar, 2 K 25:9; Is 64:10, from which epoch the voice of prophecy ceased, v. 9, cf. Ps 77:8; Lm 2:9; Ezk 7:26 and 1 M 4:46; 9:27; 14:41.

b. 'entrance' versions.

c. Lit. 'signs which they had not known' Greek; 'signs; it is known' Hebr.

d. Lit. '(They have said in their heart,) "Let us destroy them"' cf. Syr.; 'their offspring' Hebr.

e. Jeremiah had spoken of 70 years of exile, Jr 25:11; 29:10, a figure symbolising long duration.

f. Lit. 'why is your right hand kept in the grip of your bosom' corr.; 'why is your right hand consumed from your bosom' Hebr.

g. Allusion to the crossing of the Reed Sea, Ex 14:30, and the defeat of the Egyptians, Ezk 29:3; 32:4.

h. 'wild animals', lit. 'to people, to animals'.

i. Allusion to the miracles of the Exodus, Ex 17:1-7; Nb 20:2-13, and to the crossing of the Jordan, Jos 3, as manifestations of the power of the creator. This recapitulation of divine favours in the past, vv. 12-17, preludes the closing entreaty, vv. 18-23.

j. Hosea compared Israel to a dove, Ho 7:11; 11:11, cf. Sg 5:2. Greek and Syr. 'the soul that gives you thanks'.

75 a. An antiphon, v. 1, introduces a divine oracle addressed to the wicked, and foretelling judgement on them, vv. 2-5. Vv. 6-8 describe the universal judgement at which the virtuous man rejoices, vv. 9-10.

b. 'as we invoke your name, as we recount' versions; 'near is your name, they recount' Hebr.

c. The horn is the symbol of arrogant or aggressive strength, 89:17; 92:10; Dt 33:17; 1 K 22:11; Zc 2:4.

d. 'nor from the mountains' corr.; '(from the desert) of the mountains' Hebr. V. 6 names the 4 points of the compass, the 'desert' being to the S., the 'mountains' (of Lebanon) to the N. As in Zc 2:1, the emphasis is placed on the universality of the judgement on the day of Yahweh.

e. The image of the cup of wrath with its heady and stupefying wine, cf. 11:6+, is taken from the prophets, cf. Is 51:17+.

f. Lit. 'he pours from it, only the dregs they drink'; Greek and Syr. suppose 'he pours from one (cup) to the other'.

76 a. Eschatological hymn. Like 46 and 48:5, it apparently refers to the defeat of Sennacherib in 701 at the gates of Jerusalem, 2 K 19:35, which defeat is now symbolic of the rescue which the 'humble' may hope for, v. 9. The Greek title includes 'Concerning the Assyrian'.

b. Abridged name of Jerusalem, cf. Gn 14:18;

Jdt 4:4, the city of peace (shalom).

c. Lit. 'flashings of the bow'.

d. Others translate 'the weapons of war'.

e. Lit. 'of mountains of spoil they were plundered'.

Hebr. interprets 'majestic from the mountains of spoil'; Greek 'from the everlasting mountains' (the same word means both 'everlasting' and 'spoil').

f. Lit. 'under the strength (of your fury)' corr.; 'since' Hebr.

g. Because God has frustrated the fury of the enemy.

h. The image, taken from Jeremiah, cf. 109:19, symbolises close union. Like Terror (= the Terrible) in v. 11, the wrath of God is here apparently personified, cf. 58:9. The helpless 'wrath' of man can only witness to the power and justice of God.

i. Like his 'girdle', v. 10.

77 a. In the hard times after the return from exile the psalmist recalls Yahweh's past favours to Israel, the miracles attending the Exodus from Egypt, as an earnest of Yahweh's future interventions on behalf of his people.

c. Lit. 'what weakens me' Aquila and Jerome; 'I am pierced' Hebr.

d. Lit. 'I remember' versions; 'I shall make known' Hebr. ketib.

e. Cosmic imagery, cf. Jb 7:12+, to describe the crossing of the Red Sea. V. 18 refers to the theophany of Sinai, Ex 19:16+.

78 a. A didactic meditation, in the manner of Dt, on the history of Israel, the sins of the nation and their punishment. The psalm stresses the responsibility of Ephraim, the ancestor of the Samaritans, the choice of Judah and the call of David.

b. Parable (masal); rhythmical maxim expressed in poetic parallelism.

c. The psalmist blames the sins of the nation on Ephraim, thus anticipating the future history of the Northern Kingdom (or possibly alluding to the Samaritan schism, cf. Zc 11:14). Cf. v. 67.

d. The miracles of the Exodus, vv. 12-31.

11Prayer for the restoration of Israel^a*For the choirmaster Tune: 'The decrees are lilies' Of Asaph Psalm* 45:inscr.

- 1 Shepherd of Israel, listen,
you who lead Joseph like a flock;
enthroned on the cherubs, shine on Ephraim, Benjamin and Manasseh;^b rouse your strength,
come to us and save us!
- 2 Yahweh Sabaoth,^c bring us back,
let your face smile on us and we shall be safe.
- 3 Yahweh^d Sabaoth, how much longer will you smoulder at your people's prayer?
Having fed us on the bread of tears,
having made us drink them in such measure,
you now let our neighbours quarrel over us
and our enemies deride us.
- 4 Yahweh Sabaoth, bring us back,
let your face smile on us and we shall be safe.
- 5 There was a vine:^e you uprooted it from Egypt;
to plant it, you drove out other nations,
you cleared a space where it could grow,
it took root and filled the whole country.
- 6 It covered the mountains with its shade,
the cedars of God^f with its branches,
its tendrils extended to the sea,
its offshoots all the way to the river.^g
- 7 Why have you destroyed its fences?
Now anyone can go and steal its grapes,
the forest boar can ravage it and wild animals eat it.
- 8 Please, Yahweh Sabaoth, relent!
Look down from heaven, look at this vine, visit it, •protect what your own right hand has planted.^h
- 9 They threw it on the fire like dung,ⁱ but one look of reproof from you and they will be doomed.

j. Probable allusion to Zerubbabel, Hg 1:1; Ezr 3:2, rather than to Benjamin ('son of the right hand'), Amaziah ('Yahweh is trusty') cf. 2 Chr 25:5, or Israel (cf. Ex 4:22).

81 a. A prelude, vv. 1-5, introduces a divine oracle, cf. 50:95, in the style of Dt. The feast of Tabernacles, Ex 23:14+, commemorated the period in the desert and the Law given at Sinai. It was the greatest feast of the year.

b. The first day of the lunar month was a feast day, 2 K 4:23; Am 8:5; Ho 2:13; Is 1:13. The 1st day of the 7th month was long reckoned as the 1st day of the new year, Lv 23:24; Nb 29:1; at the full moon next following, the feast of Tabernacles was celebrated, Lv 23:34; Nb 29:12.

c. 'against'; Greek interprets 'from', making the subject not God but Joseph.

d. Greek and Syr. translate 'He heard'.

e. Allusion to the forced labour imposed on Israel in Egypt.

f. At the theophany of Sinai.

82 a. A warning to wicked rulers and judges in an eschatological setting, vv. 1,5,8.

b. Indictment frequent in the prophets: Is 1:17f; Jr 5:28; 21:12; 22:3; Ezk 22:27,29; Mi 3:1-11; Zc 7:9-10; cf. Jb 29:12; Pr 18:5; 24:11-12.

c. The rulers and judges are reckoned with the 'sons of the Most High', the members of the heavenly court, cf. Jb 1:6+. Christ applies this passage, in a different context, to the Jews instructed by the word of God.

83 a. Without naming any particular hostile coalition, the psalm enumerates ten traditional enemies of Israel whose hostility was maintained to a late date, cf. 2 Ch 20:1f; Ne 2:19, etc.; 1 M 5:3f.

d. Text uncertain. Greek 'the lawgiver will bestow blessings'. A possible correction 'the leader will call out the blessings'. We follow the Hebr. text. The allusion to the first rains of autumn make it feasible to connect the psalm with the feast of Tabernacles, Ex 23:14+.

e. 'from height to height'; others translate 'from strength to strength', or (Targ.) 'from battlement to battlement'. 'soon ... Zion'; lit. 'God will appear to them in Zion'; for 'God to them' Hebr. has 'the God of gods'.

87 a. Holy Zion, the city of God, 2 S 5:9+, is to become the sacred metropolis and mother of all peoples. All the pagan neighbours of Israel: Egypt ('Rahab'), Ethiopia, Syro-Palestine, Mesopotamia, are summoned to acknowledge the true God and to provide him with converts. Such is the will of Yahweh as expressed in the oracle of vv. 4-5. The psalm draws on Isaiah and

Hymn and a prayer to God's faithfulness^a88:inscr. Poem For Ethan the native-born

Is 63:7	I will celebrate your love for ever, Yahweh, age after age my words shall proclaim your faithfulness; for I claim that love is built to last for ever and your faithfulness founded firmly in the heavens. ^b	1 2
2 S 7:8-16 +	'I have made a covenant with my Chosen, I have given my servant David my sworn word:	3

- 4 I have founded your dynasty to last for ever,
I have built you a throne to outlast all time.' Pause 61:7
- 5 Yahweh, the assembly of holy ones in heaven applaud the marvel of your faithfulness. 61:7
Jb 5:1 +
- 6 Who in the skies can compare with Yahweh?
Which of the heaven-born^e can rival him? 29:1; 82:1
Jb 1:6 +
- 7 God, dreaded in the assembly of holy ones,
great^d and terrible to all around him,
- 8 Yahweh, God of Sabaoth, who is like you?—
mighty Yahweh, clothed in your faithfulness! 86:8 +; 113:5
- 9 You control the pride of the ocean,
when its waves ride high, you calm them; 74:13
Jb 7:12 +
- 10 you split Rahab^e in two like a carcase
and scattered your enemies with your mighty arm. 65:7 + 107:28
- 11 The heavens are yours and the earth is yours, you founded the world and all it holds, 24:1-2
- 12 you created north and south;
Tabor and Hermon hail your name with joy.
- 13 Yours was the arm, and yours the prowess, mighty and exalted your right hand;
- 14 Righteousness and Justice support your throne,
Love and Faithfulness are your attendants. 89:14; 97:2
Ex 34:6-7
- 15 Happy the people who learn to acclaim you!
Yahweh, they will live in the light of your favour;
they will rejoice in your name all day and exult in your righteousness. 47:1 +
- 17 You are their glory and their strength, you, by your kindness, raise our fortunes,^f 112:9; 148:14

and said to your friends,^g 132:11-12
2 S 7:8-16 +
- 'I have conferred the crown^h on a hero,
and promoted one chosen from my people.
- 20 'I have selected my servant David and anointed him with my holy oil; 78:70 +
- 21 my hand will be constantly with him, he will be able to rely on my arm. Ws 3:1
Is 42:1
- 22 'No enemy will be able to outwit him,
no wicked man to worst him,
- 23 I myself will crush his opponents,
I will strike dead all who hate him.

e. Meaning uncertain. Greek 'free'. Others translate 'my couch', 'my place of imprisonment'.

d. In Hebr. 'Abaddon', Jb 26:6; 28:22; Pr 15:11; Rv 9:11.

89 a. The prelude, vv. 1-2, followed by the rehearsal of the Davidic covenant, vv. 3-4, and a hymn to the creator, vv. 15-18, introduces a messianic oracle, vv. 19-37, and, in contrast, an account of the humiliations of the nation, vv. 38-45, concluded by a prayer, vv. 46-51. The pairing of 'love' with 'faithfulness' is a feature of this psalm.

b. 'for I claim' lit. 'I have said'; versions 'you have said'. 'is built' versions; 'you built' Hebr. 'in the heavens' Greek (lit. 'the heavens, in them').

c. Lit. 'sons of the gods', i.e. the angels; so also the 'holy ones' in v. 7.

d. 'great' corr.; Hebr. joins 'great' with 'assembly'.

e. A mythical monster personifying the watery chaos, cf. Jb 7:12 +; it also sometimes means Egypt, Ps 87:4.

f. Lit. 'lift up our horn'.

g. Samuel and Nathan.

h. 'crown' corr.; 'help' Hebr.

The human condition^a*Prayer Of Moses, man of God*

- 1 Lord, you have been our refuge^b age after age.
- 2 Before the mountains were born,
before the earth or the world came to birth,
you were God from all eternity and for ever.
- 3 You can turn man back into dust
by saying, 'Back to what you were, you sons of men!'
- 4 To you, a thousand years are a single day,
a yesterday now over, an hour of the night.
- 5 You brush men away like waking^c dreams,
they are like grass
- 6 sprouting and flowering in the morning,
withered and dry before dusk.
- 7 We too are burnt up by your anger
and terrified by your fury;
- 8 having summoned up our sins
you inspect our secrets by your own light.
- 9 Our days dwindle under your wrath,
our lives are over in a breath^d
- 10 —our life lasts for seventy years,
eighty with good health,
- but they all add up to^e anxiety and trouble—
over in a trice, and then we are gone.
- 11 Who yet has felt the full force of your fury,
or learnt to fear the violence of your rage?^f

and so gain wisdom of heart.^g

God's protection^a

If you live in the shelter of Elyon 1 and make your home in the shadow of Shaddai,^b you can say^c to Yahweh, 'My refuge, my fortress, 2
my God in whom I trust!'

He rescues you from the snares 3
of fowlers hoping to destroy^d you;
he covers you with his feathers, 4a
and you find shelter underneath his wings. 4b

You need not fear the terrors of night, 5
the arrow that flies in the daytime, the plague that stalks in the dark, 6
the scourge that wreaks havoc in broad daylight.^e

Though a thousand fall at your side, 7
ten thousand at your right hand,
you yourself will remain unscathed,
with his faithfulness for shield and buckler. 4c

You have only to look around 8
to see how the wicked are repaid, you who can say, 'Yahweh my refuge', 9
and make Elyon your fortress.^f

No disaster can overtake you, 10
no plague come near your tent:
he will put you in his angels' charge 11
to guard you wherever you go.

They will support you on their hands 12
in case you hurt your foot against a stone;
you will tread on lion^g and adder, 13
trample on savage lions and dragons.

'I rescue all who cling to me, 14
I protect whoever knows my name,
I answer everyone who invokes me, 15
I am with them when they are in trouble;

h. In vv. 14-17, the meditation and prayer, concerned initially with the fate of the individual, are extended to the whole of Israel.

i. Hebr. adds, after 'Lord', 'our God' and, in conclusion, 'over us, and make the work of our hands succeed'.

91 a. This psalm elaborates the traditional teaching of the Sages, cf. Jb 5:19f, on God's protection of the virtuous man. The concluding divine oracle, vv. 14-16, assumes that the virtuous will be tested, but that God will deliver them.

b. Four divine names in this one strophe: Elyon ('the Most High'), Shaddai (Gn 17:1+; here translated 'the God of heaven' by Greek and Vulg., elsewhere 'the Almighty'), Yahweh (Ex 3:14+), Elohim (God).

c. 'you' (lit. 'he') versions; 'I' Hebr.

d. 'hoping to destroy' (lit. 'who speaks of destroying') corr.; 'from the plague' Hebr.; 'from the word' versions (so also in v. 6).

e. 'that wreaks havoc in broad daylight' (lit. 'noon'); versions 'from the noonday devil'.

f. 'you who can say' corr.; 'you' Hebr. 'fortress' Greek; 'dwelling place' Hebr.

g. Greek and Syr. 'asp'.

92 a. Lit. 'exalted' corr. Hebr. adds 'Yahweh'.

b. Hebr. has 'See how your enemies, Yahweh, see how your enemies perish'.

c. 'you pour' Syr.

d. Versions 'my enemies'. Hebr. adds 'those who rise up against me'.

c. Meribah means 'dispute', Massah 'temptation'.

d. 'that' versions; omitted by Hebr.

96 a. A hymn, possibly combining two poems, in honour of the sovereignty of God and of his coming as judge of the world, is composed of material from psalms and from Is. The order is different in the version of 1 Ch 16:23-33.

b. Greek here translates 'the demons'. This theme appears frequently in the second part of Is (40:18f) etc. Cf. 1 Co 8:4+.

c. The poet adapts 29:1-2 and stresses the universalist aspect, cf. Zc 14:17; Ps 47:9.

d. 'bear it' corr., cf. 1 Ch; 'enter into his courts'

(cf. Ps 95:6) Hebr.

e. 'court' versions; 'adornment' Hebr.

97 a. Eschatological hymn with numerous reminiscences of other psalms.

b. Hebr. adds 'before Yahweh'.

c. I.e. the other towns of Judah.

d. Lit. 'loves the man who hates' corr.; 'those who love (Yahweh) hate' Hebr.

e. 'dawns' versions; 'is sown' Hebr.

98 a. Eschatological hymn, inspired by the closing chapters of Is, and very similar to Ps 96.

Invitation to praise God

Psalm For thanksgiving

- 1 Acclaim Yahweh, all the earth,
 2 serve Yahweh gladly,
 come into his presence with songs of joy!
- 3 Know that he, Yahweh, is God,
 he made us and we belong to him,
 we are his people, the flock that he pastures.
- 4 Walk through his porticos giving thanks,
 enter his courts praising him,
 give thanks to him, bless his name!

The ideal ruler^a*Of David Psalm*

- 1 My song is about kindness and justice;
 Yahweh, I sing it to you.
- 2 I mean to make good progress, as the blameless do:
 when will you come to me?^b
- In my household, I will advance
 in purity of heart;
- 3 I will not let my eyes rest
 on any misconduct.
- I hate the practices of the apostate,
 they have no appeal for me;
- 4 perverted hearts must keep their distance,
 the wicked I disregard.
- 5 The man who secretly slanders his neighbour
 I reduce to silence;
 haughty looks, proud heart,
 I cannot tolerate these.
- 6 I look to my religious countrymen
 to compose my household;

V 101

Prayer in misfortune^a

Prayer of the downtrodden telling Yahweh their troubles at a moment of distress

Yahweh, hear my prayer,
let my cry for help reach you;
do not hide your face from me when I am in trouble;
bend down to listen to me,
when I call, be quick to answer me!

For my days are vanishing like smoke,
my bones smouldering like logs,
my heart shrivelling like scorched grass
and my appetite has gone;
whenever I heave a sigh,
my bones stick through my skin.

I live in a desert like the pelican,
in a ruin like the screech owl,
I stay awake, lamenting^b
like a lone bird on the roof;
my enemies insult me all day long,
those who used to praise me^c now use me as a curse.^d

Ashes are the bread I eat, what I drink I lace with tears,
under your furious anger,
since you only picked me up to throw me down;
my days dwindle away like a shadow,
I am as dry as hay.

Whereas, Yahweh, you remain for ever;
each generation in turn remembers you!

Rise, take pity on Zion!—
the time has come to have mercy on her,
the hour has come;

for your servants prize her stones
and are moved to pity by her dust.

Then will the nations fear the name of Yahweh and all kings on earth respect your glory;
when Yahweh builds Zion anew,
he will be seen in his glory;

Yahweh is tender and compassionate, slow to anger, most loving;^c
his indignation does not last for ever,
his resentment exists a short time only;
he never treats us, never punishes us,
as our guilt and our sins deserve. 8 9 10

No less than the height of heaven over earth is the greatness of his love for those who fear him;
he takes our sins farther away
than the east is from the west. 11 12

As tenderly as a father treats his children, so Yahweh treats those who fear him;
he knows what we are made of,
he remembers we are dust. 13 14

Man lasts no longer than grass,
no longer than a wild flower he lives,
one gust of wind, and he is gone,
never to be seen there again; 15 16

yet Yahweh's love for those who fear him lasts from all eternity and for ever,
like his goodness to their children's children,
as long as they keep his covenant
and remember to obey his precepts. 17 18

Yahweh has fixed his throne in the heavens,
his empire is over all.
Bless Yahweh, all his angels,

Jr 33:11

Give thanks to Yahweh, for he is good,
his love is everlasting:

1

- 2 let these be the words of Yahweh's redeemed,
those he has redeemed from the oppressor's clutches,
- 3 by bringing them home from foreign countries,
from east and west, from north and south.^b
- 4 Some had lost their way in the wilds and the desert,
not knowing how to reach an inhabited town;
- 5 they were hungry and desperately thirsty,
their courage was running low.
- 6 Then they called to Yahweh in their trouble
and he rescued them from their sufferings,
- 7 guiding them by a route leading direct to an inhabited town.^c
- 8 Let these thank Yahweh for his love,
for his marvels on behalf of men;
- 9 satisfying the hungry,
he fills the starving with good things.
- 10 Some were living in gloom and darkness,
fettered in misery and irons
- 11 for defying the orders of God,
for scorning the advice of the Most High;
- 12 who bent them double with hardship,
to breaking point, with no one to help them.
- 13 Then they called to Yahweh in their trouble
and he rescued them from their sufferings;
- 14 releasing them from gloom and darkness,
shattering their chains.
- 15 Let these thank Yahweh for his love,
for his marvels on behalf of men;
- 16 breaking bronze gates open,
he smashes iron bars.
- 17 Some, driven frantic by their sins, made miserable by their own guilt
- 18 and finding all food repugnant, were nearly at death's door.
- 19 Then they called to Yahweh in their trouble
and he rescued them from their sufferings;
- 20 sending his word and curing them,
he snatched them from the Pit.^d
- 21 Let these thank Yahweh for his love,
for his marvels on behalf of men.
- 22 Let them offer thanksgiving sacrifices and proclaim with shouts of joy what he has done.
- 23 Others, taking ship and going to sea,
were plying their business across the ocean;

e. Prophetic expression for apostasy and idolatry.

f. Closing doxology to the fourth book of the Psalter; followed by a liturgical rubric.

107 a. Hymn of thanksgiving, inspired by the second part of Is, for the mercies of Providence: the Exodus, vv. 4-9, the return from exile, vv. 10-16, the help given to those who suffer, vv. 17-22, and to those on the high seas, vv. 23-32. The epilogue, vv. 33-43, elaborates the wisdom theme of the reversal of situations. There is a two-part refrain: vv. 6 and 8, 13 and 15, 19 and 21, 28 and 31.

- 10 Who is there now to take me into the fortified city, to lead me into Edom?
11 God, can you really have rejected us?
You no longer march with our armies.

108 a. With a few variants an editor has combined 57:7-11 and 60:5-12. See notes to these psalms.

109 a. Slandered and falsely accused, the psalmist invokes divine vengeance, cf. Jr 11:20; 18:19f and Ps 5:10+. In the oriental manner, the litany of imprecations, 6-20, piles up highly coloured curses. Perhaps vv. 6-15 (within quotation marks here) express the accuser's enmity, cf. vv. 2-3, and what follows is the psalmist's retort, invoking the law of retaliation, vv. 16-20, cf. Ex 21:25+.

b. Lit. 'and I a prayer'.

c. Lit. 'let the accuser stand at his right hand'.

The Accuser (Hebr. satan) was a name later given to the devil, cf. Jb 1:6+. He, like the advocate, v. 31, stands on the right of the accused, Zc 3:1; Jb 30:12.

PSALM 111

V 110

In praise of the divine attributes^a

- 1 Alleluia!
- Aleph* I give thanks to Yahweh with all my heart
Beth where the virtuous meet and the people assemble.

d. Greek; Hebr. 'seeking'.

e. Hebr. adds 'before Yahweh'.

f. 'recoil on', 'shun': versions; Hebr. has past tenses. Curse and blessing are here personified.

g. Probable allusion to the trial by water described in Nb 5:11-31.

h. Lit. 'my heart writhes in me'; 'writhes' versions; 'is wounded' Hebr.

i. Lit. 'I am shaken out like a locust'. Possibly, helpless as a locust blown by the wind; more probably 'shaken off' from life.

110 a. The prerogatives of the Messiah, worldwide sovereignty and perpetual priesthood, cf. 2 S 7:1+; Zc 6:12-13, are no more conferred by earthly investiture than were those of the mysterious Melchizedek, Gn 14:18+. V. 1 is accepted in the N. T. epistles and elsewhere as a prophecy of the ascension of Christ to the right hand of the Father.

b. The risen Christ is seated at the right hand of the Father, Rm 8:34; Heb 10:12; 1 P 3:22.

c. Cf. Jos 10:24; Dn 7:14.

d. Zion; the plural is 'of majesty', cf. 87:1 (Hebr.).

e. Verse corr.; Hebr. 'Your people is generosity on the day of your strength, in sacred splendours, from (or: from the time of) the womb of the dawn (meaning uncertain), to you the dew of your youth'. Greek 'With you is the royal dignity... from the womb before the dawn I begot you' (cf. Hebr. MSS, and

2:7). Many Hebr. MSS, Symmachus and Jerome have 'on the holy mountains'. We correct 'your strength' (Hebr.) to 'you were born' (lit 'your birth').

f. As the text stands, this is addressed to the Messiah: the Lord (Yahweh) is to be at his right hand. Possibly the original text attributed the following act of judgement to the Messiah himself, and we should read 'At his (Yahweh's) right hand the Lord (the Messiah, as in v. 1)'. This text may have been corrected in order to reserve the functions of eschatological judge as described in the following lines. However this may be, Jesus, the Messiah and Son of God, claimed this right to judge as his own, Mt 24:30; 26:64; Jn 5:22; cf. Ac 7:56; 10:42; 17:31.

g. As for the following verbs, so here the subject seems to be not Yahweh but the Messiah.

h. 'skulls' Greek; in the singular (collective?) in Hebr. 'he gives...corpses'; lit, 'he heaps up corpses, he smashes skulls over the wide world' (versions 'skulls of man').

i. The Messiah drinks of the torrent of ordeal, 18:4+; 32:6; 66:12, or of the torrent of divine favours, 36:8; 46:4. Or possibly he is compared to the warrior pursuing his enemies, pausing only a moment to quench his thirst, Jg 7:5; 15:18; 1 S 30:9.

j. The text is applied to the suffering and glorified Christ, cf. Ph 2:7-11.

111 a. 'Alphabetical' psalm, like the following which is akin to it in doctrine, style, and poetic structure.

	Ghimel Daleth	The works of Yahweh are sublime, those who delight in them are right to fix their eyes on them.	2
	He	Every work that he does is full of glory and majesty,	3

b. By instituting the yearly feasts, cf. Ex 23:14+.

c. Allusion to the miracles of manna and quails, Ex 16:1+.

112 a. Expressions used of God in the preceding psalm are here applied to the virtuous man.

b. The word indicates both the virtue and the happiness that rewards it.

c. Lit. 'he rises'. What has been said of God, 18:28; 27:1, is here applied to the virtuous man. Others translate 'For the virtuous man in darkness a light arises; the upright man is kind and compassionate'.

d. Lit. 'his horn is exalted in honour'.

113 a. Opening hymn of the Hallel (Ps 113-118) which the Jews recited at the great feasts, including the Passover supper, cf. Mt 26:30p.

b. Like Sarah, Gn 16:1; 17:15-21; 18:9-15; 21:1-7, and Hannah, 1 S 1-2.

114 a. This hymn, which the versions wrongly unite with the following, treats in parallel, cf. 66:6+, of the crossing of the Red Sea and the crossing of the Jordan, Ex 14 and Jos 3.

b. Greek. Hebr. puts the 'Alleluia' at the end of the preceding psalm.

Why skip like rams, you mountains,
why like lambs, you hills? 6

Quake, earth, at the coming of your Master, at the coming of the God of Jacob, who turns rock into pool 7
flint into fountain. 8

The one true God

Ezk 36:22-23
23:3

Not by us, Yahweh, not by us, 1
by you alone is glory deserved,
by your love and your faithfulness!
Do the pagans ask, 'Where is their God?' 2

Ours is the God whose will is sovereign 3 in the heavens and on earth,^a whereas their idols, in silver and gold, 4
products of human skill,

have mouths, but never speak, 5 eyes, but never see,
ears, but never hear, 6
noses, but never smell, hands, but never touch, 7

feet, but never walk,
and not a sound from their throats.
Their makers will end up like them, 8
and so will anyone who relies on them.

Thanksgiving

Alleluia!^a

- 1 I love! For Yahweh listens to my entreaty;
- 2 he bends down to listen to me
when^b I call.
- 3 Death's cords were tightening round me,
the nooses^c of Sheol;
distress and anguish gripped me,
4 I invoked the name of Yahweh:
'Yahweh, rescue me!'
- 5 Yahweh is righteous and merciful,
our God is tenderhearted;
6 Yahweh defends the simple,
he saved me when I was brought to my knees.
- 7 Return to your resting place, my soul,
Yahweh has treated you kindly.
- 8 He has^d rescued (me from death) my eyes from tears and my feet from stumbling.
- 9 (I will walk in Yahweh's presence in the land of the living.)^e
- 10 I have faith, even when I say,
'I am completely crushed'.
11 In my alarm, I declared,
'No man can be relied on'.
- 12 What return can I make to Yahweh
for all his goodness to me?
- 13 I will offer libations to my saviour,
invoking the name of Yahweh.^f
- 14 (I will pay what I vowed to Yahweh;
may his whole nation be present!)
- 15 The death of the devout costs Yahweh dear.^g
- 16 Yahweh, I am your servant,
your servant, son of a pious mother,
you undo my fetters.
- 17 I will offer you the thanksgiving sacrifice,
invoking the name of Yahweh.

1 Aleph

Ah, how happy those of blameless life who walk in the Law of Yahweh!

1:1; 15:2;
112:1
Mt 5:3f

117 a. 'Alleluia' Greek; Hebr. puts it with preceding psalm.

118 a. This psalm ends the Hallel, cf. 113:1+. An invitational, vv. 1-4, precedes the hymn of thanksgiving put into the mouth of the personified community, and is followed by a number of versicles and responses, vv. 19f, 25f, chanted by various groups as the procession entered the Temple. The psalm may have been used for the feast described in Ne 8:13-18, cf. Ezr 3:4; Zc 14:16 and Ex 23:14+. Cf. also Ezr 3:11.

b. 'Alleluia' Greek; Hebr. puts it with preceding psalm.

c. 'the House' Greek; absent from Hebr.

d. Some translate 'I cause them to be circumcised' (John Hyrcanus forced circumcision on the Idumaeans and Greeks).

e. 'blazed' Greek; 'were extinguished' Hebr.

f. 'I was pressed' versions; 'You pressed me' Hebr.

g. Versions 'The right hand of the Lord has raised me up'.

h. The Temple is rebuilt, cf. Hg 1:9; Zc 1:16. The 'keystone' (or 'crowning stone'), cf. Jr 51:26, that may become 'a stone of stumbling', is a messianic theme, Is 8:14; 28:16; Zc 3:9; 4:7, applied to Christ, Mt 21:42p; Ac 4:11; Rm 9:33; 1 P 2:4f, cf. Ep 2:20; 1 Co 3:11.

i. In the Christian liturgy this verse is sung on Easter Day.

j. Ritual cry (Hosanna: 'Oh, grant salvation!') to which the priests answer with a blessing. The acclamation was taken up by the crowds on Palm Sunday and is incorporated in the Sanctus of the Roman Mass.

k. Lit. 'Inaugurate the ceremony with branches up to the horns of the altar!' Ritual of the lulab, branch of myrtle or palm, waved as the procession circled the altar.

119 a. 'Alphabetical' psalm. The 8 verses of each strophe begin with one of the 22 letters of the Hebr.

alphabet and each verse (excepting only v. 122) contains one of the terms for the Law: decree, precept, statute, commandment, promise, word, judgement, way. The word 'law' and its synonyms are here to be understood in the widest sense of revealed teaching, as handed on by the prophets. The psalm is one of the most remarkable monuments of Israelite devotion to the divine revelation.

119 b. 'Life' in this psalm is to be understood in its fullest sense: happiness, security, liberation; a theme recurrent in Ezk 3:21; 18; 33. Cf. Ps 133:3 and Dt 4:1, etc.

c. The greatest of God's enemies, vv. 51,69,78,

d. Or 'remove from me' versions; 'uncover' Hebr.
e. 'your statutes' Greek; absent in Hebr.

f. Lit. 'I have desired' Syr.; 'I have put (your rulings)' Hebr. 'I have not forgotten' Greek.

g. Faithfulness to the commandments is the joy and immediate reward of the upright.

h. A wish often repeated in this psalm and reiterated by the sages.

i. 'by your word' MSS, Targ.; 'in your path' Text. Rec.

r. With versions; 'those who pursue (malice)' Hebr.

s. Lit. 'be my redeemer'.

You will never save the wicked, 155
 if they do not study your statutes, but many are your mercies to me, Yahweh, 156
 by your rulings give me life.
 Many hound me and oppress me, 157
 but I do not swerve from your decrees.
 The sight of these renegades disgusts me, 158
 they do not observe your promise;
 but, Yahweh, see how I love your precepts, 159
 and lovingly give me life.
 Faithfulness is the essence^t of your word, 160
 your righteous rulings hold good for ever.

Shin

Unjustifiably though princes hound me, 161
 your word is what fills me with dread.
 I rejoice in your promise, 162
 like someone on finding a vast treasure.
 I hate, I detest, delusion; 163
 your Law is what I love.
 Seven times daily I praise you 164
 for your righteous rulings.
 Universal peace for those who love your Law, 165
 no stumbling-blocks for them!
 Waiting for you, Yahweh, my saviour, 166
 I fulfil your commandments.
 My soul observes your decrees; 167
 these I wholly love.
 I observe your precepts, your decrees; 168
 you know how I keep to your paths.

Tau

Yahweh, may my cry approach your presence; 169
 let your word endow me with perception!
 May my entreaty reach your presence; 170
 rescue me as you have promised.
 May my lips proclaim your praise, 171
 since you teach me your statutes.
 May my tongue recite your promise, 172
 since all your commandments are righteous.
 May your hand be there to help me, 173
 since I have chosen your precepts.
 I long for you, Yahweh, my saviour, 174
 your Law is my delight.
 Long may my soul live to praise you, 175
 long be your rulings my help!
 I am wandering like a lost sheep:^a 176

- 1 How I rejoiced when they said to me,
'Let us go to the house of Yahweh!' 42:4,6; 43:3 84:2-5;
137:6

t. Lit. 'head'.

u. The 'lost sheep' theme of the prophets, Ezk 34: 1+, is here applied to the individual.

120 a. The 'Songs of Ascents' (Ps 120-134) were probably sung by pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem, cf. 84: 6+; Is 30:29. With the exception of 132 their verses are 'elegiac' (unequal lines: 3 + 2 accents) and the 'stair' device is often used (a verse takes up a word or expression from its predecessor, cf. 120:2-3,5,6 and 7).

b. Lit. 'What will he give you and add to you?', a formula corresponding to the imprecatory oath, Rt 1:17+.

c. The country of the Moschoi, a Caucasian people,

Gn 10:2; Ezk 27:13, where Gog is later to be king, Ezk 38:2. The Arabs of Kedar lived in the Syrian desert. The psalmist makes 'Meshech' and 'Kedar' synonymous with 'barbarian'.

d. Lit. 'I, peace; but when I speak'.

121 a. This psalm is equally appropriate for pilgrims on the hard road to Jerusalem, as for those on their pilgrimage to the heavenly Jerusalem.

122 a. The pilgrims halt at the gates and salute the holy city with 'Shalom!' ('Peace!'), alluding to the popular etymology of 'Jerusalem', 'city of peace', cf. 76:2. This 'peace' plays a prominent part in the messianic hope, cf. Is 11:6+; Ho 2:20+. Affection for holy Zion, 2 S 5:9+, is a characteristic of Jewish piety, cf. 48; 84; 87; 133; 137.

b. Jerusalem solidly restored, Ne 2:17f, is a symbol of the unity of the chosen people (versions 'that is one in fellowship') and a type of the unity of the Church.

c. Lit. 'tents' corr. (one MS; cf. Jb 12:6).

123 a. Probably composed shortly after the return from exile or in the time of Nehemiah; the restored community was exposed to the contempt and hostility of surrounding pagans, cf. Ne 2:19; 3:36.

b. Lit. 'for the proud', meaning uncertain.

124 a. Thanksgiving for dangers overcome, described in conventional metaphors.

125 a. With Greek and Vulg.; Hebr. 'He will not permit a sceptre of the wicked to fall'.

126 a. For the returned exiles faced with the difficulties of reconstruction (cf. Ne 5, etc.), the return from Babylon portends the coming of the messianic age.

b. Which, nearly always dry, cf. Jb 6:15, fill swiftly in winter and fertilise the soil.

127 a. Without God, man's work is useless; daily bread and children are gifts from God.

b. Lit. 'he gives to his loved one in sleep', or 'he gives sleep'; versions 'while he gives sleep to those he loves'. The Hebr. title of the psalm identifies the 'loved one' with Solomon, cf. 2 S 12:25, and possibly the 'sleep' with Solomon's dream at Gibeon, 1 K 3:5.

c. Lit. 'when he speaks with his enemies in the gate', i.e. the gate of the city, where business is transacted.

128 a. This psalm celebrates the domestic happiness granted by God to the virtuous, in accordance with the teaching of the sages on earthly retribution.

129 a. The early days of Israel's history: the years in Egypt and the entry into Canaan.

b. Lit. '(let them be like grass) that the east wind blasts' conj.; 'before it is gathered it dries up' Hebr.

130 a. Penitential psalm, cf. 6: inscr., but still more a psalm of hope; it takes a prominent place in the Christian liturgy for the dead, not as a lament but as an expression of trust in God the Redeemer.

b. Lit. 'that you may be feared'; Greek 'because of your law'.

c. The text of vv. 5-7 is disordered. Greek '5 I await you, Lord, my soul awaits your word; 6 my soul relies on the Lord, from dawn-watch to night (Jerome and Syr.; to morning-watch). 7 From dawn-watch let Israel rely on the Lord.'

Let Israel rely on Yahweh
 as much as the watchman on the dawn!
 For it is with Yahweh that mercy is to be found,
 and a generous redemption;
 it is he who redeems Israel from all their sins.

INTRODUCTION TO THE PROVERBS

The Book of Proverbs is the most representative work of Israelite wisdom literature, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books. The body of the book is made up of two collections: 10-22:16, called 'The proverbs of Solomon' (375 aphorisms) and ch. 25-29, introduced by 'The following also are proverbs of Solomon, transcribed by the men of Hezekiah' (128 aphorisms). Appendices have been added to each of these two collections: to the first, 'sayings of the sages' (22:17-24:22) and 'The following also are taken from the sages' (24:23-34); to the second, 'the sayings of Agur' (30:1-14), followed by numerical proverbs (30:15-33) and 'the sayings of Lemuel' (31:1-9). The whole is preceded by a long introduction, ch. 1-9, in which a father commends wisdom to his son and in which Wisdom herself intervenes. The book closes with an alphabetical poem in praise of the ideal wife, 31:10-31.

The order in which the central sections are arranged is of little importance: it differs in the Greek Bible, and the maxims inside the various sections are juxtaposed without concern for logical sequence. The book is therefore a collection of collections, within the framework of a prologue and epilogue. It reflects a hint of literary development, outlined in the general Introduction to the Wisdom Books. The two main collections show the mashal in its most primitive form and consist exclusively of brief aphorisms, usually of a single couplet. In the appendices, however, the form is more elaborate; the short numerical poems of 30:15-33, cf. 6:16-19, add the charm of a riddling manner to their edifying matter, a device already practised in earlier times, cf. Am 1. The prologue, ch. 1-9, consists of a long discourse interrupted by two exhortations from Wisdom personified; the epilogue, 31:10-31, is a 'learned' composition.

This evolution of form corresponds to successive periods of literary activity. The earliest sections are the two great collections, ch. 10-22 and 25-29. These are attributed to Solomon who, according to 1 K 5:12, was the author of 'three thousand proverbs' and who was always considered to have been the greatest sage of Israel. The impersonal accent of the proverbs makes it impossible for us to assign any particular maxim to the king, but there is no reason to doubt that this collection as a whole dates from his time; the maxims of the second collection were already ancient when 'the men of Hezekiah' collected them, in about 700 B.C. These two collections form the core of the book and give it its full name, 'the proverbs of Solomon', 1:1. The sub-titles of the smaller sections however show that this title is not to be taken too literally, embracing, as it does, the aphorisms of anonymous sages, 22:17-24:34, and the sayings of Agur and Lemuel, 30:1-31:9. Even if the names of these two Arabian sages are fictitious and did not belong to real people, they testify to a respect for the wisdom of other lands, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books. Clear proof of this respect is to be found in some of the 'sayings of the sages', 22:17-23:11, which are based on the Egyptian maxims of Amenemophis, committed to writing at the beginning of the first millennium B.C. The imitation is by no means slavish, and bears witness to the originality of the Israelite sages. The nucleus of the book, ch. 10-29, may therefore safely be dated in the pre-exilic period; the date of ch. 30-31 is uncertain. The prologue, ch. 1-9, is certainly later: it has literary affinities with post-exilic writings suggesting the fifth century as the date of its composition, which is also presumably when the whole book was given its definitive form.

Since, then, the book represents several centuries of thought on the part of the sages, developments of doctrine are discernible in it. In the two primitive collections the dominant tone is that of human, worldly wisdom, disconcerting to the Christian reader, though even here one proverb in every seven is religious in theme. This religious teaching is not speculative but practical: God rewards truth, charity, purity of heart, humility, and punishes their contrary vices. The source and the sum of all these virtues is wisdom, that is to say the fear of God, 15:16,33; 16:6; 22:4, in whom alone man must put his trust, 20:22, 29:25. The opening chapters offer the same principles of human and sacred wisdom; they emphasise vices of which the earlier sages do not speak, such as adultery, 2:16f; 5:2f,15f. The epilogue, too, bears witness to a greater respect for women. More important still, the prologue offers the first example of a logically ordered doctrine of wisdom, its worth and its function as guide and controller of behaviour. The speaker is Wisdom herself; she sings her own praise and explains her relationship with God, in whom she has been from all eternity and whom she assisted when he made the world, 8:22-30. This is the earliest of all the texts (listed in Introduction to Wisdom Books) to deal with Wisdom personified.

The teaching of the Book of Proverbs has undoubtedly been far transcended by that of Christ, the Wisdom of God; even so, several maxims anticipate the moral teaching of the gospel. It should also be remembered that true religion can only develop on the foundations of human decency; while the frequent use of the book (fourteen quotations and about twenty allusions) made by the New Testament, commands the respect of Christians for these thoughts of the ancient sages of Israel.

THE PROVERBS

Title and purpose of the book

- 1 1 The proverbs of Solomon son of David, king of Israel:
2 for learning what wisdom and discipline are,
3 for understanding words of deep meaning,
4 for acquiring an enlightened attitude of mind —virtue, justice and fair-dealing;
5 for teaching sound judgement to the ignorant,
6 and knowledge and sense to the young;
7 for perceiving the meaning of proverbs and obscure sayings,
the sayings of the sages and their riddles.
8 Let the wise listen and he will learn yet more,
9 and the man of discernment will acquire the art of guidance.
10
11 The fear of Yahweh is the beginning of knowledge;^a 12 fools spurn wisdom and discipline.

A COMMENDATION OF WISDOM

The sage speaks: avoid bad company

- 8 Listen, my son, to your father's instruction,
9 do not reject your mother's teaching:
10 they will be a crown of grace for your head,
11 a circlet for your neck.
12 My son, if sinners try to seduce you,
13 do not give way.
14 If they say, 'Come with us:
15 there is blood to be had if we lie in wait for it,
16 if we plan an ambush for the innocent;
17 we can swallow them alive, like Sheol,
18 alive and whole like those who go down to the Pit.
19 We shall find treasures of every sort,
20 we shall fill our houses with plunder;
21 throw in your lot with us:
22 one purse between us all.'
23 My son, do not follow them in their way,
24 keep your steps out of their path

Wisdom, a safeguard against bad company

2

	My son, if you take my words to heart, ^a if you set store by my commandments, tuning your ear to wisdom, and applying your heart to truth:	1
	yes, if your plea is for clear perception, if you cry out for discernment,	2
3:14; 8:19; 16:16	if you look for it as if it were silver, and search for it as for buried treasure,	3
Mt 13:44-46	you will then understand what the fear of Yahweh is, and discover the knowledge of God.	4
1 K 4:9 Jb 28:23; 32:8 Ps 141:5	For Yahweh himself is giver of wisdom, from his mouth issue knowledge and discernment.	5
		6

- 7 He keeps his help for honest men,
he is the shield of those whose ways are honourable;
- 8 he stands guard over the paths of justice,
he keeps watch on the way of his devoted ones.
- 9 Then you will understand what virtue is, justice, and fair dealing,
all paths that lead to happiness.
- 10 When wisdom comes into your heart and knowledge is a delight to you, 11 then prudence will be there to watch over you,
and discernment be your guardian 12 to keep you from the way that is evil, from the man whose speech is deceitful, 13 from those who leave the paths of honesty to walk the roads of darkness:
14 men who find their joy in doing wrong,
and their delight in deceitfulness, 15 whose tracks are twisted,
and the paths that they tread crooked.
- 16 Keeping you also from the alien woman,^b
from the stranger, with her wheedling words; 17 she has left the partner of her younger days,
she has forgotten the covenant of God;
18 towards death her house is declining, down to the Shades her paths go.
- 19 Of those who go to her not one returns,
they never regain the paths of life.
- 20 So you will pursue the way of good men,
persisting in the paths of the virtuous.
- 21 For the land will be for honest men to live in the innocent will have it for their home;
- 22 while the wicked will be cut off from the land,
and the faithless rooted out of it.

b. 'you sit down' Greek; 'you lie down' Hebr.

c. 'Neighbour' originally meant companion, friend, associate, i.e., one with whom a man had a specific relationship. But in Pr the word takes on a wider sense 'fellow man', cf. 6:1,3,29; 25:9; 27:17. This is the first step towards the broadening of the precept of charity, Lv 19:18, which will reach its final form in the command of Jesus 'love your enemies', Mt 5:43f.

d. The seeming prosperity of the godless ('men of violence', 'perverse men', 'wicked', 'mockers', 'fools', various terms for the enemies of Yahweh) has always been a threat to the constancy of the Israelites, cf. 24:1,19; Ps 73, and later becomes a serious theological problem, Jr 12:1; Jb 21:7, etc.

- 1 6 My son, if you have gone surety for your neighbour, if you have guaranteed the bond of a stranger,
2 if you have committed yourself with your own lips,
if through words of yours you have been entrapped, 3 do this, my son, to extricate yourself—
since you have put yourself in the power of your neighbour:
go, go quickly, and plead with your neighbour,

- 7 no one gives her orders,
no overseer, no master,
8 yet all through the summer she makes sure of her food, and gathers her supplies at harvest time.^d
- 9 How long do you intend to lie there, idler?
When are you going to rise from your sleep?
- 10 A little sleep, a little drowsiness,
a little folding of the arms to take life easier,

Qo 4:5

5 a. Following Greek and Lat. The line is absent from Hebr.

b. 'my son' Greek; 'my sons' Hebr.

c. Metaphors for the lawful wife. The condemnation of adultery, 2:16+, is now complemented by this eulogy of marital fidelity and of the lawful wife, vv. 15-18a and vv. 18b-19. For further passages in praise of the ideal wife, a gift from God and the consolation of her husband, cf. 18:22; 19:14 (cf., by contrast, 11:22; 19:13; 21:9,19; 25:24; 27:15; 31:3) and cf. particularly the enthusiastic commendation of the perfect wife with which the book ends, 31:10-31. Perhaps here too, as in 31:10f, behind the characteristics of the lawful wife we should see a symbolic portrait of Wisdom personified. In the context of ch. 1-9, adultery and married faith would, according to the prophetic tradition, cf. Ho 1:2+, stand respectively for religious apostasy and faithfulness to God and his Law as the source of wisdom.

d. 'Do not let' Greek; 'Let' Hebr.

e. 'Let hers be the company you keep' Greek.

f. The four admonitions that follow, 6:1-5,6-11, 12-15,16-19, are an addition; the discourse of the sage is resumed at 6:20.

6 a. Surety was practised in Israel from ancient times. The earliest proverbs contain warnings against its abuse, though the later Si commends it as a charitable work.

b. 'from the trap', 'from the snare' with Greek; 'from the hand' Hebr.

c. A knowledge of nature is part of the sage's intellectual equipment, cf. 1 K 5:13; Pr 30:24-31, etc.

d. Greek adds 'or go to the bee and see how diligent she is and how considerable the work she does. Kings and commoners take what she yields for their health; she is sought after and revered by all; her strength may be feeble, but because she does homage to wisdom she wins respect.'

Disaster will overtake him sharply for this, 15
suddenly, irretrievably, his fall will come.

Seven things hateful to God^f

There are six things that Yahweh hates, 16
seven that his soul abhors:
a haughty look, a lying tongue, 17 hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that weaves wicked plots, 18
feet that hurry to do evil,
1:16 a false witness who lies with every breath, 19
a man who sows dissension among brothers.

- 27 When he fixed the heavens firm, I was there,
when he drew a ring on the surface of the deep,
- 28 when he thickened the clouds above,
when he fixed fast the springs of the deep,

—and the waters will not invade the shore—
when he laid down the foundations of the earth,
- 30 I was by his side, a master craftsman,
delighting him day after day,

delighting to be with the sons of men.

g. The concept of a personified wisdom, a mere literary device in Pr 14:1, was further developed in the post-exilic period, when polytheism was no longer a threat to true religion. In Jb 28 and Ba 3:9-4:4 wisdom is represented as a thing distinct from God and man, desirable in itself; in Pr 1:20-23; 3:16-19 and 8-9 it is represented as a person. Here Wisdom herself reveals her origin (created before all other creatures, vv. 22-26), the active part she plays in the creation, vv. 27-30, and the function she discharges among men in leading them to God, vv. 31, 35-36. This doctrine will be further developed in Si: Si 1:1-10 recalls Jb 28, but Si 4:11-19; 14:20-15:10 and especially 24:1-29 (cf. Si 24:1+) are in line with Pr 8. Wisdom is personified in all these texts but, as in the case of the Word and the Spirit, it is hard to discern how much is poetic device, how much the expression of older forms of religious thought, how much the appreciation of newly revealed truths. Finally, Ws 7:22-8:1 gives the impression that wisdom an 'outpouring of God's glory', has a share in the divine nature, although the abstract terms used may equally well apply to a divine attribute as to a distinct personality. The doctrine of wisdom, thus outlined in the O.T., will be resumed in the N.T., which will give it new and decisive completion by applying it to the person of Christ. Jesus is referred to as Wisdom itself, the Wisdom of God, Mt 11:19p; Lk 11:49, cf. Mt 23:34-36; 1 Co 1:24-30; like Wisdom, he participates in the creation and preservation of the world; Col 1:16-17, and the protection of Israel, 1 Co 10:4, cf. Ws 10:17f. Finally, St John in his prologue attributes the characteristics of creative Wisdom to the Word, and his gospel throughout represents Christ as the Wisdom of God, cf. Jn 6:35+. Hence, Christian tradition from St Justin onwards sees in the Wisdom of the O.T. the person of Christ himself. By 'accommodation' the liturgy applies Pr 8:22f to the Virgin, collaborating with the Redeemer as Wisdom collaborates with the Creator.

h. Thus the Greek, Syr., Targ., cf. Si 1:4,9; 24:8,9, translate the Hebrew verb (qanani). The translation 'acquired me' or 'possessed me' (Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion) was adopted by St Jerome (Vulg.), doubtless with an eye to the heretic Arius who maintained that the Word (= Wisdom) was a created being.

III. A COLLECTION OF THE SAGES

17 Sayings of the sages.

Give ear to my words^g

1:5

and apply your heart to knowing them;

for it will be a delight to keep them deep within you to have them all ready on your lips.

So that your trust may be in Yahweh, today I propose to make your way^f known to you.

Have I not written for you thirty chapters^g
of advice and knowledge,

for you to be able to expound the truth and with sound words to answer those who question you?^h

Because a man is poor, do not therefore cheat him, nor, at the city gate,ⁱ oppress anybody in affliction;
for Yahweh takes up their cause,
and extorts the life of their extortioners.

Ex 23:6

23:11
Is 33:1

Make friends with no man who gives way to anger, make no hasty-tempered man a companion of yours,
for fear you learn from his behaviour and in this risk the loss of your own life.

Qo 7:9
Si 8:15

Do not be one of those who go guarantor, who go surety for debts:

6:1 +

if you have no means of paying — you will find your bed taken^j from under you.

Do not displace the ancient landmark,
set by your ancestors.

15:25 +;
= 23:10
Dt 19:14

You see some man sharp at business?
He will come to serve kings.
Not for him the service of obscure people.

If you take your seat at a great man's table,
take careful note of what you have before you;
put a knife to your throat^a

Si 13:7;
31:12-24

if you are prone to gluttony.

Do not crave his choice food,
for it is doubtful nourishment.

= 23:6

Do not weary yourself with getting rich, and have nothing to do with dishonest gain.^b

You fix your gaze on this, and it is there no longer,

g. 'the goddess' Greek; 'he covets' Hebr.

h. The Greek adds 'to Yahweh' as in 15:8.

i. Or 'prevail against Yahweh'.

22 a. Others translate 'from his earliest years' (lit. 'beginning of his way') or 'according to his dispositions'.

b. 'falls on himself' corr.; 'falls' Hebr. Meaning uncertain.

c. 'Yahweh' following versions.

d. This proverb expresses either a natural law by which hardship alone stimulates effort and procures success, or a religious faith in the justice of Yahweh who will reverse the situations of rich and poor.

e. Following Greek. Hebr. (which lacks the heading) 'Give ear and listen to the words of the wise'.

f. 'your way' Greek.

g. The 'thirty chapters' (corr.; Hebr. 'the day before yesterday' or 'three times') is apparently derived from the text of the Wisdom of Amenemophis on which this whole passage is based.

h. The text adds 'of the words of truth' after 'truth'. 'who question you' corr. following Greek.

i. The city gate where cases were judged, cf. 24:7.

j. Lit. 'they will take' corr. following Greek.

23 a. Presumably 'set bounds to your gluttony'. Others interpret 'To be a glutton is to put a knife to your throat (i.e. to endanger your life)'.

b. Text corr.; 'refrain from dwelling on it' Hebr.

for it is able to sprout wings like an eagle that flies off to the sky.

- 23:3
Si 31:12-24

Do not dine with a niggardly man, 6
do not crave his choice food.
It would be like a tempest in his throat.^c 7
'Eat and drink', he tells you, but his heart is not in it.
You will spit out what little you have eaten 8
and find your compliments wasted.

Mt 7:6

Do not waste words on a fool, 9
he will not appreciate the shrewdness of your remarks.

15:25;
= 22:28 +
Jb 24:9
Si 35:14

Do not displace the ancient landmark 10
or encroach on orphans' lands, for he who avenges them is strong 11
and will take up their cause against you.^d

Ex 22:21-23
Pr 22:23

Apply your heart to discipline, 12
and your ears to words that are wise.

13:24; 19:18
Si 30:1-13

Do not be chary of correcting a child, 13
a stroke of the cane is not likely to kill him.
A stroke of the cane 14
and you save him from Sheol.

My son, if your heart is wise, 15
then my own heart is glad,
and my inmost self rejoices 16
when from your lips come honest words.

24:1
Ps 37:1-4;
73:3

Do not let your heart be envious of sinners 17
but be steady every day in the fear of Yahweh;
for there is a morrow, 18
and your hope will not be nullified.

3:31;
= 24:14
Ps 9:18;
37:37

28:7

Listen, my son, and learn to be wise, 19
and guide your heart in the way...^e

Si 18:33;
31:25-31

Do not be one of those forever tipping wine 20
nor one of those who gorge themselves with meat;
for the drunkard and glutton impoverish themselves, 21
and a drowsy head makes a wearer of rags.

21:17

Listen to your father who begot you, 22
do not despise your mother in her old age.

15:20;
19:26 +
Dt 21:18-21
Tb 4:3

Truth you must purchase, never sell; 23
this is wisdom, discipline, and discernment.

10:1

The father of the virtuous man will rejoice indeed, 24
he who fathers a wise man will have joy of it.

17:25

May you be the joy of your father,^f 25
the gladness of her who bore you!

My son, attend to me, 26
keep your eyes fixed on my advice:

22:14
Si 9:3

a harlot is a deep pit, 27
a narrow well, the woman who is a stranger.

7:12

Yes, like a robber she is on the watch 28 and many are the men she dupes.^g

d. The avenger, cf. Nb 35:19+, is Yahweh.

e. Possibly a word omitted: '(way) of prudence'?

f. Lit. 'May your father rejoice at you'; 'at you' corr., cf. Greek; 'and your mother' Hebr.

g. Lit. 'she increases dupes (corr.; Hebr. 'deceivers') among men'.

24 a. Translation following versions.

b. Too delicate a thing for him to appreciate. Text uncertain. 'The gate' is the city gate where public business is transacted.

c. The thought is obscure; possibly 'when you prosper' should be supplied in the first line.

d. Apparently a reference to innocent men unjustly condemned. It is not certain whether this verse should be taken with the following.

	Eat honey, my son, since it is good;	13
	honey that drips from the comb is sweet to the taste;
Ps 37:37	and such is knowledge of wisdom for your soul:	14
	find it, and there will be a morrow,
= 23:18	and your hope will not be in vain.
	Do not lurk, wicked man, round the virtuous man's dwelling,	15
	do not despoil his house.
	For though the virtuous man falls seven times, he stands up again;	16
	the wicked are the ones who stumble in adversity.
Jb 31:29	Should your enemy fall, do not rejoice,	17
	when he stumbles do not let your heart exult;
	for fear that at the sight Yahweh will be displeased	18
	and turn his anger away from him.
Ps 37:1	Do not be indignant about the wicked,	19
	do not be envious of evil men,
	since there is no morrow for the wicked man;	20
	the lamp of the wicked will be snuffed out.

IV. ANOTHER COLLECTION OF THE SAGES

	The following are also taken from the sages:	23
18:5; 28:21; 31:5 Si 35:13 Jm 2:9	To show partiality in judgement is not good. ^f
	The man who says, 'You are innocent' to the guilty;	24
	the peoples will have only curses for him, and the nations horror;
	but those who deal out punishment have cause for satisfaction,	25
	on them a blessing rests.
	He who returns an honest answer	26
	plants a kiss on the lips.
Si 7:15	On the open ground, plan what you have to do,	27
	make your preparation in the field;
	then you may go
	and build your house.
	Do not bear witness lightly against your neighbour, ^g	28
	nor with your lips deceive.
Mt 6:12,14-15	Do not say, 'I will treat him as he has treated me;	29
	I will repay each man as he deserves'.
6:6; 26:13-16	By the idler's field I was passing,	30
	by the vineyard of a man who had no sense,
	there it all lay, deep in thorns,	31
	entirely overgrown with nettles,
	and its stone wall broken down.
	And as I gazed I pondered,	32
	I drew this lesson from the sight,
= 6:10-11	'A little sleep, a little drowsiness,	33
	a little folding of the arms to take life more easily, and like a vagrant, poverty is at your elbow	34
	and, like a beggar, want'. ^h

V. THE SECOND COLLECTION ATTRIBUTED TO SOLOMON

Jb 12:7
Rm 11:33
- 3 High though the heavens are, deep the earth,
there is no fathoming the heart of kings.
- 4 From silver remove the dross and it emerges wholly purified;^a
- 5 from the king's presence remove the wicked 16:12; 29:14 and on virtue his throne is founded. Ps 101:7
- 6 In the presence of the king do not give yourself airs, do not put yourself where the great are standing; Si 7:4; 13: 9-10
Lk 14:8
- 7 better to be invited, 'Come up here' ✓ Lk 14:7-11
than be humiliated in the presence of the prince.
- What your eyes have witnessed^b
do not come out with^c too quickly at the trial, for what are you to do at the end should your neighbour confute you?
- 9 Have the quarrel out with your neighbour, Si 6:9; 19:8; 22:22
but do not disclose another's secret,
or someone, hearing, will reproach you with it,
and so you lose your reputation.
- 11 Like apples of gold in a silver setting is a word that is aptly spoken.
- 12 A golden ring, an ornament of finest gold, 15:31
Ps 141:5
is a wise rebuke to an attentive ear.
- 13 The coolness of snow in harvest time, 10:26; 25:25
such is the trusty messenger to those who send him:
13:17
he revives the soul of his master.
- 14 Clouds and gusts and yet no rain, Jude 12 such is the man whose promises are princely but never kept.^d
- 15 With patience a judge may be cajoled: Si 28:17
Lk 18:1-8
a soft tongue breaks bones.

e. The second lines of vv. 21 and 22 are corrected according to Greek. Hebr. 'do not ally yourself with agitators... and who knows what ruin will come to them both?' The Greek text here adds five verses:

22a A son who cherishes the word will escape destruction, for he has accepted it willingly.

22b Let nothing false be spoken by the tongue of the king, let nothing false proceed from his tongue.

22c The tongue of the king is a sword, not a thing of flesh:

the man who is handed over to him will be crushed.

22d For once his wrath is aroused he destroys men, sinews and all.

22e He devours the bones of men and, like a flame, burns them up.

they will not serve to feed even the eagles' young.

After this the Greek inserts 30:1-14.

f. The Law forbids the judge to be a respecter of persons, Lv 19:15; Dt 1:17; 16:19. The prophets similarly insist, though in different terms, on this same duty, Am 2:6; 5:7,10; Is 10:2; Mi 3:9,11; Jr 5:28; Ezk 22:12. The Messiah will judge impartially, Is 11:3-5; Jr 23:5-6; Ps 72:4,12,14, like God himself, cf. Ga 2:6.

g. Greek 'Do not bear false witness'.

h. 'like a beggar' translation conj.

25 a. 'wholly purified' Greek; 'a vessel for the smith' Hebr.

b. Translation follows the versions.

c. Lit. 'do not bring out' corr.

d. Lit. 'who boasts of a lying gift'.

25:27; 27:7

Eat to your satisfaction what honey you may find, but not to excess or you will bring it up again. 16

Do not set foot too often in your neighbour's house, for fear he tires of you and comes to hate you. 17

A mace,^e a sword, a keen arrow, such is the man who bears false witness against his neighbour. 18

Decaying tooth, lame foot,
such is the fickle man when trusted in time of trouble.
As well take off your coat in bitter weather. 19 20

It is to treat a wound^f with vinegar to sing songs to a sorrowing heart.

Ex 23:4-5 +
Mt 5:44f

If your enemy is hungry, give him something to eat;
if thirsty, something to drink. 21

20:22

By this you heap red-hot coals on his head,

A churned up spring, a fountain fouled:
such is the virtuous man trembling before the wicked. 26

25:16

It is not good to eat too much honey, or to be taken in by fawning words.^g 27

16:32

An open town, and without defences:
such is the man lacking self-control. 28

26

Snow no more befits the summer, or rain the harvest-time, than honours befit a fool. 1

Nb 23:8

As the sparrow escapes, and the swallow flies away, so the undeserved curse will never hit its mark. 2

Dt 23:5f

Si 33:25;

VI. THE SAYINGS OF AGUR

30 The sayings of Agur son of Jakeh, of Massa.^a Oracle of this man for 1
Ithiel, for Ithiel and for Ucal.^b

Surely I must be the most stupid of men, 2

bereft of human intelligence,

I have not learnt wisdom, 3

and I lack the knowledge of the Holy Ones.^c

Who has mounted to the heavens, then descended? 4

Who has gathered the wind in the clasp of his hand?

Who has wrapped the waters in his cloak?

Who has set all the ends of the earth firm?

What is his name, or the name of his son,

if you know it?

Every word of God is unalloyed, 5

he is the shield of those who take refuge in him.

To his words make no addition, 6

lest he reprove you and know you for a fraud.

Two things I beg of you, 7

do not grudge me them before I die:

keep falsehood and lies far from me, 8

give me neither poverty nor riches,

grant me only my share of bread to eat,

for fear that surrounded by plenty, I should fall away 9

and say, 'Yahweh—who is Yahweh?'

or else, in destitution, take to stealing and profane the name of my God.

Do not denounce a slave to his master, 10

lest he curse you, and you suffer for it.

There is a breed of man who curses his father 11

and does not bless his mother;

a breed that, laying claim to purity, 12

has yet not been cleansed of its filth;

a breed haughty of eye, 13

with disdain in every glance;

a breed with swords for teeth, 14

with knives for jaws,

with which to devour the poor and rid the earth of them, to devour the needy and rid mankind of them.^d

yet they make their home in the rocks; 27 the locusts, these have no king,
and yet they all march in good order;^j 28 the lizard which you can catch in your hand, yet it frequents the palaces of kings.

6:6-8

29 There are three things of stately tread, four, indeed, of stately bearing:

30 the lion, bravest of beasts,
he will draw back from nothing;
31 the cock that proudly struts among the hens,
the he-goat, leader of the flock,
and the king when he harangues his people.^k

32 If you have been foolish enough to fly into a passion and now have second thoughts, lay your hand on your lips.

Si 5:12

33 For by churning the milk you produce butter,
by wringing the nose you produce blood,
and by whipping up anger you produce strife.

30 a. 'of Massa' corr.; 'the oracle' Hebr. On Massa cf. 31:1+. The Vulgate does not take these as proper names and translates 'Words of him who gathers, the son of him who vomits'. In the Greek text 30:1-14 has been inserted between 24:22 and 24:23, and 30:15-31:9 follows 24:34.

b. Interpretation very doubtful. Others render 'I am weary, O God, I am weary, I am worn out'. Vulg. 'Vision told by the man with whom God is and who, God being with him, has been consoled'. Greek 'This is what the man says to those who trust in God, and I cease'.

c. I.e. of the sages, or 'of the Holy One' (with plural of majesty), i.e. of God.

d. It is not known whether this portrait, vv. 11-14, should be applied to a specific nation or social class, or to individuals.

e. The 'numerical proverb' has in it an element of maxim, of riddle, of comparison. This literary device is already found earlier in an undeveloped form, in Hebr. prophetic literature, Am 1:3,6,9,11,13; Is 17:6; Mi 5:4; cf. Ps 62:11f, and recurs throughout the Wisdom books, Pr 6:16f; 30:15-33; Jb 5:19; 40:5; Qo 11:2; 4:12(?); Si 23:16f; 25:7; 26:5-7,28; 50:25; cf. 25:1,2. This small collection, 30:15-33, betrays a special interest in the wonders of nature and in the habits of animals.

f. 'an ageing mother' Greek; 'the man who obeys his mother' Hebr.

g. 'supplanting' Greek; 'inheriting from' Hebr.

h. 'wisest of the wise' versions.

i. The hyrax, a small and very shy rock-dwelling mammal. Cf. Ps 104:18; Lv 11:5.

j. 'in good order' Greek; 'in bands' Hebr.

k. Following Greek. Hebr. 'the animal with agile (?) loins and the he-goat, and a king when his army is with him'.

IX. ALPHABETIC POEM ON THE PERFECT WIFE^e

5:15; 11:16; 12:4; 18:22 Si 26	Aleph	A perfect wife—who can find her? She is far beyond the price of pearls.	10
	Beth	Her husband's heart has confidence in her, from her he will derive no little profit.	11
	Ghimel	Advantage and not hurt she brings him all the days of her life.	12
	Daleth	She is always busy with wool and with flax, she does her work with eager hands.	13
	He	She is like a merchant vessel bringing her food from far away.	14
	Waw	She gets up while it is still dark giving her household their food, giving orders to her serving girls.	15
	Zain	She sets her mind on a field, then she buys it; with what her hands have earned she plants a vineyard.	16
	Heth	She puts her back into her work and shows how strong her arms can be.	17
	Teth	She finds her labour well worth while; her lamp does not go out at night.	18
	Yod	She sets her hands to the distaff, her fingers grasp the spindle.	19
	Kaph	She holds out her hand to the poor, she opens her arms to the needy.	20

- 21 Lamed Snow may come, she has no fears for her household, with all her servants warmly clothed.^f
- 22 Mem She makes her own quilts,
she is dressed in fine linen and purple.
- 23 Nun Her husband is respected at the city gates,
taking his seat among the elders of the land.
- 24 Samek She weaves linen sheets and sells them,
she supplies the merchant with sashes.
- 25 Ain She is clothed in strength and dignity,
she can laugh at the days to come.^g
- 26 Pe When she opens her mouth, she does so wisely;
on her tongue is kindly instruction.
- 27 Sade She keeps good watch on the conduct of her household, no bread of idleness for her.
- 28 Qoph Her sons stand up and proclaim her blessed,
her husband, too, sings her praises:
- 29 Resh 'Many women have done admirable things,
but you surpass them all!'
- 30 Shin Charm is deceitful, and beauty empty;
the woman who is wise^h is the one to praise.
- 31 Give her a share in what her hands have worked for,
and let her works tell her praises at the city gates.

The Hebr. gloss, incorporated and developed by the Greek ('a wise woman will be praised—the fear of the Lord, that is the thing to boast of') seems to show that the scribes understood this whole passage allegorically as a description of Wisdom personified, cf. 8:22+. This would make it an apt conclusion to the book. The Roman liturgy applies the passage to Holy Women.

INTRODUCTION TO ECCLESIASTES

The title of this short book reads: 'The Words of Qoheleth, son of David, king in Jerusalem'. 'Qoheleth', cf. 1:2 and 12; 7:27; 12:8-10, is not a proper name but a common noun, sometimes preceded by the definite article; though feminine in form it is treated as a masculine. The most likely explanation is that Qoheleth indicates the function of one who speaks in the assembly (qahal; in Greek the ekklesia, hence the book's Latin and English title transliterated from the Greek Bible); it could therefore be rendered: the Preacher. This Preacher is called 'son of David and king in Jerusalem', 1:12, and there is no doubt that he is identified with Solomon to whom the text makes clear reference, 1:16 (cf. 1 K 3:12; 5:10-11; 10:7) and 2:7-9 (cf. 1 K 3:13; 10:23), though the name is not mentioned. This, however, is no more than a conventional literary device; the author commends his thoughts to the public under the name of the greatest sage in Israel. The book's vocabulary and style, as also its doctrine of which we shall speak later, make it impossible to date it before the Exile. It has often been maintained that the author is not one but many, that two, three, four or even eight hands can be detected. But there is a growing dislike for any dissection that betrays a misunderstanding of the book's literary form and of its theme.

As with the other Wisdom Books such as Job and Ecclesiasticus, not to mention the composite Book of Proverbs, the theme progresses fitfully: the idea is stated, repeated, amended. There is no defined plan here, rather variations on a single theme, the emptiness of things human, which is enunciated at the beginning of the book, 1:2, and at the end, 12:8. Knowledge, wealth, love, life itself, all these things are illusory. Life is no more than a succession of unrelated and meaningless events, 3:1-11, ending in senility, 12:1-7, and death befalling wise and foolish, rich and poor, man and beast alike, 3:14-20. Qoheleth's problem is the same as Job's: do virtue and vice get their deserts on this earth? Both Qoheleth and Job answer: No. Experience gives the lie to the conventional answer, 7:25-8:14. But, unlike Job who seeks a meaning for his sufferings, Qoheleth enjoys good health yet discovers that happiness itself is an empty thing and consoles himself with the limited joys that life has to offer, 3:12-13; 8:15; 9:7-9. Or rather he tries to console himself, for indeed his failure is as evident at the end as at the beginning. He taxes his brain over the problem of a future life, but in vain, 3:21; 9:10; 12:7. And yet he has faith in God: the ways of God to man may dismay him, but God, he says, does not need to justify them, 3:11,14; 7:13, while man for his part must resign himself to accepting the sorrows and joys that God sends, 7:14, in bad times and good keeping the commandments and obeying a God who reads the human heart, 12:13-14, cf. 9:1.

The doctrine as we have stated it is drawn from the whole book, including the last few verses which raise doubts even among those who maintain the unity of authorship. And indeed its incoherency is obvious. Rather than explain the self-corrections and self-contradictions by a plurality of authors, it would seem preferable to attribute them to the oscillation of one man's mind confronted with a mystery of mysteries and lacking the data for a solution. No answer could satisfy either Qoheleth or Job but that of reward and punishment beyond the grave, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books.

This book has the characteristics of a period of transition. The old conventional convictions have been shaken and as yet nothing has taken their place. Hebrew thought is here at the crossroads and foreign influence on Qoheleth's thinking has been the object of recent study. Scholars have looked to Egypt with its Dialogue of the Man weary of life with his soul and the Sad Songs of the Harpists; they have seen the influence of Greece (exercised through the Egypt of the hellenistic period) with its Stoic, Epicurean, and Cynic philosophies. No detailed comparison carries conviction but all breathe the same atmosphere. Qoheleth is a Palestinian Jew but, being a sage by profession, he is alive to international thought and sensitive to foreign influence. We have here the first though indirect contact with hellenism. This dates the book. It must have been written at some time in the 3rd century B.C., during the Greek period but before the time of the Maccabees when fresh faith and a new hope came to Israel. Palestine was then under the suzerainty of the Ptolemies and therefore orientated towards Alexandria.

Ecclesiastes represents only one stage in the religious development of Israel; it cannot be assessed in isolation from what has gone before and what will follow. By underlining the inadequacies of earlier notions and by compelling reconsideration of the human enigma, it exposes the need of a new revelation. It warns against attachment to the goods of this world and, by denying that the rich are happy, prepares the world for hearing that 'blessed are the poor', Lk 6:20.

PART ONE

Prologue^d

^{Si 14:18} A generation goes, a generation comes, yet the earth stands firm for ever. ⁴
The sun rises, the sun sets; then to its place it speeds and there it rises. •Southward ⁵ goes the wind, then turns to the north; it turns and turns again; back then to its ⁶ ^{Si 40:11} circling goes the wind. •Into the sea all the rivers go, and yet the sea is never ⁷ filled, and still to their goal the rivers go. •All things are wearisome. No man ⁸ ^{Pr 27:20} can say^e that eyes have not had enough of seeing, ears their fill of hearing. •What ⁹
^{2:12; 3:15;} was will be again; what has been done will be done again; and there is nothing ¹⁰
^{6:10} new under the sun. •Take anything of which it may be said, 'Look now, this ¹¹
^{2:16} is new'. Already, long before our time, it existed. •Only no memory remains ¹²
^{Ws 2:4} of earlier times, just as in times to come next year itself will not be remembered.

The career of Solomon^f

I, Qoheleth, have reigned in Jerusalem over Israel. •With the help of wisdom ¹²
¹³ I have been at pains to study all that is done under heaven; oh, what a weary ¹⁴
^{3:10} task God has given mankind to labour at! •I have seen everything that is done ¹⁵
^{Gn 3:17-19} under the sun, and what vanity it all is, what chasing of the wind!^g

^{7:13} What is twisted cannot be straightened, ¹⁶
what is not there cannot be counted. ¹⁷

^{1 K 3:12;} I thought to myself, 'I have acquired a greater stock of wisdom than any ¹⁸
^{5:9-10;} of my predecessors in Jerusalem. I have great experience of wisdom and learning.' ¹⁹
^{10:1-13} Wisdom has been my careful study; stupidity, too, and folly. And now I have ²⁰
^{Sl 47:14-18} come to recognise that even this is chasing of the wind. ²¹

^{Ws 8:16} Much wisdom, much grief, ²²
the more knowledge, the more sorrow. ²³

^{Pr 14:13} 2 I thought to myself, 'Very well, I will try pleasure and see what enjoyment ²⁴ has to offer'. And there it was: vanity again! •This laughter, I reflected, is a ²⁵ madness, this pleasure no use at all. •I resolved to have my body cheered with ²⁶
^{1 K 11:1-3} wine, my heart still devoted to wisdom; I resolved to embrace folly to see what ²⁷ made mankind happy, and what men do under heaven in the few days they ²⁸
^{1 K 3:13; 7:} have to live. •I did great things: built myself palaces, planted vineyards; •made ²⁹
¹⁻¹²

6 myself gardens and orchards, planting every kind of fruit tree in them. •I had 1 Ch 27:27 7 pools made for watering the plantations; •bought men slaves, women slaves; had home-born slaves as well; herds and flocks I had too, more than anyone 8 in Jerusalem before me. •I amassed silver and gold, the treasures of kings and 1 K 9:28; 10 provinces; acquired singing men and singing women and every human luxury, 9 chest on chest^a of it. •So I grew great, greater than anyone in Jerusalem before 10 me; nor did my wisdom leave me. •I denied my eyes nothing they desired, 1 K 10:23 refused my heart no pleasure, a heart that found all my hard work a pleasure; 11 such was the return I got for all my efforts. •I then reflected on all that my hands had achieved and on all the effort I had put into its achieving. What vanity it all is, and chasing of the wind! There is nothing to be gained under the sun.

12 My reflections then turned to wisdom, stupidity, folly.^b For instance, what 1:9 13 can the successor of a king do? What has been done already. •More is to be had from wisdom than from folly, as from light than from darkness; this, of course, I see:

14 The wise man sees ahead, 10:2
 the fool walks in the dark. Jn 8:12+
 1 Jn 2:10-11

15 No doubt! But I know, too, that one fate awaits them both. •‘The fool’s fate’ 6:8

I thought to myself ‘will be my fate too. Of what use my wisdom, then? This, 16 too,’ I thought ‘is vanity.’ •Since there is no lasting memory for wise man or for fool, and in the days to come both will be forgotten; wise man, alas, no 17 less than fool must die. •Life I have come to hate, for what is done under the 18 sun disgusts me, since all is vanity and chasing of the wind. •All I have toiled 19 for and now bequeath to my successor I have come to hate; •who knows whether he will be a wise man or a fool? Yet he will be master of all the work into which 20 I have put my efforts and wisdom under the sun. That, too, is vanity. •And hence I have come to despair of all the efforts I have expended under the sun.
 21 For so it is that a man who has laboured wisely, skilfully and successfully must leave what is his own to someone who has not toiled for it at all. This, too, 22 is vanity and great injustice; •for what does he gain for all the toil and strain
 23 that he has undergone under the sun? •What of all his laborious days, his cares of office, his restless nights? This, too, is vanity.

24 There is no happiness for man but to eat and drink and to be content with 25 his work.^c This, too, I see as something from God’s hand, •since plenty and 26 penury^d both come from God; •wisdom, knowledge, joy, he gives to the man who pleases him; on the sinner lays the task of gathering and storing up for another who is pleasing to God.^e This, too, is vanity and chasing of the wind.

1 a. ‘Qoheleth’ or ‘Ecclesiastes’: the personage of the assembly (Hebr. qahal, Greek ekklesia), i.e. the President or Preacher; or possibly the spokesman for the assembly, personification of the Public which, wearied of conventional teaching, is now itself going to claim a hearing.

b. Literary fiction identifying the author with Solomon, model of sages, 1 K 5:9-14.

c. The traditional ‘vanity’ is retained here; the Hebr. term means primarily ‘mist’, ‘breath’, one of the traditional group of images (water, shadow, smoke, etc.) used in Hebr. poetry to describe the transitory nature of man. But in Qo the word has lost this sense and signifies only the illusory nature of things and hence the delusions to which they subject mankind.

d. The determinism of the cosmos, the monotonous framework of human life. This wearies Qoheleth while exciting Job to wonder and adoration (Jb 38-40; and cf. Ps 104).

e. Or ‘all is (more) wearisome (than) man can say’; this would change the meaning of what follows: ‘The eyes have not seen enough and the ears have not heard their fill’.

f. Solomon himself, for all his pomp, 1 K 10:4f. and despite his wisdom, was not truly happy.

g. I.e. useless effort, waste of time.

2 a. The meaning of the word in post-biblical Hebr. Others interpret ‘a princess, princesses’ or ‘a concubine, concubines’, alluding to Solomon’s harem.

b. Wisdom and folly, of course, are of more and less worth; but wisdom does not secure a progeny to be proud of or a lasting memory; nor does it absolve from death. Hence, why should the wise man bother about either?

c. The maxim, epicurean in flavour, is adduced for the sake of argument; though the author uses it as a refrain, 5:17; 8:15; 9:7, it does not represent his whole view of life; he is not recommending pleasure, to the exclusion of duty, as the ultimate motive of human acts.

d. Text corr.

e. Such was the explanation of the sages for the problem of the prosperous wicked, cf. Pr 11:8; 13:22; Jb 27:16f. Qoheleth comments ironically on the insufficiency of this doctrine.

Death^a

Sl 33:15;
42:2

3 There is a season for everything, a time for every occupation under heaven: 1

A time for giving birth, 2
a time for dying;
a time for planting,
a time for uprooting what has been planted.
A time for killing, 3
a time for healing;
a time for knocking down,
a time for building.
A time for tears, 4
a time for laughter;
a time for mourning,
a time for dancing.
A time for throwing stones away, 5
a time for gathering them up;
a time for embracing,
a time to refrain from embracing.
A time for searching, 6
a time for losing;
a time for keeping,
a time for throwing away.
A time for tearing, 7
a time for sewing;
a time for keeping silent,
a time for speaking.
A time for loving, 8
a time for hating;
a time for war,
a time for peace.

What does a man gain for the efforts that he makes? •I contemplate the task 9 that God gives mankind to labour at. •All that he does is apt for its time; but 10 though he has permitted man to consider time in its wholeness,^b man cannot 11 comprehend the work of God from beginning to end.

I know there is no happiness for man except in pleasure and enjoyment while 12
he lives. •And when man eats and drinks and finds happiness in his work, this 13 is a gift from God.

I know that what God does he does consistently.^c To this nothing can be 14 added, from this nothing taken away; yet God sees to it that men fear him. •What 15 is, already was; what is to be, has been already; yet God cares for the persecuted.
4:1,3; 5:7 But I still observe that under the sun crime is where law should be, the criminal 16 where the good should be. •‘God’ I thought to myself ‘will judge both virtuous 17 and criminal, because there is a time here for all that is purposed or done.’ •I also 18 thought that mankind behaves like this so that God may show them up for what Ps 49:12,20 they are, and expose them for the brute beasts they are to each other. •Indeed, 19 9:4 the fate of man and beast is identical; one dies, the other too, and both have the selfsame breath; man has no advantage over the beast, for all is vanity.

Society^a

- 1 4 I come again to contemplate all the oppression that is committed under 3:16; 5:7
the sun. Take for instance the tears of the oppressed, with no one to protect 2 them; the power their oppressors wield. No one to protect them! •So, rather than the living who still have lives to live, I salute the dead who have already 3 met death; •happier than both of these is he who is yet unborn and has not seen 4 the evil things that are done under the sun. •I see that all effort and all achievement spring from men's mutual jealousy. This, too, is vanity and chasing of the wind.
- 5 The fool folds his arms and eats his own flesh away. Pr 6:9-11
- 6 —Better one handful of repose
than two hands full of effort
- 7 in chasing the wind. •And I observe another vanity under the sun: •a man 8 is quite alone—no son, no brother; and yet there is no end to his efforts, his eyes can never have their fill of riches. For whom, then, do I work so hard and grudge myself pleasure? This, too, is vanity, a sorry business.
- 9 Better two than one by himself, since thus their work is really profitable. Pr 18:19 10 If one should fall, the other helps him up; but woe to the man by himself with 12 two together, but how can a man keep warm alone? •Where one alone would be overcome, two will put up resistance; and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

- 13 Better a lad beggarly yet wise,
than a king old yet foolish
- 14 who will no longer take advice. •The lad may well step from prison to the throne, 15 or have been born a beggar in the kingdom he now owns. •I observe that all who live and move under the sun side with that lad, the usurper who has succeeded.

16 He takes his place at the head of innumerable subjects; sad, if later no one has cause to be glad of him. This too, most certainly, is vanity and chasing of the wind.
- 17 When you go to the Temple, be on your guard. Go near so that you can hear; the sacrifice is more valuable than the offering of fools, even if they are unaware of doing wrong.
- 1 5 Be in no hurry to speak; do not hastily declare yourself before God; for God is in heaven, you on earth. Be sparing, then, of speech: Si 7:14; 18:

Pr 20:25
Si 18:22
- 5 Do not allow your own words to bring guilt on you, nor tell your angel afterwards angry, and destroy what your hands have worked for?

3 a. Half man's occupations are ill-omened, half his activities have to do with sorrow. Death casts its shadow on life, which is a series of contradictory acts, vv. 1-8, without any other goal, vv. 9-13, than death, itself meaningless, vv. 14-22.

b. Or 'God has set eternity in their heart'. This phrase, however, is not to be taken in the Christian sense; it means simply: God has given the human heart (mind) awareness of 'duration', he has endowed him with the power of reflecting on the sequence of events and thus of controlling the present. But, the author adds, this awareness is deceptive; it does not reveal the meaning of life.

c. In the conventional theory of retribution, death is the punishment of sin. For Qoheleth death is no more than the common lot; moral considerations are irrelevant. The fate of man and beast is identical. Even in the realm of justice, might is the criterion of right, vv. 16,18, though God himself shows preference for the weak, v. 15b.

d. This passing doubt is enough to invest death with terror. The concluding words of the book are less wild; the life of man returns to God who gave it, 12:7.

4 a. Life in the social group: brute force and the dangers facing the friendless, 4:1-12, political anomalies, 4: 13-16, mechanical religion and the abuse of vows, 4:17-5:6; tyranny, 5:7-8.

5 a. Allusion to sins committed 'through inadvertence', Lv 4:2,22,27; Nb 15:22,29. The 'angel' parasites abound;

and what is the good of them to their owner? That he can feast his eyes on them. •The labourer's sleep is sweet, whether he has eaten little or much; but the rich man's wealth will not let him sleep at all. •There is a great injustice that I observe under the sun: riches stored and turning to loss for their owner.
One unlucky venture, and those riches are lost; a son is born to him, and he has nothing to leave him. •Naked from his mother's womb he came, as naked as he came he will depart again; nothing to take with him after all his efforts. •This is a grievous wrong, that as he came, so must he go; what profit can he show after toiling to earn the wind, •as he spends the rest of his days in darkness, grief, worry, sickness and resentment?^e

2:24+

This, then, is my conclusion: the right happiness for man is to eat and drink and be content with all the work he has to do under the sun, during the few days God has given him to live, since this is the lot assigned him. •And whenever God gives a man riches and property, with the ability to enjoy them and to find contentment in his work, this is a gift from God. •He will not need to brood, at least, over the duration of his life so long as God keeps his heart occupied with joy.

stranger enjoys them. There is vanity here, and grievous suffering. •Or perhaps a man has had a hundred sons and as many daughters^a and lived for many vanity of it all; and what does man get from it?

PART TWO

Prologue^a

¹ 7 Better a good name than costly oil,
² the day of death than the day of birth.
³ Better go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting;
for to this end all men come,
let the living take this to heart.
⁴ Better sadness than laughter,
a severe face confers some benefit.
⁵ The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning,
the heart of fools in the house of gaiety.
⁶ Better attend to a wise man's reprimand than listen to a song sung by a fool.
⁷ For like the crackling of thorns under the cauldron is the laughter of fools:
this is vanity, too.
⁸ For laughter makes a fool of the wise man and merriment corrupts the heart.^b

Sanctions^c

⁸ Better the end of a matter than its beginning,
⁹ better patience than pride.

¹⁰ Do not be hasty with your resentment, for resentment is found in the heart
¹¹ of fools. •Do not ask why earlier days were better than these, for that is not ¹² a question prompted by wisdom. •Wisdom is a precious legacy,^d a boon for ¹³ those on whom the sun shines. •For as money gives protection, so does wisdom; and the good that knowledge imparts is this: its possessor finds that wisdom keeps him safe.

Pr 22:24
Jm 1:19

Si 39:16,33f

(messenger) may be the priest who witnesses the discharging of the vow, but the LXX reading ('God') suggests that angel is the right meaning here, one of the angelic functions being to give God an account of man's good works, Tb 12:12+; Ac 10:4.

b. Text corrupt: we add 'chasing of the wind'.

c. Lit. 'The profit of the earth is for all, the king is served by the field'. These are common excuses for corrupt administration, cf. 1 S 8:12-14; 1 K 21 (Naboth).

d. A satire not (as in Pr) on the wicked plutocrat but on money itself, ill or well acquired, ill or well used.
Money secures neither life nor happiness. This evaluation prepares the ground for the gospel teaching on detachment, Mt 6:19-21, 24, 25-34. The sequence of ideas is as follows: money is badly distributed, 5:9, squandered, 5:10, hard to come by, 5:11, painful to lose, 5:12-16. Therefore, man may as well spend it as it comes, 5:17-19. Three examples of all this: wealth that goes to another, 6:1-2, the rich man without a tomb, 6:3-6, poverty aping plenty, 6:7-11. Conclusion: 6:12.

e. The translation follows the Greek.

6 a. 'a hundred sons and as many daughters' corr.;
'a hundred (sons) and (living) many years' Hebr.

b. Lit. '(why choose) one rather than the other?'

c. Lit. 'who knows how to walk before the living?'

7 a. Austere strictures on gaiety.

b. 'laughter, merriment' corr. Hebr. 'oppression, bribe'.

c. The Law had enunciated the principle of collective retribution: for Israel, prosperity was contingent on fidelity, cf. Dt 7:12f; 11:26-28; 28:1-68; Lv 26.
The sages had applied this principle to the individual:
God renders to each as his works deserve, Pr 24:12;
Ps 62:12; Jb 34:11. From this they inferred that a man's present condition was proportionate to his deserts.
When experience contradicted this, their answer was:
the prosperity of the wicked and the misfortunes of the virtuous are neither of them lasting. This is the thesis of Ps 37 and of the friends of Job. Qoheleth refutes it.
He counters the conventional solution with scepticism, 7:9-12. Life must be taken as it comes, without seeking explanations, 7:13-15. If life and death are so capriciously ordained, 7:15, there is no point in making superhuman efforts, 7:16-18. Reputation means nothing, 7:19-22. The world of the senses is inexplicable.
Reality is a fathomless mystery, 7:23f (with a parenthesis directed against women, 7:25-28). Fate is blind, pitiless (not sparing kings, 8:1-9) and even perverse,
8: 10-14. Conclusion: 8:15.

d. Lit. 'Wisdom is good as (with?) an inheritance'.

1:15 Consider the work of God; who can set straight what he has made crooked? 13
 When times are prosperous, enjoy your happiness; when times are bad, consider 14 this: the one is God's doing, as is the other, in order that man may know 15 8:14; 9:2 nothing of his destiny.^c • In this fleeting life of mine I have seen so much: the 16 virtuous man perishing for all his virtue, for all his godlessness the godless living on.

Do not be over-virtuous 16
 nor play too much the sage; 17

why drive yourself too hard?

Do not be wicked to excess, 17
 and do not be a fool; 18

Pr 10:27 why die before your time? • The best thing is to hold the one and not let go the 18 other, for both of these will happen to the God-fearing man.^f 19

9:16f Wisdom lends more strength to the wise than ten rulers in a city. • There 19,20
 Pr 21:22 is no virtuous man on earth who, doing good, is ever free of sin. • Another 20,21
 1 K 8:46 thing: pay no attention to telltales; you may hear that your servant has reviled 21
 Jb 14:4; 1 you; • your own heart knows how often you have reviled others. 22
 1 Jn 1:8-9

I have put all this to the test by wisdom, claiming to be wise; but wisdom has 23
 Jb 28:12 been beyond my reach. • Reality lies beyond my grasp; and deep, so deep, who 24
 Ps 64:6 can discover it? 25

Once again I was at pains to study wisdom and retribution,^g to see wickedness 25
 Jg 16 as folly, and foolishness as madness. • I find woman more bitter than death; 26
 Pr 5:3-4; 7: she is a snare, her heart a net, her arms are chains; 26
 Si 42:14 27

He who is pleasing to God eludes her,
 but the sinner is her captive.

This then you must know, says Qoheleth, is the sum of my investigation, putting 27 this and that together. • I have made other researches too, without result. 28 29

One man in a thousand I may find,
 but never a woman better than the rest.^h

This, however, you must know: I find that God made man simple; man's complex 29 problems are of his own devising. 30

8

Who is like the sage? 1
 Who else can solve a problem?
 The wisdom of a man lends brightness to his face;
 his face, once grim, is altered.

Rm 13:1f This I say:^a Obey the command of the king, for the sake of the oath of God;^b 2 do not rashly transgress it; do not be stubborn when the cause is not a good 3 one, since he acts as he thinks fit; • for the word of the king is paramount, and 4 Dn 4:32 who dare say to him, 'Why do that?'

He who obeys the command will come to no harm, and the wise man knows there will be a time of judgement. 5

For there is a time of judgement for everything; and man runs grave risks,^c 6
 10:14 since he does not know what is going to happen; and who can tell him when 7
 Ws 2:1 it will happen? • No man can master the wind so as to hold it back, nor control 8 the day of death. There is no discharge in time of war; no more can wickedness set its author free. • All this I observe as I consider all that is done under the 9 sun, whenever man tyrannises over man to his hurt.

And then I see the wicked brought to burial and people come from the Temple 10 to honour them in the city for having been the men they were.^d This, too, is Si 5:4 vanity. • Since the sentence on wrong-doing is not carried out at once, men's inmost 11

- 12 hearts are intent on doing wrong. •The sinner who does wrong a hundred times survives even so. I know very well that happiness is reserved for those who fear Ps 115:11
- 13 God, because they fear him; •that there will be no happiness for the wicked man and that he will only eke out his days like a shadow, because he does not fear God. 6:12+
Ws 2:5
- 14 But there is a vanity found on earth; the good, I mean, receive the treatment the wicked deserve; and the wicked the treatment the good deserve. This, too, 7:15; 9:2
Ps 73
Jr 12:1f
- I say, is vanity.
- 15 Joy, then, is the object of my praise, since under the sun there is no happiness 2:24+ for man except in eating, drinking and pleasure. This is his standby in his toil through the days of life God has given him under the sun.

Love

- 16 Wisdom having been my careful study, I came to observe the business that goes on here on earth. And certainly the eyes of man never rest, day and night. Si 40:5-6
- 17 And I look at all the work of God: plainly no one can discover what the work is that goes on under the sun or explain why man should toil to seek yet never discover. Not even a sage can discover it, though he may claim to know. 3:11+
- 19 For I have reflected on all this and come to understand that the virtuous and the wise with all they do are in the hand of God.^a Dt 33:3
Pr 16:1
Ws 7:16
- 2 Man does not know what love is, or hate,^b and both of these in his eyes •are vanity.^c Jb 9:22; 21:26
- Just as one fate comes to all, to virtuous as to wicked, to clean and unclean, to him who sacrifices and him who does not sacrifice, so it is with the good man 7:15; 8:14
- 3 and the sinner, with him who takes an oath and him who shrinks from it. •This is the evil that inheres in all that is done under the sun: that one fate comes to all; further, that the hearts of men should be full of malice; that they should practise
- 4 such extravagances towards the living in their lifetime and the dead thereafter.^d For anyone who is linked with all that live still has some hope,^e a live dog being 3:19-21
- 5 better than a dead lion. •The living know at least that they will die, the dead know nothing; no more reward for them, their memory has passed out of mind. Jb 21:21
Ws 2:4
- 6 Their loves, their hates, their jealousies, these all have perished, nor will they ever again take part in whatever is done under the sun.^f Si 14:19

Jg 9:13
- for what you do God has approved beforehand.
- 8 Wear white all the time, do not stint your head of oil.

- 9 Spend your life with the woman you love, through all the fleeting days of the life that God has given you under the sun; for this is the lot assigned to you in life Pr 5:15+

Chance^a

I see this too under the sun: the race does not go to the swift, nor the battle 11 to the strong; there is no bread for the wise, wealth for the intelligent, nor favour for the learned; all are subject to time and mischance. •Man does not know his 12 hour; like fish caught in the treacherous net, like birds taken in the snare, so is man overtaken by misfortune suddenly falling on him.

Est 6:3; Pr 21:22 I observe another evil^a under the sun, to me a grave one. •There was a 13 small town, with only a few inhabitants; a mighty king marched against it, laid siege to it and built great siege-works round it. •But a poverty-stricken sage 15 confronted him and by his wisdom saved the town. g. A less coherent section than those preceding: Qoheleth here assembles sayings and illustrations on the subject of chance. Chance ignores merits, 9:11-12. Many things fail or succeed for trivial causes, 9:13-10:20. Life is a game of chance: risk is an essential part of it, 11:1-6.

f. Also translated 'in sleep'.

11 a. Some take this to mean bait thrown in the water by the fisherman and recovered in the form of his catch; others interpret 'bread' as merchandise, shipped abroad and bringing home a profit. This passage on taking chances throws light on the attitude Qoheleth wishes to instil into his disciple. He does not wish to discourage him for discouragement's sake, but to rob him of his illusions and thus save him from error. After all, risks do have to be taken.

b. Long life was the reward promised to the Israelites in the discourses of Dt (5:16,33; 11:9,21; 22:7, etc.), and was the greatest happiness the sages had to offer the virtuous. For Qoheleth, old age is not happiness but fear of death, 11:8, regrets for youth, 11:8-12:2, the slowing-down of life, 12:3-5b, a waiting for the irremediable, 12:5c-7.

Besides being a sage, Qoheleth also taught his knowledge to the people, 9 having weighed, studied and amended a great many proverbs. •Qoheleth tried 10 to write in an attractive style and to set down truthful thoughts in a straightforward manner.

The words of the sages are like goads, like pegs driven deep; a shepherd uses 11

d. Here again, cf. 1:4f, indifferent nature forms the backcloth for human death. The old man dies at the very moment that nature revives with the spring. 'is heavy with food', 'bears its fruit', corr.

e. The earthly part of man returns to earth. But since nothing on this earth can satisfy him, not all of him originates from earth, and that which is of God, returns to God.

f. The book ends as it began but has covered much ground in between. It has taught man his wretchedness but also his greatness, by showing that this world is not worthy of him. It incites the reader to disinterested religion and to that kind of prayer in which a creature, aware of its nothingness, adores the mystery of God. Cf. Ps 39.

g. Commendatory epilogue; eulogy of Qoheleth, vv. 9-11, hardships of writing books, v. 12, advice for a quiet mind, vv. 13-14.

h. Meaning doubtful, text corr.

i. Defective phrase; we insert 'duty'.

INTRODUCTION TO THE SONG OF SONGS

The Song of Songs, that is to say 'the greatest of all songs', is a series of love poems in which lover and loved are now united, now divided, now sought, now found. The lover is called 'king', 1:4 and 12, and 'Solomon', 3:7 and 9; his beloved is called 'the Shulammitte', 7:1, which title, it is thought, is related to the 'Shunammite' of David's time and Solomon's, 1 K 1:3; 2:21-22. That Solomon was a writer of songs Hebrew tradition was aware, 1 K 5:12; for this reason 'the greatest of all songs' was attributed to him (hence the title, 1:1); in the same way as Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and Wisdom were credited to Solomon in his capacity of sage. This titular attribution caused the Song to be placed among the Wisdom Books, after Ecclesiastes in the Greek Bible, between Ecclesiastes and Wisdom (two 'Solomonic' books) in the Vulgate. In the Hebrew Bible it is the first of the five megilloth, or 'rolls', which were recited at the great feasts; the Song was read at Passover.

People have found it surprising that a book that makes no mention of God and whose vocabulary is so passionate should figure in the sacred canon. The doubts in Jewish circles of the 1st century A.D. were, however, settled by an appeal to tradition. On these same grounds the Christian Church has always accepted the Song as part of holy scripture.

Of all the Old Testament books this has been most variously interpreted. Only two of these interpretations are acceptable. The Jewish rabbis understood it allegorically; the relationship of lover and beloved is that between God and Israel, the traditional prophetic marriage metaphor dating from Hosea. The writers of the early Church, with the exception of Theodore of Mopsuestia, adopted the same explanation, though with them the allegory becomes one of Christ and his Church. This allegorical interpretation is accepted, under various forms, by the majority of Catholic commentators today. Some are content with the general theme, the elaboration being purely literary, of God the bridegroom of Israel. Others see in the sequence of the Song the story of Israel's changing seasons of conversion, hope, disillusionment. This last interpretation is fully explained in the footnotes given here.

Other scholars prefer the more obvious meaning. For them the Song is a collection of hymns to true love sanctified by union. And since God has given his blessing to marriage, the theme is of the religious and not merely of the physical order. Other books of the Old Testament touch upon this same subject of human love, Proverbs and Ecclesiasticus for example; the approach is the same as that of the Song and, at times, the very phrases. It is a noble theme and the prophets rightly saw in it an apt image of God's love for Israel. The topic is not unworthy of a book that was to be received into the sacred canon and recognised as inspired.

If we accept the allegorical interpretation, it is permissible to look for a planned arrangement in the Song matching the development of God's relations with Israel, and to establish the date of the book by its historical allusions. This method points to the second half of the 5th century B.C., not earlier. If however the book is a collection of songs, possibly of varying periods, the historical argument is inapplicable; nevertheless, the vocabulary and style themselves indicate a post-exilic origin.

Whatever theory of interpretation we adopt we are justified in applying the Song to the mutual love of Christ and his Church or to the union of the individual soul with God. Mystics like St John of the Cross were wise to use the Song as they did.

THE SONG OF SONGS

TITLE AND PROLOGUE

- 1 1 The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's.
- 2 THE BRIDE Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth.
Your love is more delightful than wine; 4:10 3 delicate is the fragrance of your perfume,^a 1:12
your name is an oil poured out, and that is why the maidens^b love you. 6:8+
- 4 Draw me in your footsteps, let us run.
The King^c has brought me into his rooms;^d
you will be our joy and our gladness.^e
We shall praise your love above wine; 4:10
how right it is to love you.

FIRST POEM

- 5 THE BRIDE I am black^f but lovely, daughters of Jerusalem,^g
like the tents of Kedar,
like the pavilions of Salmah.^h
- 6 Take no notice of my swarthinness,
it is the sun that has burnt me.
My mother's sons turned their anger on me,ⁱ they made me look after the vineyards.^j
Had I only looked after my own!^k Is 5:1+
- 7 Tell me then, you whom my heart loves:
Where will you lead your flock to graze, where will you rest it at noon?^l Gn 37:16

1 a. Throughout the Song this image is symbolic of the charms that entrance and intoxicate the heart.

b. The maidens may represent the nations, cf. Is 23:12; 37:22; 47:1; Jr 14:17, etc. Although Israel is the privileged bride, this does not exclude other nations from falling under the spell of the Bridegroom, cf. Is 45:14+.

c. Yahweh is king of Israel, 1 S 12:12; Is 6:1,5; Jr 23:2; Ezk 34:11-16. He is frequently given this title in post-exilic literature, cf. Dt 33:5; Is 24:23; 33:22; 41:21; 43:15; 44:6; Jr 51:57; Ob 21; Zc 14:9; Ml 1:14, as also in the eschatological contexts in Ps 24:7; 47:8; 48:2; 68:24, etc. The Song may be in the same tradition.

d. Possibly, and in 3:4; 8:2, the Temple in Jerusalem, focus of Israelite devotion in post-exilic times, Ezk 43:1-9 (cf. v. 8); Is 40:3,9,10; 52:8,12; Zc 1:16-17; 2:10-13; 8:3; Ps 132.

e. Abounding joy characterises all the prophecies of salvation, e.g. Is 9:2; 66:10; Jl 2:21,23; Zp 10:7; Ps 14:7; 16:9; 21:1.

f. Symbolic of a serious ordeal, cf. v. 6; Jb 30:30; Lm 4:8.

g. The 'daughters of Jerusalem', distinguished from Zion by a literary fiction, cf. 3:11; Ho 2:4; 9:13, correspond to the chorus in Greek tragedy, appealed to by the speaker to express his thoughts for him.

h. 'Salmah' corr.; 'Solomon' Hebr.

i. The Chaldeans destroyed Jerusalem. They were 'brothers' of Israel, cf. Gn 11:28,31; 15:7; 22:20-23. See also Dt 26:5.

j. The forced labour of the exile.

k. The vineyard of the Bride is Palestine, cf. Is 5:1+; Jr 12:10f; Ps 80, lost to her for a while, Ho 2:5,14,17.

l. Yahweh, shepherd of his people, Ezk 34:1+, will lead them home from exile, cf. Ezk 34:13-15. Noon symbolises the height of happiness, cf. Is 58:10; Ps 37:6; Jb 11:17, here eschatological happiness, cf. Sg 2:17; Is 5:30; 8:20-9:1; Am 5:18,20.

2		—I am the rose of Sharon, the lily of the valleys. ^a	1
		—As a lily among the thistles, so is my love among the maidens. ^b	2
8:5		—As an apple tree among the trees of the orchard, so is my Beloved among the young men. In his longed-for shade I am seated and his fruit is sweet to my taste. He has taken me to his banquet hall, ^c and the banner he raises over me ^d is love. Feed me with raisin cakes, restore me with apples, for I am sick with love.	3 4 5

SECOND POEM

THE BRIDE	I hear my Beloved. See how he comes	8
-----------	--	---

leaping on the mountains,
bounding over the hills.^g
My Beloved is like a gazelle, like a young stag.

See where he stands behind our wall.
He looks in at the window,
he peers through the lattice.

My Beloved lifts up his voice,
he says to me,
'Come then, my love,
my lovely one, come.
For see, winter is past,^h
the rains are over and gone.
The flowers appear on the earth.
The season of glad songs has come,
the cooing of the turtledove is heard in our land.

The fig tree is forming its first figs
and the blossoming vines give out their fragrance.
Come then, my love,
my lovely one, come.
My dove, hiding in the clefts of the rock,
in the coverts of the cliff,
show me your face,
let me hear your voice;
for your voice is sweet and your face is beautiful.'

Catch the foxes for us,
the little foxes
that make havoc of the vineyards,
for our vineyards are in flower.ⁱ

My Beloved is mine and I am his.^j
He pastures his flock among the lilies.

Before the dawn-wind rises,
before the shadows flee,^k

6:11; 7:13-14

=6:3; 7:13

2:1+

m. 'a vagabond' Syr.; Vulg. 'a woman veiled' Hebr.

n. The foreign nations, Jr 6:3, whose kings are 'companions' of Yahweh, Ps 45:7. Straying Israel seeks her Bridegroom, Jr 31:22.

o. Mt. Zion, royal residence of Israel.

p. Exile in Babylon is traditionally compared with slavery in Egypt, Is 11:11,16; 43:16f; 48:21; 51:9-10; 52:4; Jr 23:7-8.

q. Possibly referring to the joyful return from exile.

r. The miraculous fertility of Palestine after the restoration of the exiles, cf. Ho 2:23f; 14:6f; Is 29:17; 30:23f; Jr 31:12,14; Ezk 34:26f; 36:29f; 47:1-12.

s. Cedar and cypress from Lebanon, precious materials of the Temple and the palace of Solomon.

2 a. The 'rose' (actually the crocus) and 'lily' (the red Palestinian anemone, cf. Mt 6:28) are symbolic of spring, and of the eschatological age, cf. Is 35:1; Ho 14:6.

b. Israel has the unique distinction of being God's chosen nation, Dt 7:6+.

c. Once brought back to Palestine, the banquet hall (lit. 'house of wine') of God, cf. Is 62:8; Jr 31:12, Israel will be intoxicated with the wine of divine love. Cf. 1:2, 4, 14.

d. The rallying signal for the captives, cf. Is 11:12; 49:22; 62:10.

e. A play on words (ayyaloth, gazelles; sebaoth, hinds) evoking the name of the Lord of hosts (Elohei Sebaoth).

f. Sleep symbolises the ordeal of exile, cf. Is 51:17, 21-22; 52:1-2; restoration depends on the willing conversion of the Bride, cf. Ho 2:18; Jr 31:19.

g. The mountains of Judah. Cf. Is 40:3-5,9-11; 52:7; 62:10-12.

h. Spring is a symbol of salvation, Ho 14:6-8, cf. 2:5,14, and this description precludes the invitation to return.

i. Cryptic verse, to be understood in the light of Ho 2:14,20 and Jr 12:7f. The little foxes are malevolent neighbours, Samaritans, Ammonites, Arabs, Philistines, hostile to the restoration of Judah, cf. Ezr 4:2; 9:2; 10:18f; Ne 2:19; 3:34f; 4:1, etc.; Ps 60:8-9. Cf. Is 27:2-4; Ps 80:6,12-13.

j. Adaptation of the prophetic formula 'Israel is the nation of Yahweh and Yahweh is the God of Israel', expressing the final restoration of the covenant after a true change of heart. Cf. Ho 2:25; Jr 31:33; Ezk 36:28.

k. This image, like the 'morning' and 'awakening' of Ps 17:15+, stands for the eschatological hour of deliverance; the verse is related to 1:7; 2:7; 3:5; 8:4.

THIRD POEM

6:10; 8:5

What is this coming up from the desert
like a column of smoke,^g breathing of myrrh and frankincense and every perfume the merchant knows?

6

See, it is the litter of Solomon.^h

1 4 THE BRIDEGROOM

How beautiful you are, my love, how beautiful you are!

Your eyes, behind your veil,^a are doves;

4:3; 6:7

your hair is like a flock of goats
frisking^b down the slopes of Gilead.

= 6:5-7

2 Your teeth are like a flock of shorn ewes
as they come up from the washing.

Each one has its twin,
not one unpaired with another.

3 Your lips are a scarlet thread and your words enchanting.

Your cheeks, behind your veil,
are halves of pomegranate.

4:1

4 Your neck is the tower of David built as a fortress,

6:10
Ps 122:7

hung round with a thousand bucklers,
and each the shield of a hero.

Ezk 27:10-11

5 Your two breasts are two fawns,
twins of a gazelle,
that feed among the lilies.

= 7:4

6 Before the dawn-wind rises,
before the shadows flee,
I will go to the mountain of myrrh,
to the hill of frankincense.^c

7 You are wholly beautiful, my love, and without a blemish.^d

8 Come^e from Lebanon, my promised bride,^f come from Lebanon, come on your way.
Lower your gaze, from the heights of Amana,
from the crests of Senir and Hermon,

1. The bride had thought her beloved was coming to her, vv. 8-16, but he is no longer there, cf. 3:1. Israel asks Yahweh to return to her.

m. Lit. 'the mountains of the victims cut in half'. The expression alludes to Gn 15:10 and recalls the scene when Yahweh gave Abraham his promise that the captives would return, Gn 15:16.

3 a. Night symbolises long and painful waiting cf. Is 5:30; 8:22; 9:1; 21:11; 26:9; 59:9; Ps 130:6, etc.,

b. To 'seek' or 'find' or 'not find' Yahweh are expressions occurring often in the prophets, cf. Am 5:4+. Before letting himself be found, Yahweh insists on a true change of heart, Ho 3:5; 5:6,15; Jr 29:13.

c. Jerusalem. Cf. the allusions to the Temple, 1:4,17; 3:4; 5:10-16, and the references to the 'daughters of Jerusalem'.

d. Expressing the discouragement of those back from exile, cf. Is 59:9-11; 63:15-64:11.

e. Possibly the foreign power in control of the capital.

f. The Temple built by the former Israel, mother of the present Israel. The 'room' is the Holy of Holies.

g. Sign, cf. Ex 13:22+, of the presence of Yahweh who leads the exiles home in a second Exodus, cf. Is 40:3+.

h. 'Solomon' (whose name and history are evocative of peace) is here the messianic king who brings the eschatological peace so long desired by the exiles, cf. Is 11:6+, a hope associated with the coming of the Messiah, cf. Is 9:5-6; Ezk 34:23-25; Zc 9:9-10; Ps 72:7-8.

i. The Hebr. word, not used elsewhere in the Bible, seems to suggest the throne room of Solomon, 1 K 7:7, cf. 10:18-20; or (by emendation) the audience chamber of the Persian kings, in which case 'Solomon' would be associated with the Great King.

j. 'ebony' corr.; 'love' Hebr., which adds 'from the daughters of Jerusalem'.

k. Enthronement with messianic overtones. The king's mother is the nation, whose acclamation is the necessary prelude to his assumption of power, cf. 1 S 11:15; 1 Ch 11:10; 29:22, etc. The coming of the messianic age is also the day of the mystical marriage between King Yahweh and his people.

4 a. The bride was veiled when presented to her husband, cf. Gn 24:65; 29:23-25.

b. The Hebr. verb suggests violent movement; the comparison evokes the black waving hair of the bride.

c. Vv. 6 and 7 should probably be interchanged. The mountain of myrrh and hill of frankincense represent the site of the Temple. 'Myrrh' (Hebr. mor) is apparently intended to suggest Moriah, cf. 2 Ch 3:1; incense was used only in sacrifice.

d. Israel has been purified by exile, cf. Is 40:2. The Catholic liturgy applies this verse to the Immaculate Conception.

e. 'Come' versions; 'With me' Hebr. In contrast to 2:8f, it is now the bridegroom who is in Jerusalem (v. 6) calling to the bride.

f. The 'promised bride', or 'betrothed', not yet taken to wife, is in reality wife already: Israel the unfaithful and rejected wife, Ho 2:4; Jr 3:1,8; Is 54:1, 6-7; but when Yahweh takes her back she becomes the 'betrothed' once more, Ho 2:21-22; Is 49:18; 61:10; 62:5.

1:2,4 What spells lie in your love, 10
my sister, my promised bride!

How delicious is your love, more delicious than wine!
How fragrant your perfumes,
more fragrant than all other spices!

Pr 5:3 Your lips, my promised one, 11

Honey and milkⁱ
are under your tongue;
and the scent of your garments
is like the scent of Lebanon.

Ho 14:7 12

6:2 She is a garden enclosed,^j 12
my sister, my promised bride;

a garden^k enclosed,
a sealed fountain.

Pr 5:16 Your shoots form an orchard of pomegranate trees, 13 with all the incense-bearing trees;

myrrh and aloes,
with the subtlest odours.

Pr 5:15-16 Fountain that makes the gardens fertile, 15
well of living water, streams flowing down from Lebanon.

THE BRIDE Awake, north wind, 16
come, wind of the south!
Breathe over my garden,
to spread its sweet smell around.
Let my Beloved come into his garden,
let him taste its rarest fruits.

5 THE BRIDEGROOM I come into my garden, 1
my sister, my promised bride,

I gather my myrrh and balsam,
I eat my honey and my honeycomb,
I drink my wine and my milk.

Eat, friends, and drink,
drink deep, my dearest friends.^a

FOURTH POEM

2:7 + ; 8:5 THE BRIDE^b I sleep, but my heart is awake.^c 2

I hear my Beloved knocking.
'Open to me, my sister, my love,
my dove, my perfect one,
for my head is covered with dew,^d
my locks with the drops of night.'

- 3 —‘I have taken off my tunic,
am I to put it on again?
I have washed my feet,
am I to dirty them again?’^e
- 4 My Beloved thrust his hand
through the hole in the door;^f
I trembled to the core of my being.
- 5 Then I rose
to open to my Beloved,
myrrh ran off my hands,
pure myrrh off my fingers,
on to the handle of the bolt.
- 6 I opened to my Beloved,
but he had turned his back and gone!
My soul failed at his flight.^g 3:1 +
I sought him but I did not find him,^h
I called to him but he did not answer. 3:3 +
- 7 The watchmen came upon me
as they made their rounds in the City.
They beat me, they wounded me,
they took away my cloak,
they who guard the ramparts.
- 8 I charge you, 2:7; 3:5
daughters of Jerusalem,
if you should find my Beloved,
what must you tell him . . . ?
That I am sick with love.
- 9 THE CHORUS What makes your Beloved better than other lovers,
O loveliest of women?
What makes your Beloved better than other lovers,
to give us a charge like this?
- 10 THE BRIDE My Beloved is fresh and ruddy, to be known among ten thousand.ⁱ
- 11 His head is golden, purest gold,^j his locks are palm fronds^k and black as the raven.
- 12 His eyes are doves
at a pool of water,^l

g. From the N. came Israel's traditional enemies ('lions' and 'leopards') and conquerors, Jr 4:7; 5:6; 50:17; 51:38; Na 2:12-14; Hab 1:8. The bride is urged to make her way through the Pass of Hamath in the Lebanon, the regular route for invaders whose arrogance is often symbolised by the cedars of Lebanon, Is 10:33-34; Ezk 31; Zc 11:1-2; Ps 29:5. From this same mountain road the returning exiles gaze down on the land of their ancestors.

h. Expression borrowed from Egyptian love poetry.

i. Typifying the Promised Land, Ex 3:8, etc.

j. Traditional metaphor for the new Israel, Ho 14:6-7; Ezk 36:35; Is 51:3; 61:11.

k. 'garden' ancient versions; 'spring' (?) Hebr.

l. Hebr. adds 'with cypress and nard'.

5 a. The Israelites, invited to enjoy the happiness of the new era.

b. The following passage balances 3:1-4.

c. Among the returned exiles only the best are spiritually alert; see, for example, Is 56-59; 63-66.

d. Dew is symbolic of divine blessings, Ps 133:3, especially those of the eschatological age, Ho 14:6.

e. Empty excuses which the ardour of the bride will refute.

f. Lit. 'the hole' into which a large wooden key was inserted from the outside to slide back the bolt.

g. 'his flight' corr.

h. The prophetic formula, 3:1,3, here used in association with another traditional formula expressing the withdrawal of Yahweh from unfaithful Israel, cf. Is 50:2; 65:12; 66:4; Jr 7:27; Pr 1:28.

i. The allusions are to the description of the Temple of Solomon in 1 K 6-7, cf. 2 Ch 3.

j. Pure gold overlaid the panelling of the Holy of Holies, 1 K 6:20-21; 2 Ch 3:8.

k. The decoration mentioned in 1 K 6:18,29,32,35.

l. In 2 S 22:16 the expression ('springs of water') means 'the sea bed'; here it refers to the 'bronze Sea', 1 K 7:23-26; 2 Ch 4:2-5.

Ps 133:2	bathed in milk, at rest on a pool. ^m

	His hands are golden, rounded, set with jewels of Tarshish.	14
	His belly a block of ivory covered with sapphires.
	His legs are alabaster columns set in sockets of pure gold.	15
	His appearance is that of Lebanon, unrivalled as the cedars. ^o
	His conversation is sweetness itself, he is altogether lovable.	16
	Such is my Beloved, such is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

6 THE CHORUS

Where did your Beloved go, O loveliest of women? Which way did your Beloved turn so that we can help you to look for him?	1 17

4:12-16 THE BRIDE

My Beloved went down to his garden, ^a to the beds of spices, to pasture his flock in the gardens and gather lilies.	2 1

FIFTH POEM

THE BRIDEGROOM

You are beautiful as Tirzah, my love, fair as Jerusalem. ^c	4 3
Turn your eyes away, for they hold me captive. ^d	5 4
Your hair is like a flock of goats frisking down the slopes of Gilead. Your teeth are like a flock of sheep as they come up from the washing.	6 5

7 THE CHORUS

Return, return, O maid of Shulam,^a return, return, that we may gaze on you!^b

1 THE BRIDEGROOM

Why do you gaze on the maid of Shulam dancing as though between two rows of dancers?^c

2 How beautiful are your feet in their sandals,
O prince's daughter!
The curve of your thighs is like the curve of a necklace,
work of a master hand.

3 Your navel^d is a bowl well rounded

your belly a heap of wheat surrounded with lilies.

4 Your two breasts are two fawns, =4:5
3 twins of a gazelle.^e

5 Your neck is an ivory tower.
4 Your eyes, the pools of Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim.
Your nose, the Tower of Lebanon,^f sentinel facing Damascus.

6 Your head is held high like Carmel,
5 and its plaits are as dark as purple;
a king is held captive in your tresses.^g

7 How beautiful you are, how charming,

m. Hebr. obscure. Another reference to the 'bronze Sea'?

n. Lower part of the cheeks where the beard grows, hence the following comparison. Cf. 1 K 6:29.

o. Cedar wood was liberally used in the construction of the Temple, cf. 1 K 6:9, etc.; 'the whole of it was of cedar', 1 K 6:18.

6 a. The garden is Palestine, here identified with the Bride, 4:12.

b. Repetition of 2:16 with an inversion in the first line to emphasise that the bride's return to Yahweh is wholehearted.

c. The text adds 'terrible as armies'. Tirzah ('she is pleasing' or 'favoured') was the first capital of the Northern Kingdom; the second capital, Samaria, is deliberately suppressed. By naming the N. and S. capitals the author hints that the bride is the personification of the new 'Greater Israel'—a traditional aspiration, Jr 3:18+.

d. Lit. 'they take me by storm'.

e. Wives of full status and concubine slaves as in Solomon's harem. Here the women represent the pagan nations; Sg 1:3+, associates them with Israel, uniquely chosen by God, Dt 7:6+.

f. This difficult verse seems to mean that by a spontaneous impulse Yahweh places himself at the head of his people.

7 a. 'maid of Shulam' i.e., 'she who has peace'; in the new Solomon, 3:7+, she has found or recovered her peace.

b. The word 'return' repeated four times evokes the return from exile, cf. 1:7-11; 2:7,13; 3:6; 4:8; 8:5. In Ho and Jr it is the key word of the prophetic theme of the return: the exiles will 'return' home, Jr 3:12; 12:15, etc., cf. Is 35:10; 49:5-6; 51:11; but their hearts must 'return' to God, Ho 3:5; 5:15; Jr 3:14, etc. The play on these two senses in Jr 31:18 (cf. 15:19) is traditional.

c. Lit. 'as a dance of two camps'. Obscure. The following description of the Bride balances that of the Bridegroom in 5:10-16, though here there are references to certain geographical features of Palestine.

d. Jerusalem, in the centre of the nations, Ezk 5:5, cf. 38:12; it is encircled by valleys.

e. Ebal and Gerizim, 'twin' mountains.

f. Possibly Great Hermon, overlooking Damascus.

g. Veiled reference to the king of Tyre, ally of David and Solomon, 2 S 5:11; 1 K 5:15f; 9:10f; 10:11f.

h. Lit. 'daughter of delights', Syr. and Aquila; 'in delights' Hebr.

i. Tamar, 'palm tree', is the name of several women in the Bible, Gn 38:6; 2 S 13:1; 14:27.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF WISDOM

The book entitled 'The Book of Wisdom' by the Vulgate is known in the Greek manuscripts as 'The Wisdom of Solomon'. Its first section defines the function of wisdom in man's destiny and compares the fate of the good and the bad during life and after, ch. 1-5. The second section, 6-9, treats of the origin and nature of wisdom and of how it is to be won. The last section, ch. 10-19, celebrates the part played by Wisdom and by God in the history of the chosen people and, if we except a brief introduction, in one single but critical event in that history, the deliverance from Egypt. This third section contains also a long and exhaustive digression on idolatry, ch. 13-15.

The authorship is attributed to Solomon who, though not named, is clearly indicated in 9:7-8, 12. The speaker is represented as a king, 7:5; 8:9-15, addressing his fellow kings, 1:1; 6:1-11, 21. It is evident, however, that this is a literary device; as with Ecclesiastes and the Song of Songs, this wisdom book is published under the patronage of the name borne by Israel's greatest sage. And indeed the whole book is written in Greek (including the first section, ch. 1-5, wrongly supposed by some scholars to have been originally written in Hebrew). The unity of authorship is apparent in the closely knit composition of the book and also in the consistency of a literary style which is supple and expressive and, when need arises, oratorical.

There is no doubt that the author is a Jew: he is devoted to 'the God of the fathers', 9:1, and proud to belong to 'the holy people', a 'blameless race', 10:15. But he is a hellenised Jew. That he dwells on the events of the Exodus, contrasts Egyptians with Israelites and attacks animal worship shows that he lived in Alexandria, chief city of the hellenistic world under the Ptolemies and home of so many Jews of the Dispersion. When the author quotes Scripture it is from the Septuagint, the Greek version that came from these circles. He lived, therefore, after this version was made but before Philo of Alexandria (20 B.C.-54 A.D.) of whose work he knows nothing; it seems that he wrote towards the middle of the 1st century B.C.

The author is writing for his fellow Jews whose faith is shaken by the attraction of the cultural life of Alexandria, its imposing philosophical systems, its advance in the physical sciences, its fascinating mystery religions, astrology, Hermetic doctrines, its seductive popular cults. Nevertheless, he has the pagans in mind too, hoping to lead them to God the lover of all men; certain remarks and turns of phrase betray this intention. But the intention remains a secondary one; the book is very much more concerned with safeguarding Jews than with conciliating pagans.

Given the author's circumstances, his culture and his purpose, it is not surprising that his work has multiple contacts with Greek thought. The significance of these, however, must not be exaggerated. His hellenistic education provided him with a range of abstract terms and an easy familiarity with processes of argument beyond the capacity of the Hebrew vocabulary and syntax. To this same education he owes several philosophical terms, categories of classification and academic topics. But this restricted and superficial dependence does not mean intellectual commitment: the author borrows only to give expression to ideas deriving from the Old Testament itself. Of the various schools of philosophy and of astrological speculations he probably knew no more than the average cultured man of his own place and time.

The author is neither a philosopher nor a theologian; he is a typical sage of Israel. Like the wisdom writers before him he commends wisdom, born of God, obtained by prayer, mainspring of all the virtues, source of every good. But he outstrips his predecessors, adding to the sum of this wisdom the most recent achievements of human knowledge, 7:17-21; 8:8. The problem of retribution, for so long the study of the sages, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books, finds its solution in this book. The author makes use of the Platonic distinction of body from soul, cf. 9:15, and of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul to proclaim that God has made man imperishable, 2:23, and that incorruption is the reward of wisdom and the way to God, 6:18-19. This life is only a preparation for another in which the virtuous live with God and the wicked are punished, 3:9-10.

His doctrine of God's attribute, Wisdom, is traditional. Wisdom was active in the whole work of creation and Wisdom carries history to its goal. The qualities assigned to Wisdom are from ch. 11 onwards attributed to God himself, but this is because Wisdom and God in his function of world ruler are the same thing. Wisdom, however, is 'an emanation of the glory of the Almighty...a reflection of the eternal light...an image of his goodness' 7:25-26, and is therefore distinguished from God. The author, it seems, goes no further than the other wisdom writers here, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books; it does not appear that he gives Wisdom an existence of its own; but the whole passage on the nature of Wisdom, 7:22-8:8, is a step forward in the expression of the traditional ideas and a deeper perception of them. It is not surprising that the New Testament draws upon this passage for its theology of the Word: Col. 1:15-16; Heb 1:3, and especially St John, Jn 1 passim; 3:16-17; 5:20.

The author was not the first to make a survey of Israel's history. Ben Sira had been before him, Si 44-50, cf. also Ps 78, 105, 106, 135, 136; but his originality emerges in two ways. In the first place he looks for explanations of the facts and outlines a religious philosophy of history behind which lies a fresh interpretation of the texts; so, for example, his disquisition on the moderation that God exercised towards Egypt and Canaan, 11:15-12:27. Secondly, and more significantly, he manipulates the biblical narrative in the interests of his thesis. In ch. 16-19, a sustained contrast between the fortunes of Egyptian and Israelite, the author fills out the narrative with imaginative elements, draws together episodes which in effect were disconnected, makes the facts more than lifesize. All this is an excellent example of midrash, the exegetical method practised later by the rabbis.

Tastes have changed and the Book of Wisdom has lost its original impact, but its first section, ch. 1-9, has much to offer the Christian mind, and the liturgy has made generous use of it.

THE BOOK OF WISDOM

I. WISDOM AND MAN'S DESTINY

On seeking God and rejecting evil

1

Jos 10:1 Mt 6:33	Love virtue, ^a you who are judges on earth, ^b	1
2 Ch 15:2 Pr 8:17	let honesty prompt your thinking about the Lord, seek him ^c in simplicity of heart; since he is to be found by those who do not put him to the test, he shows himself to those who do not distrust him.	2
	But selfish intentions divorce from God; and Omnipotence, put to the test, confounds the foolish.	3
Rm 7:24; 8:2	No, Wisdom will never make its way into a crafty soul nor stay in a body that is in debt to sin; ^d the holy spirit of instruction ^e shuns deceit, it stands aloof from reckless purposes, is taken aback ^f when iniquity appears.	4
Ps 51:12 Rm 8:14		5
7:23 Pr 8:31 Tt 3:4 Heb 4:13	Wisdom is a spirit, ^g a friend to man, though she will not pardon the words of a blasphemer, since God sees into the innermost parts of him, ^h truly observes his heart, and listens to his tongue.	6
Ps 139:7-12 Jr 23:24 Ac 2:4	The spirit of the Lord, indeed, fills the whole world, and that which holds all things together ⁱ knows every word that is said. ^j	7
Pr 22:12 Si 39:19	The man who gives voice to injustice will never go unnoticed, nor shall avenging Justice pass him by.	8
11:20 Jos 10:1	For the godless man's deliberations will be examined, and a report of his words will reach the Lord to convict him of his crimes.	9
Dt 29:19	There is a jealous ear that overhears everything, not so much as a murmur of complaint escapes it.	10
Ex 15:24 + Ps 18:19	Beware, then, of complaining about nothing, and keep your tongue from finding fault; ^k since the most secret word will have repercussions, and a lying mouth deals death to the soul.	11
Pr 8:36	Do not court death by the errors of your ways, nor invite destruction through your own actions.	12
2:23-24; 11:24; 12:1	Death ^l was not God's doing, he takes no pleasure in the extinction of the living.	13
Ps 145:9 Ezk 18:32; 33:11	To be—for this he created all; ^m the world's created things have health in them, in them no fatal poison can be found, and Hades ⁿ holds no power on earth;	14
Ho 11:9 Jn 8:44	for virtue is undying. ^o	15
3:4 + ; 3:15; 15:3

Life as the godless see it

- 16 But the godless^p call with deed and word for Death, counting him friend, they wear themselves out for him,
with him they make a pact,
and are fit to be his partners.^q
- 1 2 For they say to themselves, with their misguided reasoning:
'Our life is short and dreary,^a nor is there any relief when man's end comes, nor is anyone known who can give release^b from Hades.
2 By chance we came to birth, and after this life we shall be as if we had never been.
The breath in our nostrils is a puff of smoke,
reason a spark from the beating of our hearts;^c 3 put this out and our body turns to ashes, and the spirit melts away like idle air.
4 In time, our name will be forgotten,
nobody will remember what we have done;
our life will pass away like wisps of cloud, dissolve like the mist
that the sun's rays drive away
and the heat of it overwhelms.
5 Yes, our days are the passing of a shadow,
from our death there is no turning back,
the seal is set: no one returns.

1 a. By 'virtue' (Greek dikaïosune, Hebr. sedeq, 'righteousness', 'justice') is to be understood perfect accord of mind and act with the divine will as manifested in the precepts of the Law and the injunctions of conscience.

b. To 'judge' is the primary function of government. By a literary fiction the author poses as Solomon, 9:7-8,12, addressing his fellow kings; in fact he is admonishing his Jewish compatriots threatened by their pagan surroundings.

c. 'Seek God' is a recurrent prescription in prophetic and wisdom literature, cf. Am 5:4+.

d. The body is not evil in itself but may become the instrument of sin and thus dominate the soul. St Paul, Rm 7:14-24, and St John, 8:34, give authoritative expression to this idea.

e. Var. 'the holy spirit of Wisdom'. Reference to the divine power directing man's life; the text finds its highest application, however, in the Holy Spirit, Jn 14:26.

f. Text obscure. Lit. 'is confuted', 'thwarted'.

g. 'Wisdom is a spirit'; var. 'The spirit of wisdom'.

h. Lit. 'kidneys'; considered the centre of the emotions and of instinctive impulse, Pr 23:16; Ps 16:7; 73:21; Jb 19:27; in the 'heart' is localised conscious activity of intellect and of will. 'Heart' and 'kidneys' are frequently associated, Ps 7:9; 26:2; Jr 11:20; 17:10; 20:12; Rv 2:23, to signify all man's inner forces.

i. A phrase from the Stoic vocabulary, emphasising the function of the spirit of the Lord which maintains the cosmos in unity (cf. the part ascribed to Christ, Col 1:17; Heb 1:3). The notion is new: the O.T. knew God as sole creator, Gn 1+; Is 42:8+, but had considered his activity in the universe only from the point of view of omniscience and ubiquity, Am 4:13; 9:2-3; Jr 23:24; 1 K 8:27; Jb 34:21-23; Ps 139:7-12; Si 42-18-20.

j. Lit. 'has knowledge of sounds'. The liturgy of Pentecost applies this text to the 'gift of tongues', Ac 2:2-4.

k. With God and his providence.

l. The author is thinking simultaneously of physical and of spiritual death which are interconnected; sin is the cause of death, and physical death for the sinner is also spiritual and eternal death. The thought of the author moves imperceptibly from one to the other.

His view of the creation is basically optimistic. The universe as created by God was harmonious, cf. Gn 1, and contained neither death nor harmful animals. The creation enjoyed peace such as Isaiah saw renewed in the messianic future, Is 11:6+. God is therefore not the cause of evil or of death, which do not however proceed from any independent principle. Man by his sin has spoiled the order of the world and introduced the supreme disorder, death, as the negation of God's creative act, cf. Gn 3. But the only real and irreparable death is that of the wicked, that is to say, of those in whom sin is nursed and can continue its fatal work. The virtuous man remaining faithful to God 'the lover of life', 11:26, suffers only an apparent death: immortality is in store for him. St Paul, Rm 5:12-21+, cf. 1 Co 15:35-37, will elaborate this doctrine, introducing the antithesis of the old sinful Adam and the new saving Adam; St John will speak of death's destruction on the day of judgement, sin's agents being condemned to the 'second death', Rv 20:14-15; 21:4,8.

m. God, 'He-who-is', Ex 3:14+, caused all things to 'be'.

n. 'Hades', the Hebr. Sheol, Nb 16:33+, here represents not the dwelling place of the dead but the power of personified Death, cf. Rv 6:8; 20:14.

o. The man who practises 'virtue', cf. 1:1+, is assured of immortality. Vet. Lat. adds 'but injustice (vice) is the obtaining of death'.

p. The 'godless' here are primarily renegade and profligate Jews who persecute their fellows and defy God; the pagans, however, are not excluded.

q. Lit. 'to belong to his portion'. The wicked are the 'portion' of Death, as Israel is the portion of God, Dt 32:9; Zc 2:16; 2 M 1:26, and as God is the 'portion' of the faithful soul, Ps 16:5; 73:26; 142:5.

2 a. Pessimistic verdict; the author has just contradicted it, 1:13-15.

b. Or possibly 'who has returned', in which case Hades (Sheol) would mean, as in Rv 1:18, the dwelling place of the dead, Nb 16:33+, from which there is no return, Jb 7:9+, and no longer the power of personified Death as in 1:14 and Rv 6:8.

c. Allusion to ancient theories on the origin of thought.

In this passage Christian tradition sees a foreshadowing of the Passion of Christ, the essentially virtuous, and the target for the hatred of sinners, Heb 12:3, cf. Mt 27:43. m. 'nature'; var. 'eternity', 'likeness'.

n. 'devil' in the LXX renders the Hebr. Satan, cf. Jb 1:6+. Here the author is interpreting Gn 3, cf. Rv 12:9; 20:2; Jn 8:44; 1 Jn 3:8. The death introduced by the devil is spiritual, with physical death as its consequence, cf. 1:13+; Rm 5:12f.

3 a. Not, as in Is 57:2; Jb 3:17-18, freedom from suffering but possession of all good in intimacy with God, vv. 7-9.

b. This word, appearing here in the O.T. for the first time, gives philosophical expression to the hope of the Psalmist who could not resign himself to the loss of intimacy with God through death, Ps 16:10+. The resurrection of the body, 2 M 7:9+, is not envisaged here.

c. Sorrow tests and purifies the virtuous, Ps 66:10; 119:75; Pr 3:11-12; Tb 12:13; 2 M 6:12-17; 7:32-33; 1 Co 11:32; Heb 12:11.

d. Lit. 'in the day of their visitation', cf. Ex 3:16+.

e. Symbolising the triumph of Israel over all enemies, who perish like stubble in the fire, Is 1:31 (LXX); Jr 5:14; Zc 12:6; Mt 3:19.

f. Knowledge and love together constitute the happiness of the faithful, cf. Jn 15:9f; 17:3,26.

g. 'those he has chosen' var. 'saints'. Add 'and for his saints a reward'.

h. The wisdom in question is practical; life directed by wisdom, hence virtuous. It is achieved by discipline, 1:5; 2:12; 6:17; 7:14.

i. Sterility was considered a disgrace or a punishment, fertility was a sign of God's blessing; to the barren but virtuous woman is here ascribed a spiritual fruitfulness.

j. Lit. 'she will have fruit in the visitation of souls'. 'Visitation' here, cf. 3:7+, means the day of Judgement, ch. 5.

k. Eunuchs were excluded from the community of Israel, Dt 23:2.

l. I.e. in heaven.

But children of adulterers,^m these shall have no future, 16
 the offspring of an unlawful bed must vanish.
 Even if they live long, they will count for nothing, 17
 their old age will go unhonoured at the last;
 while if they die early, they have neither hope 18
 nor comfort on the day of doom.

Virtuous men and godless at the judgement^a

- 20 They will come trembling to the reckoning of their sins, and their crimes, confronting them, will accuse them.
- 1 5 Then the virtuous man stands up boldly
 to face those who have oppressed him, those who thought so little of his sufferings.
- 2 And they, at the sight of him, will shake with cowards' fear, amazed he should be saved so unexpectedly.
- 3 Stricken with remorse, each will say to the other,
 say with a groan and in distress of spirit:
- 4 'This is the man we used to laugh at once,
 a butt for our sarcasm, fools that we were!
 His life we regarded as madness,
 his ending as without honour.
- 5 How has he come to be counted as one of the sons of God?
 How does he come to be assigned a place among the saints?^a
- 6 Clearly we have strayed from the way of truth;
 the light of justice has not shone for us,
 the sun^b never rose on us.
- 7 We have left no path of lawlessness or ruin unexplored,
 we have crossed deserts where there was no track,
 but the way of the Lord is one we have never known.
- 8 Arrogance, what advantage has this brought us?
 Wealth and boasting, what have these conferred on us?
- 9 All those things have passed like a shadow, passed like a fleeting rumour.
- 10 Like a ship that cuts through heaving waves — leaving no trace to show where it has passed,
 no wake from its keel in the waves.
- 11 Or like a bird flying through the air — leaving no proof of its passing;
 it whips the light air with the stroke of its pinions, tears it apart in its whirring rush,
 drives its way onward with sweeping wing,
 and afterwards no sign is seen of its passage.

b. The metaphor of the games and the victor's crown is elaborated in the N.T., 1 Co 9:24+.

c. Lit. 'at their examination': either at the judgement or when they are punished on earth; whether the pronoun refers to parents, children, or both, is uncertain.

d. Happiness and long life on earth were considered the reward of the virtuous, Dt 5:16; 30:20; Ps 21:4; 23:6; 91:16; Pr 3:2; Sl 1:12, etc. His early death set a problem to which the author of Ws gives the final answer. Cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books.

e. Lit. 'the peoples'; var. 'others'.

f. This verse, which for the most part draws on Is 14:4-21, describes the lot of the wicked after death, either in this world or the next.

g. Description of the universal judgement; unlike Mt 25:31-46, the author is less interested in the pronouncing of the sentence than in the state of soul of the sinners. Their confession, Ws 5:4-14, is in marked contrast to what they used to say, 2:1-20. Their punishment is described in apocalyptic terms, 5:17-23. In 5:15-16 the fate of the virtuous, already described in 3:1-9, is briefly mentioned.

5 a. 'Sons of God' and 'saints' may mean the angels, Jb 1:6+; 2:1, but here more probably the elect, cf. Ws 2:13, 16, 18.

b. The sun of virtue, cf. MI 3:20+; Is 59:9.

the pierced air closing so quickly on itself,
there is no knowing which way the arrow has passed.
So with us: scarcely born, we have ceased to be;
of virtue not a trace have we to show,
we have spent ourselves on wickedness instead.^e

13

Yes, the hope of the godless is like chaff carried on the wind, like fine spray^d driven by the gale;
it disperses like smoke before the wind,
goes like the memory of a one-day guest.

14
15

But the virtuous live for ever, their recompense lies with the Lord,^e
the Most High takes care of them.

15
16

So they shall receive the royal crown of splendour, the diadem of beauty from the hand of the Lord;
for he will shelter them with his right hand and shield them with his arm.

16
17

^fFor armour he will take his jealous love,
he will arm creation to punish his enemies;
he will put on justice as a breastplate,
and for helmet wear his undissembling judgement;
he will take up invincible holiness for shield,
he will forge a biting sword^g of his stern wrath, and the universe will march with him to fight the reckless.
Bolts truly aimed, the shafts of lightning will leap,^h and from the clouds, as from a full-drawn bow, fly to their mark;
and the catapult will hurl hailstonesⁱ charged with fury.
The waters of the sea will rage against them,^j
the rivers engulf them without pity.^k
The breath of Omnipotence will blow against them and winnow them like a hurricane.
So lawlessness will bring the whole earth to ruin
and evil-doing bring the thrones of the mighty down.

24 for Wisdom is quicker to move than any motion;
she is so pure, she pervades and permeates all things.
- 25 She is a breath of the power of God,
pure emanation of the glory of the Almighty;
hence nothing impure can find a way into her.
- 26 She is a reflection of the eternal light,^k
untarnished mirror of God's active power, image of his goodness.
- 27 Although alone, she can do all;
herself unchanging, she makes all things new.
In each generation she passes into holy souls,
she makes them friends of God^l and prophets;
28 for God loves only the man who lives with Wisdom.
29 She is indeed more splendid than the sun,
she outshines all the constellations;

f. 'acquire it'; var. 'make use of it'.

g. To describe, vv 17-21, Solomon's exhaustive knowledge, cf. 1 K 5:9-14, the author credits him with mastery of the problems investigated by the hellenistic schools of the author's own day.

h. Demons, to whom the ancients, Jew and pagan, ascribed considerable influence over the world.

i. The peak of O.T. speculation on Wisdom, here represented as a person, cf. Pr 8:22+. The author excels his predecessors in the range of his vocabulary (he uses, though not technically, terms taken from Greek philosophy), but more significantly in his greater emphasis on the divine character of Wisdom. Her origin is described, vv. 25-26, by images indicating that she has a share in what she proceeds from; several of her qualities, omnipotence, vv. 23,27, sanctity and immutability, vv. 22,25, are exclusively divine. Her mission is to men, v. 27, cf. 9:10, 'penetrating all spirits', v. 23, and 'passing into holy souls', v. 27. She has a part in governing the universe, 8:1, as in its creation, 7:12,21; 8:6. She is loved by God as a bride, 8:3. All these attributes make this eulogy of Wisdom a preparation for the theology of the Trinity; they are resumed by St Paul and St John and applied to Christ, the Incarnate Word and Wisdom of God; see the texts quoted Pr 8:22+. It should also be noted that this doctrine of Wisdom gives rise not only to a theology of the Word but to a theology of the Spirit, cf. Is 11:2+, of the sanctifying Spirit, the inspiration of the prophets, the source of knowledge and understanding in the world. The author at times seems even to identify Wisdom with the Spirit, cf. 1:6; 9:17 and the variant in 7:22. He gives them common attributes: ubiquity, cf. 1:7; 12:1 with 7:24; 8:1; horror of sin, cf. 1:4 with 1:5. More particularly, he credits Wisdom with functions that many O.T. texts attribute to the Spirit: the guidance of men, Jb 32:8; Ps 51:10; 143:10, and of kings, Is 11:2, artistic, Ex 31:3, and prophetic inspiration, 1 S 10:6, etc. Even so, Wisdom, and not the Spirit, holds the foreground of the author's speculations, and from Justin onwards Christian tradition in its development of trinitarian doctrine has almost always identified the Wisdom of this passage with the Word.

j. Var. 'she is within herself'. The author now lists twenty-one attributes of Wisdom: the most perfect of perfect numbers (3×7).

k. In the O.T. God is never called 'light', cf. 1 Jn 1:5; Jm 1:17; but light accompanies him, Ex 24:17, cf. Ex 24:16+; Ezk 1:27; Hab 3:4; Ps 50:3; 104:1-2; Is 60:19-20. See Jn 8:12+.

l. Like Abraham, Is 41:8; 2 Ch 20:7; Jm 2:23, cf. Jn 15:14-15.

Pr 8:27-30	If in this life wealth be a desirable possession,	5

7:21+	Or if it be the intellect that is at work, where is there a greater than Wisdom, designer of all?	6
	Or if it be virtue you love, why, virtues are the fruit of her labours, since it is she who teaches temperance and prudence, justice and fortitude; ^a	7 nothing in life is more serviceable to men than these.
	Or if you are eager for wide experience, she knows the past, she forecasts the future; she knows how to turn maxims, and solve riddles; ^b she has foreknowledge of signs and wonders, ^c of the unfolding of the ages and the times. ^d	8

Solomon prepares to ask for Wisdom

	Inwardly revolving these thoughts, and considering in my heart that immortality is found in being kin to Wisdom pure contentment in her friendship, inexhaustible riches in what she does, intelligence in the cultivation of her society, and renown in the fellowship of her conversation, I went in all directions seeking by what means I might make her mine. I was a boy of happy disposition, I had received a good soul as my lot, or rather, being good, I had entered an undefiled body; ^g	17 18 19 20

8 a. The four virtues of the Greek philosophers, the 'cardinal virtues' of Christian theology. 'Virtue' at the beginning of this verse translates dikaioσύνη, cf. 1:1+; the same word is rendered 'justice' later in the verse.

b. 'Maxims' and 'riddles': moral aphorisms in deliberately obscure terms. Cf. Pr 1:6; Si 39:2-3; Ezk 17:2; Jg 14:12. Solomon was a master of this art, 1 K 5:12; 10:1-3; Qo 12:9; Si 47:15-17.

c. Extraordinary events by which God displays his power and declares his will: miracles.

d. The course of history. This description of Wisdom's 'wide experience' completes the picture of 7:17-21.

e. Vulg. adds 'and the faces of princes will admire me'.

f. Gesture indicating silence, Pr 30:32; Si 5:12, especially respectful, admiring silence, Mi 7:16; Jb 21:5; 29:9; 40:4.

g. This text does not assert the pre-existence of the soul as it might seem if isolated from its context; it amends the phrasing of v. 19, which seemed to give pre-eminence to the body, and emphasises the superiority of the soul.

b. Vulg. wrongly translates 'I could not remain chaste'.

9 a. Composite prayer: elements taken from the historic prayer of Solomon, 1 K 3:6-9; 2 Ch 1:8-10; ideas common in the Wisdom literature; the author's own reflections, vv. 8c, 14-18, etc.

b. I.e., all the ancestors of Israel, especially the patriarchs, Gn 32:10; 2 Ch 20:6, including Dávid, 1 K 3:6; 1 Ch 28:9; 2 Ch 1:9.

c. Or 'dispense justice'.

d. In preference to Absalom or Adonijah, 2 S 3:2-5; 1 K 1:5,28-31.

e. Either heaven, the true temple of God, Ps 11:4; 18:6; Rv 3:12, or a heavenly prototype of the Temple in Jerusalem, Heb 8:2,5; 9:23; Rv 8:3-4; 11:19; 13:6; 14:18; 15:5, or else the tabernacle built by Moses to the specifications of Yahweh, Ex 25:9,40; 26:30.

f. I.e. by her power, cf. Rm 6:4. Or 'keep me in her glory'.

I shall govern your people justly and shall be worthy of my father's^g throne.

'What man indeed can know the intentions of God?

Who can divine the will of the Lord?

The reasonings of mortals are unsure and our intentions unstable;

for a perishable body presses down the soul,

and this tent of clay weighs down the teeming mind.^h

It is hard enough for us to work out what is on earth, laborious to know what lies within our reach;

who, then, can discover what is in the heavens?

As for your intention, who could have learnt it, had you not granted Wisdom

and sent your holy spirit from above?

Thus have the paths of those on earth been straightened and men been taught what pleases you, and saved, by Wisdom.ⁱ

III. WISDOM AND GOD IN HISTORY

From Adam to Moses

10

The father of the world, the first being to be fashioned, created alone,^a he had her for his protector and she delivered him from his fault;^b

she gave him the strength to subjugate all things.^c

But when a sinner^d in his wrath deserted her,

he perished in his fratricidal fury.

When because of him^e the earth was drowned, it was Wisdom again who saved it, piloting the virtuous man^f on a paltry piece of wood.

Again, when, concurring in wickedness, the nations had been thrown into confusion,

it was she who singled out^g the virtuous man, preserved him blameless before God

and fortified him against pity for his child.

It was she who, while the godless perished, saved the virtuous man^h as he fled from the fire raining down on the Five Cities,ⁱ in witness against whose evil ways

a desolate land still smokes,

where shrubs bear fruit that never ripens and where, monument to an unbelieving soul, there stands a pillar of salt.

For, by neglecting the path of Wisdom,

not only were they kept from knowledge of the good,

they actually left the world a memorial of their folly,

so that their crimes might not escape notice.

But Wisdom delivered her servants from their ordeals.

The virtuous man,^j fleeing from the anger of his brother, was led by her along straight paths.

She showed him the kingdom of God and taught him the knowledge of holy things.

She brought him success in his toil and gave him full return for all his efforts;

she stood by him against grasping and oppressive men and she made him rich.

and saved him from the traps they set for him.
In an arduous struggle she awarded him the prize,
to teach him that piety is stronger than all.^k
- 13 She did not forsake the virtuous man when he was sold,^l
but kept him free from sin; 14 she went down to the dungeon with him;
she would not abandon him in his chains,
but procured for him the sceptre of a kingdom and authority over his despotic masters, thus exposing as liars those who had traduced him,
and giving him honour everlasting.

The Exodus

- 15 A holy people and a blameless race,^m
this she delivered from a nation of oppressors.
16 She entered the soul of a servant of the Lord,ⁿ and withstood fearsome kings^o with wonders and signs.
17 To the saints she gave the wages of their labours;
she led them by a marvellous road;
she herself was their shelter by day and their starlight through the night.^p 18 She brought them across the Red Sea, led them through that immensity of water, 19 while she swallowed their enemies in the waves
then spat them out from the depths of the abyss.
20 So the virtuous despoiled the godless;^q
Lord, they extolled your holy name;

3 They stood firm against their enemies, fought off their foes.
4 On you^b they called^c when they were thirsty,
and from the rocky cliff water was given them,

g. David.

h. The terms are reminiscent of Plato but the metaphor is no less biblical, see Jb 4:19 (cf. 2 Co 4:7) and Is 38:12 (cf. 2 Co 5:1,4). The antithesis between body and spirit is elaborated later by St Paul, Ga 5:17; Rm 7:14-25+.

i. Vulg. joins the beginning of v. 18 to v. 17 ('if the paths... had not been straightened... and if men...'), and continues 'since by Wisdom, Lord, all have been saved who have pleased you from the beginning'.

10 a. The meaning seems to be that Adam held a unique position in creation.

b. By repentance and atonement (the common opinion of contemporary Judaism).

c. After his sin, Adam is thus still lord of creation and receives the power to be this; a new development on Gn 1-3.

d. Cain.

e. I.e. of his descendants. Jewish traditions emphasized their wickedness.

f. Noah, cf. Gn 6:9.

g. Lit. 'knew', in the biblical sense, i.e. thought highly of, loved; reference to the choosing of Abraham.

h. Lot.

i. The five 'cities of the plain', Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zebaiim, Zoar, cf. Gn 19:25+.

j. Jacob.

k. Since she wins over God himself. Reference to the 'wrestling with God' on the banks of the Jabbok.

l. Joseph.

m. 'holy and blameless' because the chosen people, cf. Ex 19:6+. The author chooses to disregard Israel's acts of infidelity, unlike Ps 106; Ac 7:2-53.

n. Moses, cf. Ex 3:12; 4:12; 7:1.

o. This plural stands for the pharaoh.

p. The author attributes to Wisdom what Ex says of God present in the cloud.

q. According to Jewish tradition the Israelites despoiled the dead Egyptians of their weapons.

r. As God had loosened Moses' tongue for him to speak to Pharaoh, Ex 4:10; 6:12,30, so he now loosens the tongues of the Israelites, for his praise.

11 a. Moses, Nb 12:7+; Dt 18:15+.

b. God. Henceforth, Wisdom is not mentioned (except in 14:2,5), yielding place to God, to his breath (or spirit), 11:20; 12:1, to his word, 12:9; 16:12; 18:15, to his hand, 11:17; 14:6; 16:15; 19:8, to his arm, 11:21; 16:16.

c. The author does not mention the 'grumbling' of the people, cf. 10:15+. In the biblical narrative, it is from hard stone their thirst was quenched.

How water proved the ruin of Egypt and the saving of Israel^d

	Thus, what served to punish their enemies became a benefit for them in their distress.	5 5,6

God's forbearance with Egypt either Moses or Aaron who calls on Yahweh.

d. First of the seven antitheses in the parallel between Egyptians and Israelites. The remaining six will be elaborated in ch. 16 onwards.

e. According to Ex 7:14-25 Yahweh turned the waters of the Nile into blood to constrain Pharaoh to let the Israelites go. The author, however, represents the miracle as a punishment for the decree of Ex 1:15f.

f. Vulg. adds 'how you exalted your own'.

g. Thirst, and possibly including other hardships suffered by Israel in the desert; these were intended to make them understand the punishment of the Egyptians.

h. 'Near' the Israelites, while the Egyptians were enduring the plagues; 'far away' after the Israelites had left them, while the Egyptians remembered the plagues in contrast to the happy lot of Israel. The author supposes, v. 13, that the Egyptians knew about the wonders performed in the desert.

i. Water, withheld from the Egyptians, was miraculously supplied to the Israelites, 11:4.

j. Vulg. adds 'marvelling at the outcome of these events'.

k. Moses, exposed on the waters, Ex 1:22; 2:3; rebuffed by Pharaoh, Ex 5:2-5; 7:13,22, etc.

l. The cult of animals: 'reptiles' (crocodile, serpent, lizard, frog), 'contemtable beasts' (the scarab) enjoyed great esteem in Ptolemaic Egypt.

m. Frogs, Ex 8:1-2, mosquitoes, 8:13-14, gadflies,

8:20, locusts, 10:12-15.

n. Cf. 12:23; 16:1; 18:4 and Ps 7:14-16; 57:6; Pr 1:31; 5:22.

o. Platonic expression (Timaeus 51a), but the idea differs profoundly. The author is not teaching that matter is eternal, but presumably thinking of how the world was organised from chaos, Gn 1.

p. Or 'that does not even tip the scales'.

q. The thought of vv. 23f is not new to Israel but it had never before been expressed so powerfully, nor so serenely or so logically argued as in vv. 25-26.

r. Lit. 'lover of the soul'.

12 a. The breath of life infused into the creatures by God, Gn 2:7+, not the spirit, the soul of the world in Stoic philosophy. Vulg. translates inaccurately 'How good and kind, Lord, is your spirit in all beings'.

b. There is no evidence of cannibalism in Canaan though it was practised by other ancient peoples.

c. The author borrows characteristics of the hellenistic mystery religions to describe the practices of the Canaanites.

d. The author elaborates the ancient explanations (Jg 2:6+; 3:20-23) of the delay attending the extermination of the Canaanites: God's care for his own people yields to his patient concern for the sinful Canaanites.

Jb 9:19	Who arraign you for destroying nations which you have created? What champion of guilty men dare come to confront you and challenge you?
Dt 32:39 Jb 34:13 +	For there is no god, other than you, who cares for every thing, ^e to whom you might have to prove that you never judged unjustly; as for those you punished, no king, no despot, dare reproach you with it to your face.	13 14
Gn 18:25	Being just yourself, you order all things justly, holding it unworthy of your power to condemn a man who has not deserved to be punished.	15
2:11	Your justice has its source in strength, ^f your sovereignty over all makes you lenient to all. You show your strength when your sovereign power is questioned and you expose the insolence of those who know it; ^g but, disposing of such strength, you are mild in judgement, you govern us with great lenience, ^h for you have only to will, and your power is there.	16 17 18

What is to be learned from God's forbearance

	By acting thus you have taught a lesson to your people how the virtuous man must be kindly to his fellow men, ⁱ and you have given your sons the good hope that after sin you will grant repentance.	19
11:23 Rm 9:22	If with such care and such indulgence ^j you have punished the enemies of your children, when death was what they deserved, and given them time and room to rid themselves of wickedness, ^k with what exact attention have you not judged your sons, to whose ancestors you made such fair promises by oaths and covenants.	20 21
Gn 12:7 + 11:10 2 M 6:14	Thus, while you correct us, you flog our enemies ten thousand times harder, to teach us, when we judge, to reflect on your kindness and when we are judged, to look for mercy.	22
Mt 5:7; 7:2

God follows clemency with severity

16:1	This is why, against those who were leading wicked and foolish lives,	23
11:16	you turned their own abominations ^l to torment them; they had indeed strayed too far from paths that strayed already, and came to regard the vilest, most contemptible ^m animals as gods, being deceived, like silly little children.	24
Rm 1:23 11:15	So, as to children with no sense, you sent them a punishment to mock them, but they who took no warning from such mocking correction were soon to experience a punishment worthy of God. Worn down by what they suffered from these beasts, those beasts they had taken for gods, now the means of their punishment, they saw straight, and acknowledged as true God him they had hitherto refused to know. ⁿ That is why ^o the extreme penalty ^p was inflicted on them.	25 26 27

 f. Power is used by the wicked to defeat justice,

 g. 'who know it' (defying it, however, like Pharaoh);
 var. 'who do not know it'.

h. Not only Jews, but everyone.
 i. Like Wisdom herself, 1:6; 7:23. The kindness enjoined by the Law on the Israelite in dealing with his compatriot is here extended into a universal obligation, in preparation for the N.T., cf. Mt 5:43-48.
 j. 'indulgence'; var. 'entreaty'.

k. The idea that God tries to rescue his people from evil by means of ordeals and punishments occurs frequently in the O.T., cf. Am 4:6+, but it had never before been applied to the pagans.

l. Biblical term for false gods.

m. Var. 'most hostile'.

n. Pharaoh, obstinate at first, Ex 7-11, finally acknowledged the hand of God, Ex 12:31-32.

o. Since, having acknowledged him, they continued

p. Extermination of the first-born, and destruction of the Egyptian army.

13 a. Lit. 'vain', 'empty'; the epithet is often used of false gods. The man who devotes himself to such 'vanity' becomes 'vain' himself, Jr 2:5; Rm 1:21.

b. A Greek touch, cf. vv. 5,7; Si 43:9-12. The O.T.
 had praised the power and majesty of the creating God, Ps 19:1; Jb 36:22-26; Is 40:12-14, etc., but not the beauty of the world conceived as a work of art.

c. Or 'familiar with his works'.

d. Polemic against idols was a regular feature of Greek philosophy, still more of Jewish teaching, cf. Ba 6; Is 40:20+ and the Sybilline Oracles.

e. The forces of nature were at least active and productive, idols are dead things and impotent. God himself is 'the Living One'.

f. Description calculated to make the idol appear ridiculous: the wood is of no special value, the worker an uncultured woodcutter, the work carelessly performed.

g. Ironical. Var. for the preceding and this line
 'with professional concentration' and 'with a crafts-man's skill'.

	he gives it a human shape

The origin of the cult of idols

Ex 34:16 Dt 31:16	The invention of idols was the origin of fornication, ^h	12
	their discovery the corrupting of life. ⁱ
	They did not exist at the beginning, ^j they will not exist for ever;	13
14:11	through human vanity they came ^k into the world	14
	and hence a sudden end has been designed for them.
	A father afflicted by untimely mourning
	makes an image of his child so swiftly taken,	15

and now he honours as a god what yesterday had only been a dead man,
 bequeathing mysteries and initiations to his dependents.^l
 Then in the course of time the godless custom hardens, and is observed as law
 and, by command of princes, the carved images receive worship.

Of those who lived too far away to be honoured in person men would make a portrait from a distance and produce a visible image of the king they honoured, meaning, by such zeal, to flatter the absent as if he were with them.^m
 Even people who did not know him were stimulated into spreading his cult by the idealism of the artist;
 for the latter, doubtless wishing to please the ruler, exerted all his skill to make the likeness finer than reality and the crowd, carried away by the beauty of the work, accorded divine honours to him whom only recently they had honoured as a man.

And this became a pitfall for life,ⁿ that men, whether slaves to misfortune or princely power,^o should have bestowed the incommunicable name on sticks and stones.

The consequences of idolatry

Rm 1:24-32

Soon it is not enough for them that their knowledge of God should be at fault;
 in the great struggle^p to which ignorance condemns their lives
 they next give such massive ills the name of peace.
 With their child-murdering initiations, their secret mysteries, their orgies with outlandish ceremonies,^q
 they no longer retain any purity in their lives or their marriages, one treacherously murdering the next or doing him injury
 by adultery.

12:5; 14:28
Lv 18:21+

Everywhere a welter of blood and murder, theft and fraud, corruption, treachery, riots, perjury,
 disturbance of decent people, forgetfulness of favours, pollution of souls, sins against nature,
 disorder in marriage, adultery, debauchery.

For the worship of unnamed^r idols is the beginning, cause, and end of every evil.

Either that, or they rave in ecstasy,
 or utter false oracles,

14:23

14 a. The effigy of a tutelary god at the prow or on the poop.

b. The technical skill of the artisan, fruit of Wisdom, 8:6; Ex 31:3; 35:31.

c. The term, appearing for the first time here in LXX, is borrowed from Greek philosophy and literature; the idea, however, is biblical, Ps 145:8, 9, 15, 16; 147:9, etc.

d. Noah's ark.

e. By serving the accomplishment of God's intention. Several of the Fathers apply this text to the wood of the cross.

f. The idol of 13:11f.

g. Lit. 'a visitation', cf. Ex 3:16+.

h. Probably in the sense of religious infidelity, cf. Ho 1:2+.

i. The mind errs, and corruption of morals follows as a consequence, cf. Rm 1:24-32; Ep 4:17-19.

j. Monotheism came before polytheism. Gn says the same.

k. Var. 'death entered'.

l. Religious rites in honour of the new god. Classical antiquity has left records of such occurrences.

m. The worship of rulers and even of important personages during their lifetime was a common feature of the hellenistic period, particularly in Egypt.

n. Or 'for mankind'.

o. 'Misfortune', vv. 15-16; 'princely power', vv. 17-20. The whole passage, vv. 14-20, assumes the theory of Euhemerus that the gods were originally men subsequently deified.

p. Internal conflict, cf. 5:7, 13, since religious error has unleashed passion, cf. 14:12+; external conflict since these passions disrupt society.

q. Allusion to the Bacchanalian orgies of the Dionysiac Mysteries, or else to the frenzy and immorality of the Phrygian Mysteries.

r. I.e. non-existent. Or possibly interpret 'Whose name should not be used', cf. Ex 23:13.

or lead lives of great wickedness, or perjure themselves without hesitation;
for since they put their trust in lifeless idols 29
they do not reckon their false oaths can harm them.

But justice will overtake them on two counts: 30
as idolaters, for degrading the concept of God,
as frauds, for swearing in despite of truth,
in defiance of all that is holy.

For it is not the power of the things by which men swear 31
but the retribution due to sinners that always overtakes the offence of the guilty.

Israel not idolatrous

Ex 34:6-7 +

15

But you, our God, are kind, loyal and slow to anger, 1
and you govern all things with mercy.

If we sin, we still are yours, since we acknowledge your power, 2 but, knowing you acknowledge us as yours, we will not sin.

Jn 17:3

To acknowledge you is indeed the perfect virtue, 3

1:15; 2:23

to know your power is the root of immortality.

No invention of perverted human skill has led us astray, 4 no painter's sterile labour,

13:14

no figure daubed with assorted colours,

the sight of which sets fools yearning 5

and reverencing the lifeless form of some unbreathing image.

13:10

Lovers of evil and worthy of such hopes, 6 are those who make them, those who reverence them and those who worship them.

13:10-19 The makers of idols are fools^a

Rm 9:21

Take a potter, now, laboriously working the soft earth, 7 shaping all sorts of things for us to use.

Out of the same clay, even so, he models vessels intended for clean purposes and the contrary sort, all alike;

Is 29:16 +

but which of these two uses each will have

is for the potter himself to decide.

Then—effort very evilly spent—of the same clay he shapes 8

a futile god—

Gn 2:7 +

he who, so recently made out of earth himself,

Gn 3:19

will shortly return to what he was taken from,

once he is called to give an account of his life.

Even so he wastes no thought on imminent death 9 or on the shortness of his life.

Far from it, he strives to outdo the goldsmiths and silversmiths,^b apes the bronzeworkers too, and takes pride in the spurious models that he makes.

Is 44:20

Ashes, his heart, 10

meaner than dirt his hope,

his life more ignoble than clay,

Dt 32:15

since he misconceives the One who shaped him, 11

Gn 2:7

who breathed an active soul into him and inspired a living spirit.

Ac 19:24

What is more, he looks on^c this life of ours as a kind of game, 12 and our time here like a fair, full of bargains.

'However foul the means,' he says 'a man must make a living.'

- 13 He, more than any other, knows he is sinning, Jn 17:3
 he who from the same earthly material makes both breakable vessel and idol.

The folly of the Egyptians; their indiscriminate idolatry

- 14 But most foolish,^d more pitiable even than the soul of a little child,^e are the enemies who once played the tyrant with your people,^f 15 and have taken all the idols of the heathen for gods,^g which can use neither their eyes for seeing 13:18 nor their nostrils for breathing the air Ps 115:4-7
 nor their ears for hearing
 nor the fingers on their hands for handling;
 while their feet are no use for walking, 16 since a human being made them,
 a creature of borrowed breath gave them shape. Gn 2:7
 Now no man can shape a god as good as himself; Ps 104:29-30 17 subject to death, his impious hands can only produce something dead.
 He himself is worthier than the things he worships;
 he will at least have lived, but never they.
 18 Even the most hateful animals are worshipped, 11:15
 worse than the rest in their degree of stupidity.
 19 With no trace of beauty to prompt the inclination—as some animals might have—the praise and blessing of God do not come their way.^h

Egypt and Israel:^a harmful animals, quails

- 1 16 Thus they were appropriately punished by similar creatures 11:16; 12:
 and were tormented by hordes of brutes. 23, 27 2 In contrast to this punishment, you treated your own people with kindness
 and, to satisfy their sharp appetite, you provided for their food quails, a luscious rarity. Ex 16:9-13 3 Thus the Egyptians,^b at the repulsive sight of the creatures Nb 11:10-32 sent against them,^c were to find, though they longed for food,
 that even their natural appetite had revolted.
 While your own people,^d after a short privation,
 were to have a rare relish for their portion.
 4 Inevitable that relentless want should seize on the former,
 the oppressors;
 enough for the latter to be shown how their enemies were 11:8-9 being tortured.

15 a. Having arraigned the idols the author next turns on their makers. He instances a maker of figurines, of whom many existed in the hellenistic world.

b. This 'potter' makes himself ridiculous by competing with gifted workers in precious metals.

c. Var. 'they look on'.

d. Var. 'But the most foolish of all are'.

e. Since even more easily deceived.

f. After a long digression, 13:1-15:13, the author returns to the Egyptians, 'oppressors' of Israel before the Exodus, and again under the Ptolemies.

g. Not content with worshipping their own gods, they adopted those of other peoples.

h. Lit. 'they escape God's praise and blessing'. At the dawn of creation, God had blessed the living creatures, Gn 1:22,28; 2:3. After the Fall the serpent was cursed, Gn 3:14-15; the animal-gods of the Egyptians deserve the same condemnation.

16 a. The concluding section of the book, ch. 16-19, develops a lengthy comparison, already broached in 11:5-14, between Egyptians and Israelites. At the time of the Exodus, the very things that plagued the former proved the salvation of the latter; the Egyptians owing to their obstinacy suffered the consequences of the law of retribution, the Israelites owing to their constancy continued to enjoy the divine mercies. These chapters, which add a number of details to the narrative in Ex, interpreting the latter with considerable freedom by minimising Israel's faults and their punishment, and emphasising God's goodness to his people, provide an example of midrash or commentary on the scriptures in the rabbinic manner.

b. Lit. 'those'.

c. Var. 'because of the food shown them by the creatures sent against them'. Reference to the frogs, Ex 7:27-29; 8:2.

d. Lit. 'they'.

Egypt and Israel: the plague of locusts, the bronze serpent

	When the savage rage of wild animals overtook them	5
Nb 21:4-9	and they were perishing from the bites of writhing snakes, your wrath did not continue to the end.
2 K 18:4	It was by way of reprimand, lasting a short time, that they were distressed,	6
Nb 21:9+	for they had a saving token ^e to remind them of the commandment of your Law.
Jn 3:14-17	Whoever turned to it was saved, not by what he looked at,	7
Is 45:14+	but by you, the universal saviour. ^f
	And by such means you proved to our enemies	8
	that it is you who deliver from every evil;
Ex 8:16-20; 10:4-15 Rv 9:3	since the bites of locusts and flies proved fatal to them	9
11:15-16	and no remedy could be found to save them— and well they deserved to be punished by such creatures.
	But, for your sons, not even the fangs of venomous serpents	10 could bring them down;
	your mercy came to their help and cured them.
	One sting—how quickly healed!—to remind them of your oracles	11 rather than that, by sinking into deep forgetfulness, they should be cut off from your kindness.
	No herb, no poultice cured them,	12
Ps 107:20 Is 55:10-11	but it was your word, Lord, which heals all things. ^g
Dt 32:39+	For you have power of life and death,	13
1 S 2:6 Tb 13:2	you bring down to the gates of Hades and bring back again. ^h
	Man in his malice may put to death,	14
	he does not bring the departed spirit back or free the soul that Hades has once received.

Egypt and Israel: the elements

Dt 32:39+	It is not possible to escape your hand.	15
Tb 13:2	The godless who refused to acknowledge you	16
12:27	were scourged by the strength of your arm, pursued by no ordinary rains, hail and unrelenting downpours, and consumed by fire.
Ex 9:24-25 Ps 78:47-49	Even more wonderful, in the water—which quenches all—	17
19:18	the fire raged fiercer than ever;
5:17,20	for the elements fight for the virtuous.
19:21	At one moment the flame would die down,	18
	to avoid consuming the animals sent against the godless and to make clear to them by that sight, that the sentence of God was pursuing them;
16:22	at another, in the very heart of the water, it would burn more fiercely than fire	19 to ruin the harvests of a guilty land.
Ex 16 Ps 78:25; 105:40	How differently with your people! You gave them the food of angels, ⁱ	20 from heaven untiringly sending them bread already prepared, containing every delight, satisfying every taste.
	And the substance you gave ^j demonstrated your sweetness towards your children,	21 for, conforming to the taste of whoever ate it, it transformed itself into what each eater wished.
19:21	Snow and ice ^k endured the fire, ^l without melting;	22
	by which they were to know that, to destroy the harvests of their enemies,

- fire would burn even in hail and flare in falling rain, 16:19 23 whereas, on the other hand, it would even forget its own virtue in the service of feeding the virtuous.
- 24 For creation, in obedience to you, its maker, 5:17; 19:6
 exerts itself to punish the wicked and slackens for the benefit of those who trust in you.
- 25 Thus it became, by a total transformation, 19:18
 the agent of your all-nourishing bounty, Ps 104:27;
 conforming to the wish of those in need, 28; 136;
 25;145:16
- 26 so that your beloved children, Lord, might learn that the various crops are not what nourishes man, but your word which preserves all who trust in you. Dt 8:3+
- 27 For that, which fire could not destroy melted in the heat of a single fleeting sunbeam, Ex 16:21
- 28 to show that, to give you thanks, we must rise before the sun and pray to you when light begins to dawn;^m Ps 5:3
 Si 39:5
- 29 for the hope of the ungrateful will melt like winter's frost and flow away like water running to waste. Ps 58:7

Egypt and Israel: darkness and light

- 1 17 Your judgements are indeed great and inexpressible, Ps 92:5-6 which is why undisciplined souls^a have gone astray. Rm 11:33-35
- 2 When impious men imagined they had the holy nation in their power, they themselves lay prisoners of the dark,^b in the fetters of long night, Ex 10:21-23 confined under their own roofs, banished from eternal providence. 14:3
- 3 While they thought to remain unnoticed with their secret sins,^c Jb 15:20 curtailed by dark forgetfulness, they were scattered^d in fearful dismay,
 terrified by apparitions.
- 4 The hiding place sheltering them could not ward off their fear;
 terrifying noises echoed round them;
 and gloomy, grim-faced spectres haunted them.
- 5 No fire had power enough to give them light,
 nor could the brightly blazing stars illuminate that dreadful night—
- 6 only a great blaze, burning of its own accord,
 that, full of dread, shone through to them;
 And in their terror, once that sight had vanished,
 they thought what they had seen more terrible than ever.
- 7 Their magic arts proved utterly unavailing,^e

e. Var. 'counselor'.

f. The author interprets Nb 21:4-9 as an act of divine mercy. He seems to assume that the 'saving token' was given before the serpents appeared. He asserts that the bronze serpent had no power of itself. In it he sees a reminder of the Law and a God-given sign of 'universal' salvation.

g. 'all things'; var. 'all men'.

h. Here the author teaches that God has absolute power over life and death, not only in the sense that he can rescue anyone he pleases from imminent death, cf. Is 38:10-17; Ps 9:13; 107:18-19, but also apparently in the profounder sense that he can bring a soul that has gone to Sheol back to physical life, cf. 1 K 17:17-23; 2 K 4:33-35; 13:21.

i. Manna, 'bread of angels' (LXX), cf. Ps 78:25, which tasted like a honey cake, Ex 16:31, and symbolised the 'sweetness' of God, v. 21; Ps 34:8; 119:103. V. 21 elaborates one of the elements in the Jewish legend of the manna. The liturgy uses these texts in praise of the Eucharist.

j. Lit. 'And your substance'.

k. Manna; Ex 16:14 compares it to dew, and Nb 11:7 (LXX) to ice, cf. Ws 19:21.

l. The cooking fire, cf. Nb 11:8.

m. Such was the Jewish practice.

17 a. The Egyptians.

b. Allusion to the 'ninth plague'. A variety of ingredients go to the making of the following midrash: biblical narrative, Jewish legend, rabbinic speculations also found in Philo, and imagination and reflections of the author. The Greek mind too is also perceptible, cf. the literary elaboration, vv. 3-4; 16-18, and the preoccupation with causation, vv. 10-12. The author may furthermore have derived some of his ideas from the many 'Descents into Hades' of Greek literature.

c. Probable allusion to 14:23. Cf. Jb 24:13f; Ps 10:8-11; 19:12; Is 29:15. New application of the 'eye for eye' (lex talionis), cf. 11:16; 18:4; physical darkness is the punishment for moral darkness.

d. 'scattered'; var. 'plunged into darkness'.

e. Cf. Ex 7:11,22; 8:3 and Ex 8:14; 9:11.

their boasted cunning was ignominiously confounded;
 for those who professed to drive out fears and disorders from sick souls,
 themselves fell sick of a ridiculous terror.
 Even when there was nothing frightful to scare them,
 the prowling of beasts and the hissing of reptiles terrified them;
 they died convulsed with fright, refusing so much as to look at the air, which cannot be eluded anyhow!
 Wickedness is confessedly very cowardly, and it condemns itself;
 under pressure from conscience it always assumes the worst.^f Fear, indeed, is nothing other than the abandonment of the supports offered by reason;
 the less you rely within yourself on these,
 the more alarming it is not to know the cause of your suffering.
 And they, all locked in the same sleep, while that darkness lasted, which was in fact quite powerless and had issued from the depths of equally powerless Hades, were now chased by monstrous spectres,
 now paralysed by fainting of their souls;
 for a sudden, unexpected terror had swept over them.

And thus, whoever it might be that fell there stayed clamped to the spot in this prison without bars.
 Whether he was ploughman or shepherd,
 or someone working by himself,
 he was still overtaken and suffered the inevitable fate,
 for all had been bound by the one same chain of darkness.
 The sighing of the wind,
 the tuneful noise of birds in the spreading branches,
 the measured beat of water in its powerful course,
 the harsh din of the rocky avalanche,
 the invisible, swift course of bounding animals,
 the roaring of the savagest wild beasts,
 the echo rebounding from the clefts in the mountains,
 all held them paralysed with fear.
 The whole world was shining with brilliant light and, unhindered, went on with its work;
 over them alone there spread a heavy darkness,
 image of the dark^g that would receive them.
 But heavier than the darkness, the burden they were to themselves.

10:15

18

But for your holy ones all was great light.
 The Egyptians^a who could hear their voices, though not see their shapes,
 called them fortunate because they had not suffered too;^b they thanked them for doing no injury in return for previous wrongs
 and asked forgiveness for their past ill-will.^c
 In contrast to the darkness, you gave your people a pillar of blazing fire,
 to guide them on their unknown journey,
 a mild sun for their ambitious migration.
 But well they deserved, those others, to be deprived of light and imprisoned in darkness,
 for having kept in captivity your children, by whom the imperishable light of the Law was to be given to the world.

Egypt and Israel: the Destroyer

- 5 As they had resolved to kill the infants of the holy ones, and as of those exposed only one child had been saved,^d Ex 1:22-2:10 to punish them, you made away with thousands of their children,
Ex 12:29,30
and destroyed them all together in the wild waves. Ex 14:26-28
- 6 That night had been foretold to our ancestors,^e so that, once they saw what kind of oaths they had put their trust in, they would joyfully take courage.
- 7 This was the expectation of your people,
the saving of the virtuous and the ruin of their enemies;
8 for by the same act with which you took vengeance on our foes
you made us glorious by calling us to you.^f
- 9 The devout children of worthy men offered sacrifice^g in secret and this divine^h pact they struck with one accord:
that the saints would share the same blessings and dangers alike;
and forthwith they had begun to chant the hymns of the fathers.ⁱ

g. The darkness of Sheol.

18 a. Lit. 'they'.

b. 'because they had not suffered'; var. 'despite their past sufferings'.

c. Or 'asked them as a favour to leave', cf. Ex 11:8; 12:33.

d. To establish a connection between Pharaoh's infanticidal decree, Ex 1:16,22, and the destruction of the first-born, the author has possibly drawn on Ex 4:22-23.

e. Either the Israelites at the time of the Exodus, Ex 11:4-7, or more probably the patriarchs to whom God had promised that he would free their descendants from slavery in Egypt, Gn 15:13-14; 46:3-4.

f. The destruction of the first-born of Egypt, the celebration of the Passover, the Exodus itself, identified Israel once and for all as the people of God, cf. Dt 7:6+.

g. The Passover is called a sacrifice, Ex 12:27; Nb 9:7; Dt 16:5. This sacrifice is called 'secret' since it was celebrated inside the houses, Ex 12:46.

h. 'divine'; var. 'holy'.

i. The author represents the first Passover in terms of later Passovers at which the Hallel was chanted, Ps 113-118.

l. What follows has no relation to the narrative of the Exodus.

m. The first-born.

for the dreams that had troubled them had warned them 19
 why beforehand,
 so that they might not perish without knowing why they had been struck down.

But the virtuous, too, felt the touch of death;ⁿ 20
 a multitude was struck down in the wilderness.

But the wrath did not last long,
 for a blameless man^o hastened to champion their cause. 21

Wielding the weapons of his sacred office, prayer and atoning incense,^p

he took his stand against the Anger and put an end to the calamity, showing that he was indeed your servant.

He conquered the bitter plague, not by physical strength, 22
 not by force of arms;

but by word^q he prevailed over the Punisher,
 by recalling the oaths made to the Fathers, and the covenants.

Already the corpses lay piled in heaps, 23
 when he interposed and beat back the wrath and cut off its approach to the living.

For the whole world was on his flowing robe,^r 24
 the glorious names of the Fathers^s on the four rows of stones, and your Majesty^t on the diadem on his head.

From these the Destroyer recoiled,^u he was afraid of these;^v 25
 a mere taste of the wrath had been enough.

Egypt and Israel: the Red Sea

19 But the godless were assailed by merciless anger to the very end, 1 for God knew beforehand what they would do, how, after letting his people leave and hastening their departure, 2

 they would change their minds and set out in pursuit.

They were actually still conducting their mourning rites 3 and lamenting at the tombs of their dead,

when another mad scheme entered their heads, and they set out to pursue as fugitives the very people they had begged to go away.

A well-deserved fate urged them to this extreme 4 and made them forget what had already happened, so that to all their torments they might add the one penalty still outstanding and, while your people accomplished^a a miraculous journey, 5 themselves meet an extraordinary death.

For, to keep your children from all harm, 6
 the whole creation, obedient to your commands,

was once more, and newly, fashioned in its nature.^b

Overshadowing the camp there was the cloud, 7
 where water had been, dry land was seen to rise,

the Red Sea became an unimpeded way,
 the tempestuous flood a green plain;

sheltered by your hand, the whole nation passed across, 8 gazing at these amazing miracles.

They were like horses at pasture, 9
 they skipped like lambs,

singing your praises, Lord, their deliverer.

Egypt more blameworthy than Sodom

- 13 On the sinners, however, punishments rained down not without violent thunder as early warning;
 and deservedly they suffered for their crimes,
 since they evinced such bitter hatred towards strangers.
 14 Others^d had refused to welcome unknown men on their arrival, but these had made slaves of guests and benefactors.
 15 The former, moreover—and this will be to their credit^e—had shown the foreigners hostility from the start; 16 not so the latter: these welcomed your people with feasting Gn 45:17-20;
 and after granting them equal rights with themselves 47:1-12
 then afflicted them with forced labour. Ex 1:8-14;

 like the former at the door of the virtuous man,^g
 when, yawning darkness all around them,

Nature refashioned at the Exodus

- 18 Thus the elements interchanged their qualities, 16:17-22
 as on a harp the notes may change their rhythm, 16:25
 though all the while preserving their tone;
 this clearly appears from a scrutiny of the events.
 19 Creatures that live on land became aquatic,^h and those that swimⁱ emerged on land.
 20 Fire increased its own virtue in the water,
 water forgot its property of extinguishing.
 21 Flames, on the other hand, would not scorch the flesh 16:18 of animals, however frail, that ventured into them;
 nor would they melt that heavenly food 16:22
 like hoarfrost, and as easily melted.

Conclusion

- 22 Yes, Lord, in every way you have made your people great and glorious; Is 45:17,25
 you have never disdained them, but stood by them always and everywhere.

INTRODUCTION TO ECCLESIASTICUS

This book forms part of the Greek Bible though it does not appear in the Jewish Canon; it is therefore one of the deuterocanonical books accepted by the Church. It was written in Hebrew; St Jerome and the rabbis (who quote from it) knew the book in its original language. About two-thirds of this Hebrew text was discovered in 1896 in fragments of several late manuscripts; these represent a recension which differs considerably from the Greek and is somewhat corrupt. The Church recognises the canonicity only of the Greek text and from this our translation is made, though the Hebrew variants will be found in the footnotes.

The Latin title Ecclesiasticus (liber) is relatively recent (St Cyprian); it probably calls attention to the fact that the Church adopted it for her official use although the Synagogue did not. In Greek, cf. the subscriptio of 51:30, the book was called 'Wisdom of Jesus Ben Sirach' and the author is again named in 50:27. Nowadays he is referred to as Ben Sira or Siracides (following the Greek form: Sirach). In a foreword, vv. 1-34, the grandson of the author tells how he translated the book when he went to settle in Egypt in the 38th year of King Euergetes, v. 27. This can only be Ptolemy VII Euergetes (170-117 B.C.), and the date corresponds to 132 B.C. Ben Sira himself presumably lived and wrote about sixty years before his grandson, therefore about 190 B.C. A passage in the book confirms this date: Ben Sira's eulogy of the High Priest Simon, 50:1-21, is based on personal reminiscence. This was Simon II, who died shortly after 200 B.C.

At this period Palestine had just come under the dominion of the Seleucids (198). Hellenisation, that is to say the imitation of Greek manners, was supported by a section of the ruling class; and soon afterwards Antiochus Epiphanes (175-163) was to attempt to impose it by force. Against these dangerous innovations Ben Sira marshals all the forces of tradition. He is a scribe in whom the pursuit of wisdom is coupled with zeal for the Law. He is devoted to the Temple with its liturgy and has a high regard for the priestly office; but the sacred books, too, are his spiritual nourishment; he has studied the Prophets and above all the wisdom writings. He in his turn undertakes to teach wisdom to all who are eager for it, 33:18; 50:27, cf. the translator's prologue, vv. 7-14.

In form, the book resembles its predecessors and models. Apart from the section hymning the glory of God in nature, 42:15-43:33, and in history, 44:1-50:29, with the appendices of, respectively, a hymn of thanksgiving, 51:1-12, and a poem on the quest for wisdom, 51:13-30, the book is no more logically put together than Proverbs or Ecclesiastes. The most diverse topics are dealt with, in no order and with some repetition; the topics are presented in small groups of loosely connected maxims.

The doctrine, too, is traditional. The wisdom which Ben Sira commends comes from God; it is rooted in the fear of the Lord; it forms the youthful character and brings happiness. On human destiny and the problem of retribution Ben Sira shares the same uncertainty as Job and Ecclesiastes. He believes in retribution, he is aware of the tragic importance of the hour of death, but he does not yet see how God can reward every man as his activities deserve, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books. On the nature of divine wisdom, 24:1-22, he elaborates the notions of Proverbs and Job, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books.

But Ben Sira's original contribution is to identify wisdom with the Law of Moses, 24:23-24 (the wisdom poem in Baruch 3:9-4:4 does the same). Unlike his predecessors, he integrates wisdom with the observance of the Law. Further, he identifies observance of the Law with a punctilious performance of religious duties, 35:1-10; he is a firm supporter of liturgical worship.

In contrast with earlier sages, Ben Sira meditates on the history of salvation, 44:1-49:16. He reviews the great personalities of the Old Testament from Enoch to Nehemiah. On three of them, Solomon (even though he was the model of sages), Rehoboam and Jeroboam, his verdict is as severe as that passed by deuteronomic historians, and like them he condemns all the kings en bloc except David, Hezekiah and Josiah. But he dwells principally on the saintly figures of the Old Testament and on the wonders God worked through them. He tells how God made a covenant with Noah, Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, Phinehas and David, embracing the whole nation but especially ensuring lasting privileges to certain families, and the priestly families in particular. For the author holds the deepest respect for the priesthood: Aaron and Phinehas take leading places in his gallery of ancestors, and his eulogy concludes with a long and enthusiastic tribute to Simon the reigning high priest. He looks back on the departed glories with a certain sadness, as he thinks of the present, and he prays as he thinks of judges and prophets 'that their bones may flower again from the tomb', 46:12; 49:10, and that they may have successors. He wrote on the eve of the Maccabean revolt; he may perhaps have lived to see it end and to think that his prayer had been heard.

Though in this history of salvation Ben Sira gives prominence to the doctrine of the covenant, it is fairly correct to say that he does not look forward to a messianic deliverance. True, in his prayer of 36:1-17 he reminds God of his promises, begging him to take pity on Zion and reassemble the tribes of Jacob, but if this is messianism it is very vague. From start to finish the teaching of the sages, being concerned with the problems of the individual, remains clearly distinguished from the preaching of the prophets, though sometimes not far removed.

Ben Sira is the last canonical representative of Jewish wisdom in Palestine. He is an outstanding example of those hasidim (the 'devout') of Judaism, cf. 1 M 2:42+, who were soon to defend their faith against the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, and preserve little islands of faith in Israel, in which the teaching of Christ could later take root. Though Ecclesiasticus was not accepted into the Hebrew Canon, it is frequently quoted in the rabbinical writings; in the New Testament, the Epistle of St James borrows many expressions from it, and it is, next to the Psalms, the Old Testament book most frequently quoted in the Christian liturgy.

ECCLESIASTICUS

TRANSLATOR'S FOREWORD^a

Many and wonderful are the gifts we have been granted by means of the Law and the Prophets •and the others that followed them,^b •an education in wisdom on which Israel is indeed to be complimented. •But it is not enough merely for those who read the scriptures to be learned in them; •students should also be able to be of use to people outside •by what they say and write. •So it was that my grandfather Jesus, having devoted himself more and more to reading the Law •and the Prophets and •the other volumes of the fathers, •and having gained ability enough in these matters, •was brought to the point of himself writing down some of the things that have a bearing on education in wisdom, in order that those studiously inclined and with obligations in these matters might make all the more progress in living according to the Law.

You are therefore asked •to read this book •with good will and attention and to show indulgence •in those places where, notwithstanding our efforts at interpretation, we may seem •to have failed to give an adequate rendering of this or that expression; •the fact is that you cannot find an equivalent •for things originally written in Hebrew when you come to translate them into another language; •what is more, •you will find on examination that the Law itself, the Prophets •and the other books •differ considerably in translation from what appears in the original text.

It was in the thirty-eighth year of the late King Euergetes,^c •when after my arrival in Egypt I had already spent some time there, •that I found a work^d of more than common instructional worth, •which convinced me of the urgency of applying myself in my turn with pains and diligence to the translation of the book that follows; •and I spent much time and learning on it •in the course of this period, •to complete the work and to publish the book •for the benefit especially of those who, domiciled abroad, wish to study how to fit themselves and their manners for living according to the Law.

F a. This foreword by the Greek translator is not strictly a part of Si and is not usually considered canonical.

b. The three-part division of the Hebr. Bible, cf. 1 M 12:9+ and List of Contents. So also vv. 8-10, 24-25.

c. Probably Ptolemy VII Euergetes Physkon (170-117). The date would therefore be 132 B.C.

d. Lit. 'a copy' (var. 'opportunity'). Presumably the reference is to a copy of the Greek Bible or of a collection of wisdom books which the translator wanted to complete by adding his grandfather's work.

1 a. This first chapter is a series of variations on the themes enunciated at the beginning of Pr.

b. The term 'Lord' (Kyrios) in LXX usually renders 'Yahweh', the ineffable name of God. Ben Sira's translator uses it repeatedly, even to translate other divine appellations.

c. 'the depth of the abyss', Lat., cf. Syr.; 'the abyss and wisdom' Greek.

d. Add. v. 5 'Wisdom's source is the word of God in the heavens; her ways are the eternal laws'.

e. Add. v. 7 'To whom has the knowledge of wisdom been manifested? And who has understood the abundance of her ways?'

f. The author emphasises the uniqueness and sublimity of God. Wisdom is an attribute of God, the hallmark of his creation, the gift of God to man; though frequently personified in wisdom literature, Pr 8:22+, here it is a created thing and cannot be identified with God.

g. Vulg. adds 'in the Holy Spirit'.

h. The 'fear of the Lord' in the wisdom books no longer implies physical fear in presence of God's terrifying power but rather reverence and devoted obedience.

i. Syr. 'eternal life'.

j. Add. v. 21 'The fear of the Lord takes sin away, he who perseveres turns away anger'.

k. Text corr.; 'Unjust rage cannot be justified' Greek.

Apprenticeship to wisdom

My son, from your earliest youth choose instruction, and till your hair is white you will keep finding wisdom.
 Cultivate her^g like the ploughman and the sower,
 and wait for her fine harvest,
 for in tilling her you will toil a little while,
 but very soon you will be eating her crops.
 How very harsh she is to the undisciplined!
 The senseless man does not stay with her for long:
 she will weigh on him like a heavy stone,^h and he will lose no time in throwing her off;
 for disciplineⁱ is true to her name,
 she is not accessible to many.
 Listen, son, and take my warning,
 do not reject my advice:
 put your feet into her fetters,
 and your neck into her harness;
 give your shoulder to her yoke,
 do not be restive in her reins;
 court her with all your soul,
 and with all your might keep in her ways;
 go after her and seek her; she will reveal herself to you;
 once you hold her, do not let her go.
 For in the end you will find rest in her and she will take the form of joy for you:
 her fetters you will find are a strong defence,
 her harness, a robe of honour.
 Her yoke will be a golden ornament,^j

j. 'you do' following Hebr.; Greek lit. 'your words'.

k. Ben Sira may have no sure or clear idea of retribution after death but on several occasions he emphasises the importance of the last moment, cf. 11:26-28. It may also be that the Greek translation has moved further in this direction, for the Hebr. has simply 'in all your actions consider the end', i.e. think of the consequences of your acts; the Greek is more explicit and for 'the end' reads 'your last moments' (ta eschata sou), inviting reflection on 'the last things'.

e. The rabbis think highly of tradition which they call 'the spoken law'. Cf. Dt 4:9; 11:19; Ps 44:1; 78:3f; Jb 8:8; 12:12. Most books of the Bible formed part of the oral tradition before being committed to writing. This is notably true of the proverbs and maxims of the sages.

f. Hebr. 'and do not drive away your good fortune'.

Trust in God alone

Zp 2:3+	Another man is a poor creature begging for assistance, badly off for support, but rich in poverty, and the Lord turns a favourable eye on him, sets him on his feet out of his abject condition, and enables him to hold his head high, to the utter amazement of many.	12

Distrust the wicked

- 29 Do not bring every man home with you,
31 for many are the traps of the crafty.
30 Like a decoy partridge in a basket, such is the proud man's heart;^m
32 like a spy he watches for your downfall.ⁿ
31 The slanderer twists good into evil,^o
33 will cast a slur on what deserves most praise.
34 A hearthful of glowing coals starts from a single spark, and the sinner lurks for the chance to spill blood. Pr 1:11

Rules for doing good

Mt 5:43-48
Lk 14:12-14

- 1 12 If you do a good turn, know for whom you are doing it,
and your good deeds will not go to waste.
2 Do good to a devout^a man, and you will receive a reward, if not from him, then certainly from the Most High. Dt 14:29 3 No good will come to a man who persists in evil, or who refuses to give alms.^b 4 Give to a devout man,
do not go to the help of a sinner.^c 5 Do good to a humble man, give nothing to a godless one.
Refuse him bread, do not give him any,
it might make him stronger than you are;
then you would be repaid evil twice over for all the good you had done him.^d 6 For the Most High himself detests sinners, and will repay the wicked with a vengeance. Mt 5:45

Even if he behaves humbly and comes bowing and scraping, 11 maintain your reserve and be on your guard against him.
 Behave towards him as if you were polishing a mirror,
 you will find that his tarnish cannot last.^f
 Do not stand him beside you 12

 Who feels sorry for a snake-charmer bitten by a snake, 13

 just so for someone consorting with a sinner, 14
 and being accomplice to his sins. 13b
 As long as you maintain your stand he will not reveal himself,^g 15 but if you once give way he will press his advantage. 14
 An enemy may have sweetness on his lips, 16 and in his heart a scheme to throw you in the ditch. 15
 An enemy may have tears in his eyes, 16
 but if he gets a chance not even blood will satisfy him.
 If you meet with misfortune, you will find him there before you, 17

 If you are useful he will exploit you, 4
 if you cannot keep up with him he will desert you. 5
 Are you well off?—he will live with you, 5
 he will clean you out without a single qualm. 6
 Does he need you?—he will hoodwink you, 6 smile at you and raise your hopes;
 he will speak to you with smooth words and say, 'I wonder what you would like?'
 And he will put you to shame with his grand dinners, 7 until he has cleaned you out two or three times over, 8 and he will finish by making you ridiculous.^b
 When he sees you afterwards he will snub you,
 and wag his head about you.
 Take care you are not hoodwinked 8
 and thus humiliated through your own stupidity.^c 11
 When an influential man invites you, show reluctance, 9

- 23 Such are the thoughts of the man of little sense,
the rash misguided man who loves his illusions.

Man in creation

- 24 Listen to me, my son, and learn knowledge, Pr 1:23
and give your whole mind to my words.^j
- 25 I will expound discipline to a nicety,
and proclaim knowledge with precision.
- 26 When God created^k his works in the beginning, Gn 1
he allotted them their portions as soon as they were made.
- 27 He determined his works for all time, 42:20-25
from their beginnings to their distant future.
They know neither hunger nor weariness,
and they never desert their duties.
- 28 None has ever jostled its neighbour, 29 they will never disobey his word.^l
- 29 And afterwards the Lord looked at the earth, Qo 3:20

16 a. 'their future' (lit. 'their place'); var. 'their number'; Hebr. 'their end'. 'one': the Hebr. and some Greek MSS add 'doing the will (of God)'. 'thousand': some Greek MSS add 'sinners'.

b. 'man of sense' Greek; 'man who fears God' Hebr. 'will be destroyed' Greek; 'destroys it' Hebr.

c. The former population of Canaan.

d. Recalling Ex 12:37 or Nb 11:21. These men died in the wilderness and did not reach Canaan, Nb 14:20-33.

e. Hebr. 'There is a wage for every man who practises virtue'.

f. Add. vv. 15-16 'God made Pharaoh obstinate so that he did not acknowledge him, to make his works known under heaven. His mercy shows itself to all creation, he divided his light and his darkness among men' (cf. Mt 5:45 and Si 12:6).

g. As Adam and Cain tried to hide from the sight of God, Gn 3:10; 4:9.

h. Hebr. '20 Nor does he take notice of me; who is concerned about my ways? 21 Should I sin, no eye sees me, if I tell a hidden lie, who knows of it?' The discourse of the sinner continues on these lines to v. 22, vv. 18 and 19 being parenthetical.

i. The objection seems to be that retribution delays and is not certain. On the meaning of 'covenant' here, cf. 14:12+. Hebr. for this line has 'What hope is there, for the decree is far away?'

j. The scribe is speaking here, not Wisdom personified.

k. 'God created' corr. from Hebr.; 'in the judgement' Greek. From here to 30:11 the Hebr. text is extant only in a few passages.

l. Referring to the determined course of the stars and planets.

The divine judge

	Their ways are always under his eye, they cannot be hidden from his sight. ^c	15 13
Dt 7:6+	Over each nation he has set a governor, but Israel is the Lord's own portion. ^d	17 14 15
	All their works are as the sun to him, and his eyes rest constantly on their ways. Their iniquities are not hidden from him, all their sins are before the Lord. ^e	19 16 20 17
	A man's almsgiving is like a signet ring to him, he cherishes a man's generosity like the pupil of his eye. ^f	22 18
	One day he will rise and reward them, he will pay back their deserts on their own heads. ^g	23 19
	But to those who repent he permits return, and he encourages those who were losing hope.	24 20

Exhortation to repentance

	Return to the Lord and leave sin behind, plead before his face and lessen your offence.	25 21 22
Ps 34:14	Come back to the Most High and turn away from iniquity, ^h and hold in abhorrence all that is foul.	26 23
Ps 6:5; 115:17 Is 38:18	Who will praise the Most High in Sheol, if the living do not do so by giving glory to him?	27 (26)
	To the dead, as to those who do not exist, praise is unknown, only those with life and health can praise the Lord.	28 (27)
Ps 111:4	How great is the mercy of the Lord, his pardon on all those who turn towards him!	29 28
	Man cannot have everything, since the son of man is not immortal.	30 29

The greatness of God

Dn 4:31; 12:7	18 He who lives for ever created all the universe.	1
	The Lord alone will be found righteous. ^a	2
	He has given no one the power to proclaim his works, and who can fathom his magnificent deeds?	4 2
	Who can assess his magnificent strength, and who can go further and tell of his mercies?	3 5 4
42:21 Qo 3:11	Nothing can be added to them, nothing subtracted, it is impossible to fathom the marvels of the Lord.	6 5
Ps 139:17f	When a man finishes he is only beginning, and when he stops he is as puzzled as ever. ^b	7 6

The nothingness of man

Ps 8:4	What is man, what purpose does he serve? What is the good in him, and what the bad?	8 7
--------	--	--------

- 9 Take the number of a man's days; a hundred years is very long. 17:2
 8 Like a drop of water from the sea, or a grain of sand, Ps 90:10 10 such are these few years compared with eternity.
 11 For this reason the Lord shows them forbearance,
 9 and pours out his mercy on them.
 12 He sees and recognises how wretched their end is, Ws 11:23
 10 and so he makes his forgiveness the greater.
 11 Man's compassion extends to his neighbour,
 12 but the compassion of the Lord extends to everything that lives;
 13 rebuking, correcting and teaching, bringing them back as a shepherd brings his flock.^e 14 He has compassion on those who accept correction, and who fervently look for judgements.

The art of giving^d

- 15 My son, do not temper your favours with disparagement, nor any of your gifts with words that hurt.
 16 Does not dew relieve the heat?
 In the same way a word is worth more than a gift.
 17 Why surely, a word is better than a good present, but a generous man is ready with both.
 18 A fool will offer nothing but insult,
 and a grudging man's gift makes the eyes smart.

Reflection and foresight

- 19 Learn before you speak,
 take care of yourself before you fall ill.
 20 Examine yourself before judgement comes,
 and on the day of visitation you will find yourself acquitted.
 21 Humble yourself before you fall ill,^e and when you sin, repent.
 22 Let nothing prevent your discharging a vow in good time, Dt 23:22-24 and do not wait till death before setting matters to rights. Qo 5:3 23 Prepare yourself before making a vow, Pr 20:25 and do not be like a man who tempts the Lord. Qo 5:1-6 24 Bear the wrath of the last days in mind, the time of vengeance when God averts his face.^f 25 In a time of plenty remember times of famine, 11:25 poverty and want in days of wealth.

h. The Mosaic Law: the following verses refer to the revelation on Sinai.

i. Add. vv. 16-17a 'From childhood their ways lead to evil and they cannot change that heart of stone for a heart of flesh, for in dividing the nations of the whole earth...' Possibly a gloss derived from Ezk 11:19; 36:26, and asserting the inability of man to do good. The text itself seems less pessimistic.

j. Add. v. 18 'his first-born whom he rears with discipline, bestowing on him the light of his love, not deserting him'. In the days of Ben Sira, Israel had no king. Furthermore, opposition to monarchical government, already marked in antiquity (1 S 8), had all the more grounds for existence at the time of the Maccabaeen revival.

k. Add. v. 21 'but the Lord is good and knows his creatures, he does not destroy or desert them, but rather spares them'.

l. Add. 'distributing repentance to his sons and daughters'.

m. When and what the retribution will be is not clear.

n. Add. 'for he will bring you out of darkness to the light of health'.

o. Probably the stars, cf. 16:28; Is 24:21-23.

18 a. Add. 'and there are no others besides him. V. 3 He guides the world with a turn of the hand, all things obey his will; for he is king of all and by his power separates sacred things from profane.'

b. When man has exhausted his efforts to know God and his wonders, he has not even started to understand. These observations recall those of Qo, but the conclusion drawn is entirely different; for Ben Sira, the weakness of man serves only to emphasise the greatness of God.

c. Cf. 2 M 6:13-16; Ws 12:19-22. Later Judaism was concerned to justify instances of divine punishment. God's all-embracing mercy in its instructive aspect, emphasised here (v. 13c, d), appears for the first time in the O.T. at this point.

d. At this point the discourse on good behaviour is resumed.

e. Sickness is often represented as punishment for sin; amendment and repentance as a means of preventing sickness.

f. The day of death, cf. 1:13, rather than the day of judgement.

The time slips by between dawn and dusk, 26
 all things pass swiftly in the presence of the Lord.
 A wise man will be cautious in everything, 27
 and in sinful days^g he will take care not to offend.
 Every man of sense recognises wisdom, 28
 and will respect anyone who has found her.
 Those who understand sayings have themselves grown wise 29 and have poured out apt proverbs.^h

Self-control

Do not follow your lusts, 30
 restrain your desires.
 If you allow yourself to satisfy your desires, 31
 this will make you the laughing-stock of your enemies.
 Do not indulge in luxurious living, 32
 nor get involved in such society.ⁱ
 Do not beggar yourself by banqueting on credit 33
 when there is nothing in your pocket.
 Behave like that and you will never grow rich;^a 1
 he who despises trifles will sink down little by little.
 Wine and women corrupt sensible men, 2
 the customer of whores loses all sense of shame.
 Grubs and worms will have him as their legacy, 3 and the man who knows no shame shall lose his life.^b

Against loose talk

Being too ready to trust shows shallowness of mind, 4
 by committing sin a man does wrong to himself.
 Taking pleasure in evil^c earns condemnation, 5
 by hating gossip a man avoids evil.^d 6 Never repeat what you are told 7
 and you will come to no harm;
 whether to friend or foe, do not talk about it, 8
 unless it would be sinful not to, do not reveal it;
 you would be heard out, then mistrusted, 9
 and in due course you would be hated.
 Have you heard something? Let it die with you. 10
 Courage! It will not burst you!
 A fool will suffer birthpangs over something told him, 11
 like a woman labouring with child.
 Like an arrow stuck in the flesh of the thigh, 12 such is a piece of news inside a fool.

Do not trust everything you hear

Question your friend, he may have done nothing at all, 13
 and if he has done anything, he will not do it again.
 Question your neighbour, he may have said nothing at all, 14 and if he has said anything, he will not say it again.
 Question your friend, for slander is very common, 15
 do not believe all you hear.
 A man sometimes makes a slip, without meaning what he says; 16
 and which of us has never sinned by speech? 17 Question your neighbour before you threaten him, 17 and leave scope for the Law of the Most High.^e 18

True and false wisdom

- and wisdom is entirely constituted by the fulfilling of the Law.^f
 But being learned in evil is not wisdom, and there is no shrewd judgement in the advice of sinners.
 There is a cleverness that is foul,
 he who does not have wisdom is a fool.
 Better be short of sense and full of fear,
 than abound in shrewdness and violate the Law.^g
 There is an adroit sort of cleverness promoting injustice, there is the man who will abuse favours to establish his case.
 There is the man who will walk^h bowed down with grief,
 when inwardly this is nothing but deceit:
 he hides his face and pretends to be deaf,
 and when you are off your guard he takes advantage of you.
 This man may think he lacks the power to sin,
 but he will do wrong when he gets the chance.
 You can tell a man by his appearance,
 you can tell a thinking man by the look on his face.
 A man's dress tells you what he does,ⁱ and a man's walk tells you what he is.

Silence and speech

- ¹ 20 There is the rebuke that is untimely,
 and there is the man who keeps quiet, and he is the shrewd one.
² But how much better to rebuke than to fume!
³ The man who acknowledges a fault wards off punishment.
⁴ Like a eunuch longing to take a girl's virginity 30:20
⁵ so is he who uses force to argue cases.
⁶ There is the man who keeps quiet and is considered wise, Pr 17:28 another incurs hatred for talking too much.
⁷ There is the man who keeps quiet, not knowing how to answer, another keeps quiet, because he knows when to speak.
⁸ A wise man will keep quiet till the right moment,
 but a garrulous fool will always misjudge it.
⁹ The man who talks too much will get himself disliked,
 and the self-appointed oracle will make himself hated.

Paradoxes

- ⁹ There is the man who finds misfortune the saving of him, and the lucky find that may turn to loss.
¹⁰ There is the gift that affords you no profit, and the gift that repays you double.

g. I.e. days when sin appeals even to the wise.

i. 'tells you what he does' Syr.; 'and his smile' (?) Greek.

Lk 1:52	There is the honour that leads to humiliation, and there are men in a low state who raise their heads. ^a	11
	There is the man who buys much for little, yet pays for it seven times over.	12
	The wise man will win love by his words, while fools may shower favours in vain.	13
	A stupid man's gift will bring you no advantage, his eyes look for seven times as much in return. ^b	14
	He gives little and reviles much, he opens his mouth like the town crier, he lends today and demands payment tomorrow; he is a detestable fellow.	15 16
	The fool will say, 'I have no friends, I get no gratitude for my good deeds; those who eat my bread have malicious tongues'. How often he will be laughed at, and by how many!	16 17 17 18

Inappropriate talk

	Better a slip on the pavement than a slip of the tongue; this is how ruin takes the wicked by surprise.	18 20
	A coarse-grained man is like an indiscreet story endlessly retold by the ignorant. ^c	19 21
Pr 26:7,9	A maxim is rejected when coming from a fool, since he does not utter it on the apt occasion.	20 22
	Take a man who is prevented from sinning by poverty; no qualms of conscience disturb his rest.	21 23
4:21	Take a man who destroys himself out of false shame, destroys himself for the sake of a fool's opinion.	22 24
	Take a man who, out of false shame, makes promises to a friend, and so makes an enemy for nothing.	23 25

Lying

Pr 13:5	Lying is an ugly blot on a man, and ever on the lips of the ignorant.	24 26
	A thief is preferable to an inveterate liar, but both are heading for ruin.	25 27
Pr 12:12	Lying is an abominable habit, so that disgrace is the liar's for ever.	26 28

The wise man: his dignity and his dangers

	A wise man advances himself by his words, a shrewd man will please princes. ^d	27 29
Pr 14:35	He who tills the soil will have a full harvest, he who pleases princes will secure pardon for his offences.	28 30
Pr 17:18; 18: 16; 21:14	Presents and gifts blind wise men's eyes and stifle rebukes like a muzzle on the mouth.	29 31
= 41:14-15 Mt 5:14-16	Wisdom concealed, and treasure undiscovered, what use is either of these? Better a man who conceals his folly than a man who conceals his wisdom.	30 32 31 33

Various sins

- 1 21 My son, have you sinned? Do not do it again, and ask forgiveness for your previous faults.
- 2 Flee from sin as from a snake,
if you approach it, it will bite you;
- 3 its teeth are lion's teeth,
they deprive men of their lives.
- 4 All law-breaking is like a two-edged sword,
the wounds it inflicts are beyond cure. Pr 5:4
- 5 Panic and violence make havoc of palaces,^a similarly, desolation overtakes the houses of the proud.
- 6 A plea from a poor man's mouth goes straight to the ear of God, whose judgement comes without delay.
- 7 Whoever resents reproof walks in the sinner's footsteps;
the man who fears the Lord bears repentance in his heart. Pr 12:1
- 8 The glib speaker is known far and wide,
but when he makes a slip the thinking man detects it.
- 9 To build your house on other people's money is like collecting stones for your own tomb.^b
- 10 A meeting of lawless men is like a heap of tow : 16:6
they will end in a blazing fire.
- 11 The sinner's road is smoothly paved,
but it ends at the pit of Sheol.^c Mt 7:13

The wise man and the fool

- 11 Whoever keeps the Law will master his instincts;^d 37:3
the fear of the Lord is made perfect in wisdom. Gn 4:7
- 12 The man who lacks intelligence cannot be taught,
but intelligence can increase a man's bitterness.
- 13 The wise man's knowledge will increase like a flood, and his advice is like a living spring. Pr 13:14; 18:4
- 14 The heart^e of a fool is like a broken jar,
it will not hold any knowledge.
- 15 If a cultured man hears a wise saying,
he praises it and caps it with another;
- 16 if an imbecile hears it, he laughs at it,^f
and tosses it behind his back.
- 17 The talk of a fool is like a load on a journey,
but it is a pleasure to listen to an intelligent man.
- 18 The shrewd man's utterance will be eagerly awaited in the assembly, what he says will be given serious consideration.
- 19 The wisdom of a fool is like the wreckage of a house,
the knowledge of a dolt is incoherent talk.

20 a. Meaning uncertain.

b. Following Syr. and Lat.; 'for he has many eyes instead of one' Greek.

c. Translation uncertain. Syr. 'Like a fat sheep's tail eaten without salt such is an unseasonable word'.

d. The scribe's wisdom is primarily a knowledge of how to get on in life, especially through winning the favour of the influential.

b. 'for your own tomb' var. and Syr.; 'for the winter' Text. Rec.

c. Vulg. 'but at the end are hell, darkness, torment'. These two verses affirm the certainty of retribution. To the Christian mind they suggest the punishment of hell, cf. Is 50:11; 66:24.

d. 'his instincts' Syr.; 'his understanding (of the law)' Greek.

e. 'The heart' Syr.; Lat.; 'the entrails' Hebr.

f. Following Syr.; 'the wastrel hears it and it displeases him' Greek.

To the senseless fellow instruction is like fetters on his feet, like manacles on his right hand.	19 22
A fool laughs at the top of his voice, but a man of intelligence quietly smiles.	20 23
To the shrewd man instruction is like a golden ornament, like a bracelet on his right arm. ^g	21 24
The foot of a fool goes straight into a house, but a man of much experience is respectful in his approach; ^h a stupid man peeps inside through the door, a well-bred man waits outside.	22 25 23 26
Listening at doors is a sign of bad upbringing, a perceptive man would be ashamed to do so.	24 27
The lips of gossips repeat the words of others, ⁱ the words of wise men are carefully weighed.	25 28
The heart of fools is exposed in their words; the words of wise men reveal their heart.	26 29
When a godless man curses his enemy, ^j he is cursing himself.	27 30
The scandal-monger sullies himself and earns the hatred of the neighbourhood.	28 31

The idler

22

An idler is comparable to a stone covered in filth, everyone whistles at his disgrace.	1
An idler is comparable to a lump of dung, anyone picking it up shakes it off his hand.	2

Degenerate children

Pr 17:21	It is a disgrace to have fathered a badly brought-up son, and the birth of a daughter is a loss.	3
	A sensible daughter is a treasure to her husband, ^a but a shameless one is a grief to her father.	4
	An insolent daughter puts father and mother to shame, and will be disowned by both.	5
	An untimely remonstrance is like music at a funeral, but a thrashing and correction are wisdom at all times. ^b	6

Wisdom and folly

Mt 7:6	You are gluing the broken pieces of a pot together if you try to teach a fool, you are rousing a man who is besotted with sleep.	9 7
	A fool is the same as a drowsing man if you have to explain anything to him, when you have finished he will say, 'What is it all about?'	8 9 10
	Shed tears for the dead man, since he has left the light behind; shed tears for the fool, ^c since he has left his wits behind;	11 10
	Shed quieter tears for the dead, since he is at rest, for the fool, life is sadder than death.	11 12
	Mourning for the dead lasts seven days, for the foolish and ungodly all the days of their lives.	12 13
	Do not waste many words on a stupid man, do not go near a dolt.	13 14

- 15 Beware of him, or he will give you trouble,
and will leave you soiled by contact with him.
- 16 Avoid him, and you will find rest and not be exasperated by his folly.
- 14 What is heavier than lead, 17 and what is its name if not 'fool'?
- 15 Sand, and salt, and a lump of iron 18 are all easier to bear than a dolt.
- 16 A tie-beam bonded into a building
19 will not be dislodged by an earthquake; 20 so too, a heart resolved after due reflection will not flinch at the critical moment.
- 17 A heart founded on intelligent reflection is like a stucco^d decoration on a smooth wall.
- 18 Pebbles^e placed on top of a wall
21 will not stand up to the wind;
22 no more can the heart of a fool frightened at his own thoughts stand up to fear.

Friendship

- 19 Prick an eye and you will draw a tear, 24 prick a heart and you bring its feelings to light.
- 20 Throw stones at birds and you scare them away, 25 revile a friend and you break up friendship.
- 21 If you have drawn your sword on a friend, 26 do not despair; there is a way back.
- 22 If you have opened your mouth against your friend, 27 do not worry; there is hope for reconciliation;
but insult, arrogance, betrayal of secrets, and the stab in the back—
in these cases any friend will run away.
- 23 Win your neighbour's confidence when he is poor,
28 so that you may enjoy his later good fortune with him;
29 stand by him in times of trouble, in order to have your share when he comes into a legacy.
- 24 Fire is heralded by the reek of the furnace and smoke, 30 so too bloodshed by insults.
- 25 I will not be ashamed to shelter a friend,
31 nor will I hide from his face;
26 and if evil comes to me through him,
32 everyone who hears about it will beware of him.

g. This verse echoes v. 19.

h. 'is respectful in his approach' corr. following Hebr.; 'is abashed before a face' Greek.

i. Following var.; 'The lips of strangers will be grieved by them' Text. Rec.

j. 'his enemy' corr.; 'Satan' Greek. The foolish man is his own worst enemy. The Greek reading suggests a different interpretation; the foolish man blames the Tempter, cf. Jb 1:6+, instead of his own wicked self.

22 a. 'is a treasure to her husband' corr. following Lat.; 'will obtain her husband' Greek.

b. The sages advocate corporal punishment in education, Pr 13:24; 19:18; 22:15; 23:13-14; 29:15,17;

it is always effective, whereas the time for verbal rebuke must be carefully chosen. Add. vv. 7-8; 'Children who live a good life, without shortcomings, make one forget their parents' humble origin. Contemptuous, ill-bred and haughty children disgrace their family's nobility.'

c. The 'fool' is a man not simply without wits but obstinate, sceptical, licentious.

d. Lit. 'decoration of sand'. Meaning uncertain.

e. 'Pebbles' var.; 'Stakes' Text. Rec.

f. Note the deeply religious quality of the passage: each good resolution concludes with a prayer.

Tb 13:4

to keep me from falling,
and my tongue from causing my ruin?

Lord, father and master of my life,
do not abandon me to their whims,
do not let me fall because of them.

Who will lay whips to my thoughts,
and the discipline of wisdom to my heart,

Ps 141:5

to be unmerciful to my errors, and let none of my sins go unchecked
in case my errors multiply,
and my sins increase in number,
and I fall before my adversaries,
and my enemy gloats over me?

Tb 13:4

Lord, father and God of my life,
do not give me proud eyes,

Ps 131:1

turn lust away from me,
do not let lechery and lust grip me,
do not give me over to shameless desire.

Swearing

Listen, children, to the instruction I have to give;
whoever keeps it will not be caught out.

The sinner is ensnared^a by his own lips,
both the abusive and the proud man are tripped by them.

Do not accustom your mouth to swearing,
nor get into the habit of naming the Holy One;

for just as a slave who is constantly overseen will never be without bruises,^b

so too the man who is continually swearing oaths and uttering
the name

will not be exempt from sin.

A man forever swearing is full of iniquity,
and the scourge will not depart from his house.

If he offends,^c his sin will be on him,
if he swears lightly, he sins twice over;

if he swears a false oath, he will not be treated as innocent,
for his house will be filled with calamities.

Mt 5:34f;
23:20f
Jm 5:12

Foul talk^d

There is a manner of talking that is fraught with death;
let it not be found in the inheritance of Jacob,

for devout men will keep all that far from them,
they will not wallow in sin.

Do not habituate your mouth to coarseness and foul language, for this means sinful talk.

Remember your father and mother
when you are sitting among princes,

in case you forget yourself in their presence,^e
and behave like a fool,

and then wish you had not been born,
and curse the day of your birth.

A man in the habit of using improper words will never break himself of it however long he lives.

Incest and adultery

Two kinds of men multiply sins,^f

17 and a third draws down wrath:
 22 there is a desire that, blazing like a furnace, cannot be quenched until it is slaked;
 23 there is the man who lusts for his own flesh:
 he will not give up until the fire consumes him;
 24 to a fornicator all food is sweet,
 and he will not weary of it until he dies.
 18 The man who sins against his own marriage bed,
 25 and says to himself, 'Who can see me?
 26 There is darkness all round me, the walls hide me, nobody sees me; why should I worry?
 The Most High will not call my sins to mind':
 27 what he fears is the eyes of men,
 19 he does not realise that the eyes of the Lord
 28 are ten thousand times brighter than the sun, observing every aspect of human behaviour,
 seeing into the most secret corners.
 20 All things were known to him before they were created,^g
 29 and are still, now that they are finished.^h
 30 This man will be punished in view of the whole town,
 31 and will be seized where he least expects it.

Pr 15:3, 11;

Pr 8:22f

The adulteress

22 Similarly the woman who deserts her husband,
 32 and provides him with an heir by another man:
 23 first, she has disobeyed the Law of the Most High;
 33 secondly, she has been false to her husband;
 and thirdly, she has gone whoring in adultery
 and conceived children by another man.
 24 She will be led before the assembly,
 34 an enquiry will be held about her children.
 25 Her children will strike no root,
 35 her branches will bear no fruit.
 26 She will leave an accursed memory behind her,
 36 her shame will never be wiped out.
 27 And those who survive her will recognise 37 that nothing is better than fearing the Lord, and nothing sweeter than adherence to the Lord's commandments.ⁱ

Discourse of Wisdom^a she glories in herself in the presence of the Mighty One;

b. Translation uncertain.

c. By not fulfilling his oath. The author envisages three cases in order of increasing gravity: a sincere oath unfulfilled, an oath lightly sworn, an insincere oath.

d. The context shows that the reference is to impurity in speech, but the text itself is vague and the precise sin uncertain.

e. 'when' following Syr. 'you forget yourself' following Syr.; '(God) forgets you' Lat. 'you forget (it)' Greek.

f. Numerical proverb, cf. Pr 30:15+, but obscure as it stands.

g. This knowledge of God, antecedent to creation, is divine wisdom itself, Pr 8:22+.

h. After creation God continues to watch over the world.

i. Add. v. 28 'To follow God is a great honour and to be acceptable to him is to lengthen one's days'.

24 a. Subtitle in Greek 'Eulogy of Wisdom'. This is the pivotal chapter of the book, summing up the whole doctrine of wisdom; there are frequent echoes of earlier biblical literature but there is also a development. Even more than in Pr, cf. Pr 8:22+, wisdom is shown as being in union with God and yet distinct from him, which characteristics will later be applied to the person of the Word, as also to the person of the Spirit. Cf. Ws 7:22+. The liturgy applies this passage, by 'accommodation', to the Blessed Virgin.

Ws 7:25	'I came forth from the mouth of the Most High,	3
Gn 1:2	and I covered the earth like mist. ^b	5
Ba 3:29	I had my tent in the heights,	6
Ex 13:21-22	and my throne in a pillar of cloud. ^c	4
Jb 22:14	Alone I encircled the vault of the sky,	7
Pr 8:27	and I walked on the bottom of the deeps. ^d	5
	Over the waves of the sea and over the whole earth,	8
	and over every people and nation I have held sway. ^e	6
	Among all these I searched for rest,	9
	and looked to see in whose territory I might pitch camp.	10
Ps 132:8	Then the creator of all things instructed me,	7
Ba 3:37	and he who created me fixed a place for my tent.	11
	He said, "Pitch your tent in Jacob,	8
	make Israel your inheritance".	12
Pr 8:23	From eternity, in the beginning, he created me,	13

	I have grown tall as a palm in Engedi, ^g	14
	as the rose bushes of Jericho;	18
	as a fine olive in the plain,	19
	as a plane tree I have grown tall.	15
	I have exhaled a perfume like cinnamon and acacia,	20
	I have breathed out a scent like choice myrrh,

Ex 30:7f,34f	like the smoke of incense in the tabernacle. ^h

Wisdom and the Law^k

Ex 19:1+	All this is no other than the book of the covenant of the	23
Ba 4:1	Most High God,	32
Dt 33:4	the Law that Moses enjoined on us,
	an inheritance for the communities of Jacob. ^k	33
Gn 2:11	That is what makes wisdom brim like the Pishon, ^l	25
	like the Tigris in the season of fruit,	35
	what makes understanding brim over like the Euphrates,	26
Jos 3:15	like the Jordan at harvest time;	36
	and makes discipline flow like the Nile, ^m	27
Gn 2:13	like the Gihon at the time of vintage.	37

- 28 The first man never managed to grasp her entirely, 38 nor has the most recent one fully comprehended her;
29 for her thoughts are wider than the sea,
39 and her designs more profound than the abyss.
30 And I,ⁿ like a conduit from a river,
40 like a watercourse running into a garden,
41 I said, 'I am going to water my orchard,
31 I intend to irrigate my flower beds'.
42
43 And see, my conduit has grown into a river,
and my river has grown into a sea.
32 Now I shall make discipline shine out,
44 I shall send its light far and wide.
33 I shall pour out teaching like prophecy,
46 as a legacy to all future generations.
34 Observe that I have not toiled for myself alone,
47 but for all who are seeking wisdom.

Proverbs

- 1 25 There are three things my soul delights in,
and which are delightful to God and to men:^a 2 concord between brothers, friendship between neighbours, and a wife and husband who live happily together.
2
3 There are three sorts of people my soul hates, and whose existence I consider an outrage:
4 a poor man swollen with pride, a rich man who is a liar and an adulterous old man who has no sense.

Old men

- 3 If you have gathered nothing in your youth,
5 how can you find anything in your old age?
4 How fine a thing: sound judgement with grey hairs,
6 and for greybeards to know how to advise!
5 How fine a thing: wisdom in the aged,
7 and considered advice coming from men of distinction!
6 The crown of old men is ripe experience,
8 their true glory, the fear of the Lord.

Numerical proverbs

- 7 There are nine things I can think of which strike me as happy, 9 and a tenth which is now on my tongue:

b. Wisdom is identified with the spirit of God hovering over the waters, Gn 1:2.

c. The pillar of cloud in the desert, which in the oldest texts manifested the presence of God.

d. Wisdom was present at every act of the creation.

e. 'I have held sway' one Greek MS, Syr., Lat.; 'I have obtained possession' Text. Rec.

f. For Ben Sira the Temple worship in Jerusalem is one more achievement of Wisdom, either because it expresses the divine perfection in the same way as the order of the universe does, or else because this worship is laid down in detail in the Law which itself, 24:23f, is Wisdom.

g. 'Engedi' var.; 'on the shores' Text. Rec.

h. Wisdom plays her part in public worship, 24:10+; hence of all the notable perfumes mentioned, she is lastly compared to the incense of the liturgy.

i. Add. v. 18 'I am the mother of pure love, of fear, of knowledge, and of holy hope; I am bestowed on all my children, from all eternity on those appointed by him'. In place of the last phrase the Latin reads 'In me is all grace of way and of truth, in me all hope of life and of strength', a Christian gloss alluding to Jn 14:6 and based on the identification of Wisdom with Christ.

j. Wisdom's discourse finishes at this point. The author now develops his thesis on the identity of Wisdom with the Law.

k. Add. v. 24 'Do not cease to be strong in the Lord, cling to him that he may strengthen you. The Lord Almighty alone is God and there is no saviour other than he.'

l. Throughout, the author is thinking ¹of the earthly Paradise and its four rivers, Gn 2:10f, symbolic of fertility.

m. 'flow like the Nile' corr., cf. Syr.; 'shine like a light' Greek.

n. The sage whose wisdom is derived from divine wisdom.

25 a. Following Syr. and Lat.; Greek 'In three things I was pre-eminent, and pre-eminent I remained before God'—making this a discourse delivered by Wisdom.

Women

Any wound rather than a wound of the heart! 13
 Any spite rather than the spite of woman! 17
 Any evil rather than an evil caused by an enemy! 14
 Any vengeance rather than the vengeance of a foe! 18
 There is no poison^e worse than the poison of a snake, 15
 there is no fury worse than the fury of an enemy. 22

As climbing up a sandhill is for elderly feet 20
 such is a garrulous wife for a quiet husband. 27
 Do not be taken in by a woman's beauty, 21 never lose your head over a woman. 28

Bad temper, insolence and shame hold sway 22
 where the wife supports the husband. 29

Low spirits, gloomy face, stricken heart: 23
 such the achievements of a spiteful wife. 31

Slack hands and sagging knees 32

b. Either in the literal, cf. Lv 19:19; Dt 22:10, or, preferably, in the metaphorical sense (cf. 2 Co 6:14) of an ill-assorted couple. This line has been restored following Syr. (and Hebr.?); it is absent from Greek.

g. Lit. 'in spite of himself' one MS; 'as he listens' Text. Rec.

h. Alluding to the first sin. St Paul also recalls the guilt of Eve, 2 Co 11:3; 1 Tm 2:14, but cf. Rm 5:12.

i. Lit. 'freedom to speak', several MSS; others omit 'to speak'.

j. Lit. 'if she will not walk according to your hand'.

k. Lit. 'separate her from your flesh', cf. Gn 2:24; Ep 5:31. The Mosaic Law, Dt 24:1-4, allowed divorce, cf. Mt 19:3-9p.

26 a. 'terrifies me'; var. 'is for me a subject of prayer'.
b. Following Syr.; 'and the scourge of the tongue that falls on all alike' Greek.

c. Which rubs and slips back and forth on the creature's neck, causing galls and pain.

d. Lit. 'fatten her bones'.

e. Probably alluding to the seven-branched lamp-stand, 1 M 4:49,50.

f. Following some MSS and Lat. Add. vv. 19-27:

19 My son, preserve the bloom of your youth and do not waste your strength on strangers. (cf. Pr 5: 9-10).

20 Search the whole plain for a fertile field, sow your own seed there, trusting in your own good stock.

21 Thus your offspring will survive,
they will grow great, confident of their breeding.

22 A woman for hire is not worth spitting at,
but a lawful wife is as strong as a tower.

23 A godless wife is assigned to a transgressor as his fortune,
but a devout wife given to the man who fears the Lord.

24 A shameless wife takes pleasure in disgracing herself, a modest wife is diffident even with her husband.

25 A headstrong wife is no more respected than a dog,
but one with a sense of shame fears the Lord.

26 A wife who respects her husband will be acknowledged wise by all, but one who proudly despises him will be known by all as wicked.

Happy the husband of a good wife,
for the number of his days will be doubled (= 26:1).

27 A loud-mouthed, gossiping wife is like a trumpet
sounding the charge, and any man saddled with one spends his life in the turmoil of war.

Depressing things

There are two things which grieve my heart	28
and a third arouses my anger:	25
a warrior wasting away through poverty,	26
intelligent men treated with contempt,
a man turning back from virtue to sin—	27
the Lord marks this man out for a violent death.

Commerce

27

It is difficult for a merchant to avoid doing wrong	29
and for a salesman not to incur sin.	28
Many have sinned for the sake of profit, ^a	1
he who hopes to be rich must be ruthless. ^b
A peg will stick in the joint between two stones,	2
and sin will wedge itself ^c between selling and buying.
If a man does not hold earnestly to the fear of the Lord,	3
his House will soon be overthrown.	4

Speech

Mt 7:16

In a shaken sieve the rubbish is left behind,	4
so too the defects of a man appear in his talk.	5
The kiln tests the work of the potter,	5
the test of a man is in his conversation.	6
The orchard where the tree grows is judged on the quality of its fruit,	6
similarly a man's words betray what he feels. ^d	7
Do not praise a man before he has spoken,	7
since this is the test of men.	8

Virtue

Qo 7:3-6

If you pursue justice you will achieve it	8
and put it on like a festal gown.	9
Birds consort with their kind,	9
justice comes home to those who practise it. ^e	10
The lion lies in wait for its prey,	10
so does sin for those who do wrong.	11
The devout man's conversation is wisdom at all times, ^f	11
but the fool is as changeable as the moon.	12
Among stupid people look for your opportunity to leave, ^g	12
but among thoughtful men take your time.	13
The conversation of fools is disgusting,	13
raucous their laughter at their sinful orgies.	14
The talk of hard-swearing men makes your hair stand on end,	14
their brawls make you stop your ears.	15
A quarrel between proud men leads to bloodshed,	15
their abuse is painful to hear.	16

Secrets

22:22+

A betrayer of secrets forfeits all esteem	16
and will never find the kind of friend he wants.	17
Be fond of a friend and keep faith with him,	17
but if you have betrayed his secrets, do not pursue him any more;	18
for as a man destroys his enemy,	19
so you have destroyed the friendship of your neighbour,	18 20

- 19 and as you let a bird slip through your fingers,
 21 so you have let your friend go, and will not catch him.
 20 Do not go after him—he is far away,
 22 he has fled like a gazelle from the snare.
 21 For a wound can be bandaged and abuse forgiven,
 23 but for the man who has betrayed a secret there is no hope.
 24

Hypocrisy

- 22 The man with a sly wink is plotting mischief,
 25 no one can dissuade him from it. Ps 35:19
 Pr 6:13; 10:10
 23 Honey-tongued to your face, 26 he is lost in admiration at your words;
 but behind your back he has other things to say,
 and makes your own words sound offensive.
 24 I have found many things to hate, but nothing to equal this man, 27 and the Lord hates him too.
 25 The man who throws a stone in the air, throws it on to his own head;
 28 a treacherous blow cuts both ways.^h
 26 The man who digs a pit falls into it,
 29 he who sets a snare will be caught by it. Ps 7:16; 9:1
 Pr 26:27
 Qo 10:8
 27 On the man who does evil, evil will recoil,
 30 though where it came from he will not know.
 28 Sarcasm and abuse are the mark of an arrogant man,
 31 but vengeance lies in wait like a lion for him.
 29 The trap will close on all who rejoice in the downfall of the devout, 32 and pain will eat them up before they die.ⁱ

Resentment

- 30 Resentment and anger, these are foul things too, 33 and both are found with the sinner.
 1 28 He who exacts vengeance will experience the vengeance of the Lord, who keeps strict account of sin.
 2 Forgive your neighbour the hurt he does you, and when you pray, your sins will be forgiven. Mt 5:23-24; 6:12p,14-15
 3 If a man nurses anger against another,
 can he then demand compassion from the Lord?
 4 Showing no pity for a man like himself, can he then plead for his own sins? Mt 18:23-3 5 Mere creature of flesh, he cherishes resentment;
 who will forgive him his sins?
 6 Remember the last things, and stop hating,
 7 remember dissolution and death, and live by the commandments. 7:36; 38:20
 7 Remember the commandments, and do not bear your 8 neighbour ill-will; Lv 19:17-18
 9 remember the covenant of the Most High, and overlook the offence. Ex 23:4-5

Quarrels

 10 for a hot-tempered man provokes quarrels, Pr 15:18

Loans^a

29

	Making your neighbour a loan is an act of mercy, ^b to lend him a helping hand is to keep the commandments.	1
	Lend to your neighbour in his time of need, and in your turn repay your neighbour on time.	2
	Be as good as your word and keep faith with him, and you will find your needs met every time.	3
8:12	Many treat a loan as a windfall, ^c	4

and embarrass those who have come to their rescue.

Until he gets something, a man will kiss his neighbour's hand,
and refer to his wealth in respectful tones;

but when the loan falls due, he puts this off,
he repays with offhand words,
and pleads the inconvenience of the time.

Even if he can be made to pay, his creditor will barely recover half,
and consider even that a windfall.

But otherwise he will be cheated of his money,
and undeservedly^d gain himself an enemy;

the man will pay him back in curses and recriminations,
and instead of respect will have contempt for him.

Many, not out of malice,^e refuse to lend;
they are merely anxious not to be cheated for nothing.

Generosity

Nevertheless, be patient with those who are badly-off,
do not keep them waiting on your generosity.

For the commandment's sake go to the poor man's help,
do not turn him away empty-handed in his need.

Better let your silver go on brother or friend,
do not let it go to waste, rusting under a stone.

Invest your treasure as the Most High orders,
and you will find it more profitable than gold.

Deposit generosity in your storerooms
and it will release you from every misfortune.

Better than sturdy shield or weighty spear,
it will fight for you against the enemy.

Securities

A good man will go surety for his neighbour;
a man has lost all shame if he fails him.

Do not forget the favour your guarantor has done you;
he has given his life for you.

A sinner is careless of his guarantor's prosperity,
an ungrateful man forgets the one who saved him.

Going surety has ruined many prosperous men and rocked them like a wave of the sea.

It has driven powerful men from home to wander among foreign nations.

The sinner who involves himself with guarantees,
in pursuit of a deal, will find himself involved in lawsuits.

Come to your neighbour's help as far as you can,
but take care not to fall into the same plight.

Home and hospitality

The first thing in life is water, and bread, and clothing, and a house for the sake of privacy.

Better a poor man's life under a roof of planks,
than lavish fare in the house of another.

Bringing up children30

A man who loves his son will beat him frequently 1
 so that in after years the son may be his comfort.
 A man who is strict with his son will reap the benefit, 2
 and be able to boast of him to his acquaintances.
 A man who educates his son will be the envy of his enemy, 3 and will be proud of him among his friends.
 Even when the father dies, he might well not be dead, 4
 since he leaves his likeness behind him.
 In life he has had the joy of his company, 5 dying, he has no anxieties.
 He leaves an avenger against his enemies, 6
 and a rewarder of favours for his friends.
 A man who coddles his son will bandage his wounds, 7
 his heart will turn over at every shout.
 A horse badly broken-in turns out stubborn, 8
 an uncontrolled son turns out headstrong.
 Pamper your child, and he will give you a fright, 9 play with him, and he will bring you sorrow.
 Do not share his laughter, if you do not wish to share his sorrow 10 and to end by grinding your teeth.
 Allow him no independence in childhood, 11
 and do not wink at his mistakes.
 Bend his neck in youth, 12
 bruise his ribs while he is a child, or else he will grow stubborn and disobedient,
 and hurt you very deeply.
 Be strict with your son, and persevere with him, 13
 or you will rue his insolence.

Health

Better a poor man healthy and fit 14
 than a rich man tormented in body.
 Health and strength are better than any gold, 15
 a robust body than untold wealth.^a No riches can outweigh bodily health, 16
 no enjoyment surpass a cheerful heart.
 Better death than a wretched life, 17
 and everlasting rest than chronic illness.

Pr 23:1-3,6-8 Dinner parties

Have you sat down at a lavish table? 12

Do not gape at it,
do not say, 'What a feast!' 13

Remember how bad it is to have a greedy eye;
is anything in creation greedier than the eye? 13 14

That is why it waters on every occasion.^h 15

Do not reach out for anything your host has his eye on,
do not jostle him at the dish. 14 16

Judge your fellow guest's needs by your own,
be thoughtful in every way.ⁱ 15 18

Eat what is offered you like a well brought-up person,^j do not wolf your food or you will earn dislike. 16 19

For politeness' sake be the first to stop;
do not act the glutton, or you will give offence, 17 20

and if you are sitting with a large party, do not help yourself before the others do. 18 21

A little is quite enough for a well-bred person;
his breathing is easy when he gets to bed. 19 22

A moderate diet ensures sound sleep, a man gets up early, in the best of spirits. 20 24

Sleeplessness, biliousness and gripe are what the glutton has to endure. 23

If you are forced to eat too much, get up, go and be sick,^k and you will feel better. 21 25

Listen to me my son, do not disregard me, eventually you will see the force of my words. 22
26

Be moderate^l in all your activities and illness will never overtake you. 27

People praise the man who keeps a splendid table, 23

and their opinion of his munificence is sound; 28

similarly, the man who keeps a mean table will be notorious 24

Pr 20:1; 23: 20-21, 29-35 Wine

Do not play the valiant at your wine, 25

The furnace proves the temper of steel,

32

What is life worth without wine? 33

: It was created to make men happy. 35

Drunk at the right time and in the right amount, wine makes for a glad heart and a cheerful mind. 28 36

Bitterness of soul comes of wine drunk to excess^m out of temper or bravado.ⁿ 29

Drunkenness excites the stupid man to a fury to his own harm, it reduces his strength while leading to blows. 30

behave like everyone else in the party,
see that they are happy and then sit down yourself.
2 Having discharged your duties, take your place

3 and receive the crown for your competence.^b
3 Speak, old men, it is proper that you should;
4 but know what you are talking about, and do not interrupt
5 the music.^c
6 If entertainment is provided, do not keep up a running commentary, and do not play the sage at the wrong moment.
7 A carbuncle seal on a precious stone,
such is a concert of music at a wine feast.
8 An emerald seal in a golden setting,
such are strains of music with a vintage wine.
7 Speak, young men, if you have to;
9,10 but twice at most, and then only if questioned.
11 Keep to the point, say much in few words;
12 give the impression of knowing but not wanting to speak.
9 Among eminent men do not behave as though you were their equal;
13 do not make frivolous remarks when someone else is speaking.^d
10 Lightning comes before the thunder,
14 favour goes ahead of a modest man.
11 Rise in good time to take your leave, do not bring up the rear;
15 hurry home without loitering.

Inequality

Why is one day better than another, when each day's light throughout the year comes from the sun?	7
They have been differentiated in the mind of the Lord, who has diversified the seasons and feasts;	8
some he has made more important ^e and hallowed, others he has made ordinary days.	9
All men come from the ground, Adam himself was formed out of earth;	10
in the fulness of his wisdom ^f the Lord has made distinctions between them, and diversified their conditions.	11
Some he has blessed and made more important, some he has hallowed and set near him;	12 others he has cursed and humiliated by degrading them from their positions.

Dreams^a

34

	Vain and deceptive hopes are for the foolish, and dreams put fools in a flutter.	1
	As well clutch at shadows and chase the wind as put any faith in dreams.	2
	Mirror and ^b dream are similar things: confronting a face, the reflection of that face. ^c	3
Jb 14:4	What can be cleansed by uncleanness, what can be verified by falsehood?	4
Qo 5:6	Divinations, auguries and dreams are nonsense, like the delirious fancies of a pregnant woman. ^d	5
	Unless sent as emissaries from the Most High, do not give them a thought;	6
	for dreams have led many astray, and those building their hopes on them have been disappointed.	7
	Fulfilling the Law requires no such falsehood, and wisdom is most perfectly expressed by truthful lips. ^e	8

Travelling

51:13	A much travelled man knows many things, and a man of great experience will talk sound sense.	9
	Someone who has never had his trials knows little; but the travelled man is master of every situation.	10
	I have seen many things on my travels, I have understood more than I can put into words.	11 12
	I have often been in danger of death, but I have been spared, and this is why:	12 13
Jdt 16:16	the spirit of those who fear the Lord can survive, for their hope is in someone with power to save them.	13 14 15
	The man who fears the Lord will not be faint-hearted, will not be daunted since the Lord is his hope.	14 16
	Happy the soul of the man who fears the Lord. On whom does he rely? Who supports him?	15 17 18
Ps 33:18; 34:15; 94:14	The eyes of the Lord watch over those who love him, he is their powerful protection and their strong support, their screen from the desert wind, their shelter from the midday sun, a guard against stumbling, an assurance against a fall.	16 19 20
	He revives the spirit and brightens the eyes, he gives healing, life and blessing.	17

35:1+ Sacrifices

	The sacrifice of an offering unjustly acquired is a mockery; the gifts of impious men are unacceptable.	18 21
Am 5:21+	The Most High takes no pleasure in offerings from the godless, multiplying sacrifices will not gain his pardon for sin.	19 23
	Offering sacrifice from the property of the poor is as bad as slaughtering a son before his father's very eyes.	20 24
	A meagre diet is the very life of the poor, he who withholds it is a man of blood.	21 25
Lv 19:13	A man murders his neighbour if he robs him of his livelihood, sheds blood if he withholds an employee's wages.	22 26 27
Dt 24:14-15 Jr 22:13	If one man builds while another pulls down, what else do they gain but trouble? ^f	23 28
	If one man prays and another calls down a curse, whose voice will the master listen to?	24 29
Nb 19:11	If a man washes after touching a corpse, and then touches it again,	25 30

26 what is the good of his washing?
 31 Just so with a man who fasts for his sins,
 and then goes off and commits them again.
 Who will listen to his prayers?
 What is the good of his self-abasement?

The Law and sacrifices^a

1 35 A man multiplies offerings by keeping the Law; 34:18-26
 2 he offers communion sacrifices by following the commandments. Lv 3:1+
 3 By showing gratitude he makes an offering of fine flour, 38:11

 5 Withdraw from wickedness and the Lord will be pleased, Lv 7:11
 6 withdraw from injustice and you make atonement. 45:16
 7 Do not appear empty-handed in the Lord's presence; Lv 16:1+
 8 for all these things are due under the commandment.
 9 A virtuous man's offering graces the altar,^b
 10 and its savour rises before the Most High. Ex 29:18
 11 A virtuous man's sacrifice is acceptable, 45:16
 12 its memorial will not be forgotten. Lv 2:1-3 13 Honour the Lord with generosity, Dt 26:1+
 14 do not stint the first-fruits you bring.
 15 Add a smiling face to all your gifts, 2 Co 9:7

The justice of God

11 Offer him no bribe, he will not accept it,
 12 do not put your faith in an unvirtuous sacrifice;
 13 since the Lord is a judge^d Dt 10:17
 14 who is no respecter of personages. Jb 34:19
 15 He shows no respect of personages to the detriment of a poor man, Ws 6:7
 16 he listens to the plea of the injured party. Pr 24:23+
 17 He does not ignore the orphan's supplication, Ex 22:21-23
 18 nor the widow's as she pours out her story. Pr 23:10-11
 19 Do the widow's tears not run down her cheeks,
 20 as she cries out against the man who caused them?
 21 The man who with his whole heart serves God^e will be accepted, his petitions will carry to the clouds.
 The humble man's prayer pierces the clouds,^f
 until it arrives he is inconsolable,^g Jb 16:18+

34 a. In the O.T. God sometimes uses dreams to carry his instructions to man, Gn 28:10-17; 31:10-13,24; 37:5-11; 41:1-36, etc. Cf. Nb 12:6. See also Mt 1:20-23; 2:13,22. But recourse to dreams as an ordinary method of divination is censured by Law and Prophets: Jr 29:8; Qo 5:6; Lv 19:26; Dt 13:2-6; 18:9-14, as also by Ben Sira, though he admits the possibility of dreams of authentically divine origin, v. 6.

b. 'Mirror and' corr.; 'The vision of' Greek and Syr.

c. The dream, like the mirror, only presents an image; or perhaps: the dream reflects only what a man already has in his mind, neither adding anything nor providing any assurance, cf. v. 4.

d. Lit. 'thus the heart of a woman in labour fancies'.

e. Ben Sira contrasts dreams which deceive with the Law and wisdom that do not.

f. This verse is apparently explained by v. 24. The poor man's curse is as effective with the Lord as the rich man's prayer and can neutralise it.

35 a. Ben Sirach is both a firm supporter of liturgical worship and a moralist who insists on the Law's precepts of justice and charity. These two enthusiasms unite at this point: Ben Sira maintains that the observance of the Law is itself a fulfilment of ritual worship.

b. Lit. 'greases the altar'.

c. The Hebr. margin adds 'The man who gives to the poor lends to God; who will repay it but he?' cf. Pr 19:17.

d. 'a judge'; Hebr. 'a God of justice'.

e. Or 'who does a service (for his neighbour)'.

f. Where God dwells, cf. Ps 68:34; 104:3, etc.

g. Lit. 'he is not consoled'; Hebr. 'it does not pause'.

nor will he desist until the Most High takes notice of him, 18
 acquits the virtuous and delivers judgement. 19
 And the Lord will not be slow, 22
 nor will he be dilatory on their behalf, 20 until he has crushed the loins of the merciless 23 and exacted vengeance on the nations, 21 until he has eliminated the hordes of the arrogant 22 and broken the sceptres of the wicked.^b 24 until he has repaid each as his deeds deserve 22 and human actions as their intentions merit, 24 until he has judged the case of his people 23 and made them rejoice in his mercy.^c 25 Mercy is welcome in time of trouble, 24
 like rain clouds in time of drought. 26

Discrimination

The stomach takes in all kinds of food 18
 but some foods are better than others. 20
 As the palate discerns the flavour of game, 19
 so a shrewd man detects lying words.^h 21

A perverse heart causes sorrow,
an experienced man knows how to pay him back.

Choosing

A woman's beauty delights the beholder,
a man likes nothing better.

If her tongue is kind and gentle,
her husband has no equal among the sons of men.

Advisers

Any adviser will offer advice,^f
but some are governed by self-interest.

9

Beware of a man who offers advice,

h. 'the hordes of the arrogant'; Hebr. 'the sceptre of pride'. 'of the wicked'; Hebr. 'of wickedness'.

i. 'in his mercy'; Hebr. 'through his salvation'.

36 a. This prayer reveals the sentiments of pious Jews about the year 190 just before the Maccabean revolt. A messianic note, rare in Si, is struck here, as also in the Psalm with which the Hebr. text ends, Si 51:12+.

b. 'Have mercy on us'; Hebr. 'Save us'.

c. Hebr. 'Hasten the end, remember the appointed time. For who is there to say to you: What are you doing?'

d. The hope of 'ingathering', particularly strong during the Exile, remained a characteristic of Judaism long after the exiles had returned. The Jews always regarded their dispersion abroad as a passing and unfortunate phase, to which the coming of the Messiah would put an end.

e. 'Fill...praise'; Hebr. 'Fill Zion with your majesty'. 'sanctuary' corr. following Hebr.; 'people' Greek.

f. The exact sense is uncertain. The author may be meaning Israel as a whole, or the patriarchs, who according to an ancient midrash were among the seven things created before the world, or else created wisdom, the first-fruit of creation (Pr 8:22). Or perhaps he believes that the Messiah or the messianic kingdom 'created before all things' is shortly to appear on earth?

g. 'your servants' several MSS and Hebr.; 'those who pray to you' Text. Rec.

h. 'lying words'; Hebr. 'false food'.

i. Lit. 'enters into a possession'. Alternatively 'has the best of possessions'. Hebr. 'Acquire a wife, the first of acquisitions'.

j. 'a helper that suits him'; Hebr. 'a fortified city'.

k. Hebr. 'without a wife a man is a tramp and a wanderer'.

l. 'a man carrying weapons'; Hebr. 'an armed band'.

37 a. 'a comrade or a friend'; Hebr. 'a friend one loves as oneself'.

b. 'why were you created' corr. following Lat.

c. Hebr. 'The bad friend takes advantage of good cheer'.

d. 'turns against him'; Hebr. 'keeps his distance'.

e. Lit. 'out of concern for his stomach'. Vv. 4-5 contrast two kinds of friend: in danger one runs away, the other remains loyal. In Hebr. v. 5 makes the contrast clearer: 'The good friend fights the enemy and takes up arms against foes'.

f. 'will offer advice'; Hebr. 'wag his finger' (var. 'say: See!').

	first find out what he wants himself—since his advice coincides with his own interest—
	in case he has designs on you ^g	10
	and tells you, 'You are on the right road',	9
	but stands well clear to see what will happen to you. ^h	11
	Do not consult a man who looks at you askance,	10
	conceal your plans from people jealous of you.	12
	Do not consult a woman about her rival,	11
	or a coward about war,
Pr 20:14	a merchant about prices,
	or a buyer about selling,
	a mean man about gratitude,
	or a selfish man about kindness,	13
	a lazy fellow about any sort of work,
	or a casual worker about finishing a job, ⁱ	14
	an idle servant about a major undertaking—
	do not rely on these for any advice.
7:34; 9:15	But constantly have recourse to a devout man, ^j	12
	whom you know to be a keeper of the commandments,	15
	whose soul matches your own,	16
	and who, if you go wrong, will be sympathetic.
	Finally, stick to the advice your own heart gives you,	13
	no one can be truer to you than that;	17
	since a man's soul often forewarns him better	14
	than seven watchmen perched on a watchtower.	18
Pr 16:9	And besides all this beg the Most High	15
	to guide your steps in the truth.	19

True and false wisdom

	Reason must be the beginning of every activity,	16
	reflection must come before any undertaking.	20
	Thoughts are rooted in the heart,	17
	and this sends out four branches: ^k	21
Pr 18:21	good and evil, life and death,	18
	and always mistress of them all is the tongue.
	Think of a clever man who teaches many people,	19
	but does no good at all to himself.	22
9:18	Think of a man, a ready enough speaker, yet he is detested	20
	and will end up by starving, ^l	23
	not having won the favour of the Lord,	21
	and being destitute of all wisdom.	24
	Think of a man who is wise in his own eyes,	22
	and the fruits of his understanding are, if you take his word	25
	for it, certain. ^m
	The truly wise will instruct his own people,	23
	the fruits of his understanding are certain. ⁿ	26
	This wise man will be filled with blessing,	24
	and those who see him will call him happy.	27
	A man's life lasts a number of days,	25
	but the days of Israel are beyond counting.	28
	The wise man will earn confidence among his people,	26
	his name will live for ever.	29

Moderation

	My son, in the course of your life test your constitution,	27
	and do not allow it what you see is harmful to it;	30

28
31 for everything does not suit everybody,
nor does everybody take pleasure in everything.
29
32 Do not be insatiable over any delicacy,
do not be greedy over food, 30
33 for overeating leads to sickness,
and gluttony brings on biliousness.
31
34 Many have died of gluttony;
beware of this and you will prolong your life.

Medicine and illness^a

1 38 Honour the doctor with the honour that is his due^b in return for his services;
for he too has been created by the Lord.
2 Healing itself comes from the Most High,
like a gift from a king.^c 3 The doctor's learning keeps his head high,
he is regarded with awe by potentates.^d 4 The Lord has brought medicines into existence from the earth, and the sensible man will not despise them.
5 Did not a piece of wood once sweeten the water,
thus giving proof of its virtue?^e 6 He has also given men^f learning
so that they may glory in his mighty works.
7 He uses them^g to heal and to relieve pain,
the chemist makes up a mixture from them.
8 Thus there is no end to his activities,^h and through him health extends across the world.
9 My son, when you are ill, do not be depressed,
but pray to the Lord and he will heal you.
10 Renounce your faults, keep your hands unsoiled,
and cleanse your heart from all sin.
11 Offer incense and a memorial of fine flour, and make as rich an offering as you can afford.ⁱ 12 Then let the doctor take over—the Lord created him too—and do not let him leave you, for you need him.
13 Sometimes success is in their hands, since they in turn will beseech the Lord to grant them the grace to relieve and to heal, that life may be saved.^j 15 If a man sins in the eyes of his Maker, may he fall under the care of the doctor.^k

c. Hebr. 'The doctor has his healing art from the Most High and receives gifts from the king'.

d. Hebr. 'and he stands erect in the presence of great men', cf. Pr 22:29.

Mourningⁱ

My son, shed tears over a dead man, 16
 and intone the lament to show your own deep grief;
 bury his body with due ceremonial,
 and do not neglect to honour his grave.^m Weep bitterly, wail most fervently;ⁿ 17 observe the mourning the dead man deserves, 18
 one day, or two,^o to avoid comment,
 and then be comforted in your sorrow;
 for grief can lead to death, 18
 a grief-stricken heart undermines your strength. 19
 Let grief end with the funeral; 19
 a life of grief oppresses the mind.^p 20
 Do not abandon your heart to grief, 20 drive it away, bear your own end in mind.^q 21
 Do not forget, there is no going back; 21 you cannot help the dead, and you will harm yourself. 22
 'Remember my doom,^r since it will be yours too; 22
 yesterday was my^s day, today is yours.' 23
 Once the dead man is laid to rest, let his memory rest too, 23 do not fret for him, once his spirit departs. 24

7:36; 28:6

Trades and crafts^t

11:10 Leisure is what gives the scribe the opportunity to acquire wisdom; 24
 the man with few business affairs grows wise. 25
 How can the ploughman become wise, 25 whose sole ambition is to wield the goad; 26 driving his oxen, engrossed in their work, his conversation is of nothing but cattle?
 His mind is fixed on the furrows he traces, 26
 and his evenings pass in fattening his heifers. 27
 So it is with every workman and craftsman, 27
 toiling day and night;
 those who engrave seals,
 always trying to think of new designs;
 they set their heart on producing a good likeness,
 and stay up perfecting the work.
 So it is with the blacksmith sitting by his anvil; 28
 he considers what to do with the pig-iron, 29
 the breath of the fire scorches his skin,
 as he contends with the heat of the furnace;
 he batters his ear with the din^u of the hammer, 30
 his eyes are fixed on the pattern;
 he sets his heart on completing his work, 31
 and stays up putting the finishing touches.
 So it is with the potter, sitting at his work, 29
 turning the wheel with his feet; 32
 constantly on the alert over his work, each flick of the finger premeditated;^v
 he pummels the clay with his arm, 30 and puddles it with his feet; 33
 he sets his heart on perfecting the glaze, 34
 and stays up cleaning the kiln.
 All these put their trust in their hands, 31
 and each is skilled^w at his own craft. 35
 A town could not be built without them, 32 36

- 37 there would be no settling, no travelling.
 33 But they are not required at the council,
 they do not hold high rank in the assembly.
 38 They do not sit on the judicial bench, and have no grasp of the law.^x 34 They are not remarkable for culture or sound judgement, and are not found among the inventors of maxims.^y 39 But they give solidity to the created world, while their prayer is concerned with what pertains to their trade.

The scholar

- 1 39 It is otherwise with the man who devotes his soul to reflecting on the Law of the Most High.
 1 He researches into the wisdom of all the Ancients, he occupies his time with the prophecies.^a 2 He preserves the discourses of famous men, he is at home with the niceties of parables.^b 3 He researches into the hidden sense of proverbs, he ponders the obscurities of parables.
 4 He enters the service of princes,
 he is seen in the presence of rulers.
 5 He travels in foreign countries,^c
 he has experienced human good and human evil.
 6 At dawn and with all his heart
 he resorts to the Lord who made him;
 he pleads in the presence of the Most High,
 he opens his mouth in prayer and makes entreaty for his sins.
 7 If it is the will of the great Lord,
 he will be filled with the spirit of understanding,
 he will shower forth words of wisdom,
 and in prayer give thanks to the Lord.
 8 He will grow upright in purpose and learning,
 he will ponder the Lord's hidden mysteries.
 9 He will display the instruction he has received, taking his pride in the Law of the Lord's covenant.
 10 Many will praise his understanding, and it will never be forgotten.
 11 His memory will not disappear, generation after generation his name will live.

q. Or 'bear the future in mind'.

r. 'my'; var. 'his' or 'the'. The 'doom' or judicial sentence condemning all to die, cf. Gn 2:17; 3:3,4. The text translated here puts these words into the mouth of the dead man.

s. 'my'; Hebr. 'his'.

t. This passage is not unlike an ancient Egyptian text known as the Satire on Trades.

u. 'din'; var. 'the iron work'. 'batters'; lit. 'bends' corr.

v. Translation uncertain.

w. Lit. 'wise'. Craftsmanship is an elementary form of wisdom, cf. Ex 35:30-36:1; 1 K 5:20; 7:13-14. Such 'wisdom', however, cannot be compared with that of the scribe, cf. Si 39:1-11.

x. Lit. 'the covenant of judgement', cf. 45:17.

y. 'inventors of maxims' corr.; 'maxims' Greek.

39 a. The terms 'law', 'wisdom', 'prophecies', apparently refer to the three sections of the scriptures, cf. Prologue, 1,8-10,24-25.

b. The scribe is custodian of the scriptures, but also their interpreter to the people, cf. Ezr 7:6+. On the parable or mashal, cf. Introduction to Wisdom Books.

c. The scribe is often a court official, minister, or ambassador.

=44:15 Nations will proclaim his wisdom, 10
the assembly will celebrate his praises. 14

and if he dies, that will satisfy him just as well.^d 15

Invitation to praise God

I wish to develop my reflections further, 12
they fill me as full as the moon at the full. 16
Ps 1:3 Listen to me, devout children, and blossom 13
like the rose that grows on the bank of a watercourse. 17 Give off a sweet smell like incense, 14 flower like the lily, spread your fragrance abroad, 18
sing a song of praise 19
blessing the Lord for all his works.
Declare the greatness of his name, 15 proclaim his praise 20
with song and with lyre,
and this is how you must sing his praises:
how wonderful they are, all the works of the Lord! 16
All that he orders is promptly carried out.^e 21
You must not say, 'What is this? Why is that?'
All will be studied in due time.^f
At his word water stops running and piles up, 17 waters are stored at a word from his mouth.^g 22
At his bidding, all his pleasure is accomplished, 18
no one can diminish his power to save. 23
The actions of every creature are before him, 19
there is no hiding from his eyes; 24 his gaze stretches from eternity to eternity, 20 and nothing can astonish him. 25
You must not say, 'What is this? Why is that?' 21
All things have been created for their proper functions. 26
As his blessing covers the dry land like a river^h 22 and soaks it like a flood, 27
so wrath is his legacy to the nations,ⁱ 28
just as he has turned fresh waters to salt. 23
His ways are as smooth for devout men, 24
as they are full of obstacles for the wicked.^j
Good things were created from the beginning for good men, 25
as evils^k were for sinners. 30
The prime needs of mankind for living 26 are water and fire, iron and salt, 31
wheat-flour, milk and honey,
the juice of the grape, oil and clothing.
All these things are good for people who are good, 27
just as they turn into bad for sinners. 32
Some winds were created to punish;
he has made them the scourge of his anger;^l 28
on the day of doom they unleash their force, 33 and appease the anger of him who made them. 34
Fire and hail, famine and death, 29
all these were created to punish.^m 35
The teeth of savage animals, scorpions, adders, 30 and the avenging sword to destroy the godless, 36 all these exult in obeying his orders, 31 37

they are ready on earth when he requires,
and when the time comes they will not disobey his order.

32 That is why I was determined from the outset,
38 I have pondered and I have written it down,ⁿ 33 'All the works of the Lord are good,
39 and he will supply every want in due time.
34 You must not say, "This is worse than that",
40 for everything will prove its value in its time.
35 So now, sing with all your heart and voice,
41 and bless the name of the Lord!'

Qo 7:10

Ps 145:21

The wretchedness of man^a

1 40 Much hardship has been made for every man, a heavy yoke lies on the sons of Adam from the day they come out of their mother's womb, till the day they return to^b the mother of them all.^c 2 What fills them with brooding and their hearts with fear is dread of the day of death.
3 From the man who sits on a glorious throne
to the wretch on dust and ashes, 4 from the man who wears purple and a crown to the man clothed in sackcloth, all is fury and jealousy, turmoil and unrest,
fear of death, rivalry, strife.
5 And even at night while he rests on his bed his sleep only gives a new twist to his worries:^d 6 scarcely has he lain down to rest, than in his sleep, as if in broad daylight,^e
he is shaken by terrible sights like a man running away from a battle.
7 At the moment of rescue he awakens, astonished that his fear was imaginary.
8 For all creatures, from men to animals—
and seven times more for sinners—9 there is death and blood and strife and the sword, disasters, famine, affliction, plague.

d. Lit. 'that is enough for him' corr.; 'it produces for him (?)' Greek. Difficult text; it seems to mean that if the scribe dies before achieving renown he ought not to regret the work he has done.

e. Hebr. 'they provide for every need in its season'.

f. This verse, found only in the Greek, is in part a doublet of v. 21. It apparently means that premature enquiries about the ordering of this world are idle. Some day either by reward or punishment God will demonstrate the purpose of hitherto uncomprehended phenomena, vv. 21,34. Thus the sage who studies will understand 'in due time'. This passage may have been intended to refute certain pessimistic propositions put forward by Qoheleth.

g. Alluding to the numerous marvels connected with water: creation, Gn 1:9, the Flood, Gn 7:11, the crossing of the Red Sea, Ex 14:21-22, and of the Jordan, Jos 3:16, and possibly also to the mystery of the clouds as inexhaustible reservoirs of water. Cf. Ps 104:6-13.

h. The author is thinking of the beneficial inundations of the Nile. Hebr. has 'like a Nile'.

i. Hebr. 'his wrath dispossessed the nations'.

j. 'his ways are smooth'; Hebr. 'the virtuous man's ways are straight', 'for the wicked'; Hebr. 'for strangers'.

k. 'evils'; Hebr. 'good and evil'.

l. Following Syr. and some MSS ('he' = the Lord); 'in their anger they scourge violently' Text. Rec.

m. Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs 'It (the lower heaven) holds fire, snow, and ice ready for the day of judgement, in the just punishment of God. For it is there that the spirits of vengeance are, for the punishment of men' (Levi 3:2). Ben Sira, also, sees these scourges as held in reserve but he does not seem to be thinking in terms of eschatology.

n. Solemn preface to the optimistic conclusion: all is willed by God for a specific purpose; all is under control and man has no reason to complain; if he suffers, it is because he deserves to.

40 a. This passage on the wretchedness of man's state contrasts with the preceding chapter; but there is no inconsistency in the thought: misery has its explanation—it is the consequence of sin, v. 10.

b. 'return to' some MSS and Hebr.; 'are buried in' Text. Rec.

c. Cf. Gn 3:19. Hebr. 'mother of all the living', cf. Gn 3:20.

d. The Hebr. and the context suggest that sleep brings thoughts no less painful. Cf. Qo 2:22,23.

e. 'as if in broad daylight' corr.; 'as if on the day of watching' Greek.

Various maxims

	All bribery and injustice will be blotted out, but good faith will stand for ever.	12
	The wealth of wrong-doers will dry up like a torrent, will crash like a clap of thunder in a downpour.	13
	When he opens his hands he rejoices, ^h by the same token defaulters will come to utter ruin.	14
23:25 Ws 4:3	The offshoots of the godless will not have many branches, unclean roots only find hard rock.	15
Jb 8:11-12	The reeds by every lake and river's edge will be pulled up before any other grass. ⁱ	16
40:27	Graciousness is like a paradise of blessing, and generosity stands firm for ever. ^j	17

Comparisons

	For the man of private means and the man who works hard, life is pleasant, better off than either, he who finds a treasure.	18
Gn 11:4 Mt 13:44	Children and the building of a city make a man's reputation; better than either, the discovery of wisdom.	19
	Cattle and vineyards make you well known; ^k better valued than either, a perfect wife.
	Wine and music cheer the heart; better than either, the love of wisdom. ^l	20
	Flute and harp add sweetness to a song; better than either, a sweet voice.	21
	The eye longs for grace and beauty; better than either, the green of spring corn.	22
	Friend or comrade — it is always well met; better than either, a wife and husband.	23
Pr 17:17 29:8 +	Brothers and allies are good in times of trouble; better than either, generosity to the rescue.	24
	Gold and silver will steady your feet; better valued than either, good advice.	25
	Money and strength make a confident heart; better than either, the fear of the Lord.	26
	With the fear of the Lord a man lacks nothing; with that he need seek no ally.	27
40:17	The fear of the Lord is like a paradise of blessing, it clothes a man with more than glory.	27 28

On begging

	My son, do not live by begging from others, better be dead than a beggar.	28 29
	The life of a man ever eyeing the table of another cannot be reckoned as a life at all.	29 30
	He defiles his gullet with other people's food; a man of culture and breeding will never do this. ^m	31
Jb 20:12-14	Begging comes easily to the lips of the shameless man, but eventually it will set fire to his belly.	30 32

Death

- ¹ 41 O death, how bitter it is to remember you Jb 14:1-2 +

 and still has the strength to feed himself.^a

³ to a man in want, whose strength is failing,
⁴ to a man worn out with age, worried about everything, disaffected and beyond endurance.
- ³ Do not dread death's sentence;^b

 come after.
- ⁴ This is the sentence passed on all living creatures by the Lord, Gn 3:19; 6:3
⁶ so why object to what seems good to the Most High?
 Whether your life lasts ten or a hundred or a thousand years,

- ⁸ A bad outlook for you, godless men,
¹¹ who have forsaken the Law of God Most High.
- ⁹ When you were born, you were born to be accursed,^e ¹² and when you die, that curse will be your portion.
- ¹⁰ All that comes from the earth returns to the earth, = 40:11
¹³ so too the wicked proceed from curse to destruction.^f
- ¹¹ Men go into mourning for their dead,
¹⁴ but the worthless name of sinners will be blotted out.^g
- ¹² Be careful of your reputation, for it will last you longer Pr 22:1
¹⁵ than a thousand great hoards of gold. Qo 7:1
- ¹³ A good life lasts a certain number of days,

A sense of shame

f. 'All these': Hebr. 'Evil'. 'the Flood': Hebr. 'destruction'.

g. Hebr. 'what comes from above returns above', cf. Qo 12:7.

h. Difficult text; possibly referring to the virtuous man whose generosity spreads joy all about him.

i. Hebr. 'have withered before the rain comes'.

j. Hebr. 'Piety will never be shaken and virtue remains for ever'.

k. 'better than either... well known' Hebr. and Syr.; omitted by Greek.

l. 'music'; Hebr. 'strong drink'. 'the love of wisdom'; 'love' Hebr.

m. Hebr. 'It is an inward torture for an intelligent man'.

41 a. Hebr. 'to appreciate luxury'.

b. 'death's sentence'; Hebr. 'death, which is the law'.

c. Where the longest of lives has come to an end and therefore ceased to be matter for envy.

d. Hebr. 'and a godless offspring dwells with sinners'.

e. Hebr. 'If you multiply, it is for misfortune'. The Hebr. then inserts 'if you beget children, it is for sorrow; if you stumble, it is for everlasting joy'.

f. Hebr. 'What is nothingness returns to nothingness; thus the godless man, coming from the void, returns to the void'.

g. Hebr. 'A man's body is a vain thing but a man's name will not be blotted out'.

Now, keep your sense of shame with respect to what I am going to say, ¹⁶ for not every kind of shame is right to harbour, ¹⁹ nor is every situation correctly appraised by all. ²⁰
 Be ashamed, before father and mother, of licentious behaviour, ¹⁷ and before prince or potentate of telling lies; ²¹ of wrong-doing before judge or magistrate, ¹⁸
 and of impiety before the assembly of the people; ²² of sharp practice before your companion and your friend, ¹⁹
 and of theft before the neighbourhood you live in. ²³
 Before the truth and covenant of God, ²⁴ be ashamed of leaning elbows on the table,^h ²⁰ of making gifts before those who despise them,ⁱ ²¹
 and of ignoring those who greet you: ²⁵
 of gazing at a loose woman ²²
 and of turning your back on a relation, ²⁶ of misappropriating another's portion or gift, ²³
 of paying court to another man's wife, ²⁷ of carrying on with his servant-girl ²⁴
 —do not go near her bed— ²⁵
 of words of abuse before your friends ²⁸
 —do not follow up a gift with a taunt— ²⁶ of repeating and retailing gossip ¹
 and of betraying confidences. ²⁷
 Then you will know what true shame is, ²⁷
 and you will find yourself in every man's graces.

42

These are the things you should not be ashamed of,^a ¹ and do not sin from fear of what others think: ² of the Law of the Most High and the covenant, ² of a verdict that acquits the godless,^b ³ of keeping strict accounts with a travelling companion, ³
 of settling property on your friends,^c ⁴
 of being accurate over scales and weights, ⁴ of making small and large profits, ⁵ of gaining from commercial transactions,^d ⁵ of disciplining your children strictly, ⁶
 of lashing a wicked slave till you draw blood. ⁶
 With an interfering wife, it is as well to use your seal, ⁷ and where there are many hands, lock things up. ⁷
 Whatever stores you issue, do it by number and weight, ⁸ spendings and takings, put everything in writing. ⁸
 Do not be ashamed to correct a stupid man or a fool, ⁹ or an old dotard who bickers with young people. ⁹
 Then you will show yourself really educated ¹⁰
 and win the approval of everyone. ¹⁰

The cares of a father over his daughter

7:24 Unknown to her, a daughter keeps her father awake,^e ⁹

II. THE GLORY OF GOD

A. IN NATURE

h. Text uncertain. Possibly only a maxim of common politeness.

i. Text corr. 'before the contempt of receiving and giving' Greek.

42 a. Ben Sira shows how certain actions frowned on by public opinion or by prejudice are nevertheless permissible.

b. The 'godless' perhaps means foreigners, to be treated as justly as Israelites.

c. 'a travelling companion' corr. 'a companion and travellers' Greek. 'of settling...friends': Hebr. 'of discussing property and possessions'.

d. Cf., on the other hand, 26:29 and 27:2. Business dealings are lawful but full of temptation.

e. Hebr. 'a daughter is a deceptive treasure for her father'.

f. Hebr. 'let her not show her beauty to any man, let her not gossip with women'.

g. Ben Sira is stricter than Pr, itself severe on women, cf. Pr 5:15+.

h. Hebr. 'word'. One of the earliest appearances of the doctrine of the creative Word. Cf. 43:26; Gn 1; Ps 33:6; Ws 9:1,2; Jn 1:1+. In wisdom literature as a whole it is rather Wisdom that is spoken of as creative, cf. Pr 8:22+.

i. This line is absent from the Greek (Codex Sinaiticus excepted).

j. I.e. the angels, Jb 5:1+.

k. 'which the Almighty...his glory'; Hebr. 'the Lord has granted his hosts to stand firm before his glory'.

l. The stars are 'signs of the times' not only because they distinguish the seasons, 43:6; Gn 1:14-18, but also because, according to a widespread belief, the future was already written in the heavens, Jr 10:2. Here there may be a more specific reference to the extraordinary signs expected to announce the coming of the Messiah, Mt 24:29-31.

The wonders of natureJb 38:22f
Ps 147:16-18

By his command he sends the snow, he speeds the lightning as he orders. In the same way, his treasures open and the clouds fly out like birds. In his great might he banks up the clouds, and shivers them into fragments of hail. At sight of him the mountains rock, at the roar of his thunder the earth writhes in labour. At his will the south wind blows, or the storm from the north and the whirlwind. ^e He sprinkles snow like birds alighting, it comes down like locusts settling. Ps 29:8

19 Over the earth, like salt, he also pours hoarfrost, 21 which, when it freezes, bristles like thorns.
 20 The cold wind blows from the north,
 22 and ice forms on the water, settling on every watery expanse,
 and water puts it on like a breastplate.
 21 He swallows up the mountains and scorches the desert,^f
 23 like a fire he consumes the vegetation.
 22 But the mist heals everything in good time,
 24 after the heat falls the reviving dew.
 23 By his own resourcefulness he has tamed the abyss,
 25 and planted it with islands.
 24 Those who sail the sea tell of its dangers,^g
 26 their accounts fill our ears with amazement:
 25 for there too there are strange and wonderful works,
 27 animals of every kind and huge sea creatures.
 26 Thanks to him all ends well,^h
 28 and all things hold together by means of his word.
 27 We could say much more and still fall short;
 29 to put it concisely, 'He is all'.ⁱ
 28 Where shall we find sufficient power to glorify him,
 30 since he is the Great One, above all his works, 29 the awe-inspiring Lord, stupendously great,
 31 and wonderful in his power?
 30 Exalt the Lord in your praises
 32 as high as you may—still he surpasses you.
 33 Exert all your strength when you exalt him,
 34 do not grow tired—you will never come to the end.
 31 Who has ever seen him to give a description?
 35 Who can glorify him as he deserves?
 32 Many mysteries remain even greater than these,
 36 for we have seen only a few of his works,
 33 the Lord himself having made all things—
 37 and having given wisdom to devout men.

Heb 11

Eulogy of the ancestors^a

1 44 Next let us praise illustrious men,^b our ancestors in their successive generations.
 2 The Lord has created an abundance of glory,^c and displayed his greatness from earliest times.

p. Hebr. 'All things are different from each other, and there is nothing superfluous'.

43 a. Cf. this lyrical passage with those of Dn 3:52-90 and Ps 19:4f; 136; 145; 148.

b. 'proclaims'; Hebr. 'radiates heat'.

c. The two great Jewish feasts, Passover and Tabernacles, cf. Ex 23:14+, began on the day of full moon (14th of the month) and lasted for 8 days.

d. Either because the same Hebr. word (yeraḥ) means 'moon' and 'month', or because the alternative word for 'month' (hodesh) means 'newness' (new moon).

e. Following Hebr. order.

f. Hebr. 'He scorches the mountain grass with drought'.

g. 'dangers'; Hebr. 'extent'.

h. Hebr. and some Greek MSS 'Thanks to him his messenger prospers'.

i. Not of course in the pantheistic sense. For Ben Sira, everything comes from God, whose transcendence he constantly asserts (cf., in this passage, v. 28) and everything belongs to him.

44 a. This eulogy shows how a devout Jew of the 2nd century before Christ thought of the history of his people, cf. 1 M 2:51-64.

b. Hebr. 'men of piety' (hesed). The name 'Hasideans' is derived from this expression, 1 M 2:42+.

c. Vv. 2-9 may be either a description of 'human glory' as known outside Israel, with which the author contrasts (vv. 1 and 10f) that of the forefathers of the Jews, or else a general survey of the glories of Israel preluding the more detailed account.

Some wielded authority as kings 3 and were renowned for their strength;
 others were intelligent advisers
 and uttered prophetic oracles.
 Others directed the people^d by their advice, 4
 by their understanding of the popular mind,^e and by the wise words of their teaching;^f others composed musical melodies, 5
 and set down ballads;
 others were rich and powerful, 6
 living peacefully in their homes.^g
 All these were honoured by their contemporaries, 7
 and were the glory of their day.
 Some of them left a name behind them, 8
 so that their praises are still sung.
 While others have left no memory, 9
 and disappeared as though they had not existed, they are now as though they had never been,
 and so too, their children after them.
 But here is a list of generous men 10
 whose good works have not been forgotten.^h
 In their descendants there remains 11
 a rich inheritance born of them.
 Their descendants stand by the covenants 12
 and, thanks to them, so do their children's children.
 Their offspringⁱ will last for ever, 13
 their glory will not fade.
 Their bodies have been buried in peace, 14
 and their name lives on for all generations.
 The peoples will proclaim their wisdom, 15
 the assembly will celebrate their praises.

- because of his zeal in the fear of the Lord, because he stood firm when the people revolted, with a staunch and courageous heart;^f
 and in this way atoned for Israel.
 Hence a covenant of peace was sealed with him,
 making him governor of both sanctuary^k and people,
 and securing to him and his descendants
 the high priestly dignity for ever.
 There was also a covenant with David son of Jesse, of the tribe of Judah, a royal succession from father to one son exclusively,^l
 but the succession of Aaron passes to all his descendants.^m
 May God endow your hearts with wisdomⁿ to judge his people virtuously,
 so that the virtues of your ancestors may never fade,
 and their glory may pass to all their descendants.

Joshua

- 1 46 Mighty in war was Joshua son of Nun, successor to Moses^a in the prophetic office,
 who well deserved his name,^b 2 and was a great saviour of the Chosen People, wreaking vengeance on the enemies who opposed him,
 and so bringing Israel into its inheritance.
 3 How splendid he was when he raised his arms to brandish his sword against cities!
 4 Who had ever shown such determination as his?
 He himself waged the wars of the Lord.^c 5 Was not the sun held back by his hand, and one day drawn out into two?
 6 He called on God^d the Most High,
 as he pressed the enemy on every side;
 and the great Lord answered him with hard and violent hailstones.
 7 He fell on that enemy nation,^e
 and at the Descent he destroyed all resistance; 8 that the nations might acknowledge his warlike prowess and know that their foe was the Lord.^f that it is good to follow the Lord.

1 S 1:1f;2:26 Samuel

Samuel was the beloved of his Lord;
 prophet of the Lord, he instituted the kingdom,^c
 and anointed rulers over his people.
 In the Law of the Lord he judged the assembly,
 and the Lord watched over Jacob.
 By his loyalty he was recognised as a prophet,
 by his words he was known to be a trustworthy seer.
 He called on the Lord, the Mighty One,
 when his enemies pressed him on every side,
 by offering a sucking lamb.
 And the Lord thundered from heaven,
 and made his voice heard in a rolling peal;
 he massacred the leaders of the enemy,^d
 and all the rulers of the Philistines.
 Before the time of his everlasting rest
 he bore witness before the Lord and his anointed,
 'Of no property, not even a pair of sandals,
 have I ever deprived a soul'.
 Nor did anyone accuse him.
 And after he fell asleep he prophesied again,
 warning the king of his death;
 he lifted up his voice from the earth in prophecy,
 to blot out the wickedness of the people.

8 In all his activities he gave thanks 2 S 23:1

songs': Sg. On the wisdom and literary activity of Solomon, cf. 1 K 5:9-14.

i. Hebr. 'You were called by the glorious name invoked on Israel'; this possibly alludes to the name given to Solomon at his birth: Jedidiah 'beloved-of-Yahweh', 2 S 12:25.

j. Hebr. 'and became their slave through your body'.

k. 'your stock': Hebr. 'your bed'.

l. 'and grief...' Hebr.: 'and I am grieved at your folly' Greek.

m. 'words' Hebr.; 'works' Greek.

n. Rehoboam...': Hebr. 'broad in his folly, narrow in his mind'. Apparently a play on words in both readings: Rehoboam (Roboam) explained from raba (broad) and am (people).

48 a. This 'reproof' is perhaps implicit in the vision of 1 K 19:9-14.

b. 'prophets'; Hebr. 'a prophet'.

c. 'in a chariot... horses'; Hebr. 'and with fiery battalions'.

d. 'they who see you'; Hebr. (corr.) 'he who sees you and (dies?)'. 'have fallen asleep'; var. 'have been adorned'. Text uncertain. After his eulogy of the prophet the author asserts that those who will see Elijah when he returns, as also those who have died 'in love' (in the love of God?) will live for ever. This is a clear expression of the hope of immortality. The Hebr., however, unfortunately defective here, perhaps only referred to Elisha who 'saw' Elijah disappear (2 K 2:10,12).

e. After dying the prophet raised a dead man to life, 2 K 13:20-21. But the text is overloaded. Hebr. 'beneath him his body was created'.

f. Hebr. 'of Judah only a remnant was left'.

g. 'and constructed cisterns'; Hebr. 'and sealed up reservoirs in the mountains'.

h. Ben Sira's translator has made a proper name out of rab shakeh (the 'chief cupbearer'). Greek here adds 'and departed'.

Isaiah

For Hezekiah did what is pleasing to the Lord, 22 and was steadfastⁱ in the ways of David his father, 25 enjoined on him by the prophet Isaiah,
 a great man trustworthy in his vision.
 In his days the sun moved back; 23
 he prolonged the life of the king. 26
 In the power of the spirit he saw the last things, 24
 he comforted the mourners of Zion, 27
 he revealed the future to the end of time, 25 and hidden things long before they happened.^j 28

Josiah

49

The memory of Josiah is like blended incense 1 prepared by the perfumer's art;
 it is as sweet as honey to all mouths, 2
 and like music at a wine feast.
 He took the right course, of converting the people,^a 2
 he rooted out the iniquitous abominations, 3
 he set his heart on the Lord, 4
 in godless times he upheld the cause of religion.

The last kings and prophets

Apart from David, Hezekiah and Josiah, 4 they all heaped wrong on wrong; 5
 since they disregarded the Law of the Most High, 6
 the kings of Judah disappeared;^b since they gave^c their strength to others 5 and their honour to a foreign nation.^d 7
 The holy, chosen city was burnt down, 6 her streets were left deserted, 8 as Jeremiah had predicted;^e for they had ill-treated him 7 though consecrated a prophet in his mother's womb 9
to tear up and afflict and destroy,
but also to build up and to plant.

Ezekiel it was who saw a vision of glory 8 which God showed to him above the chariot of the Cherubs,^f 10 for he remembered the enemies with torrential rain^g 9 to the advantage of those who follow the right way. 11

As for the twelve prophets, 10 may their bones flower again from the tomb, 12 since they have comforted Jacob and redeemed him in faith and hope.

Zerubbabel and Joshua

How shall we extol Zerubbabel? 11
 He was like a signet ring on the right hand, 13
 so too was Jeshua son of Jozadak; 12
 they who in their days built the Temple, 14
 and raised to the Lord a holy people, destined to everlasting glory.

Nehemiah

encrusted with every kind of precious stone, 12 like an olive tree loaded with fruit, like a cypress soaring to the clouds;

when he went up to the holy altar,
and filled the sanctuary precincts with his grandeur;
when he received the portions from the hands of the priests, himself standing by the altar hearth,

 as though surrounded by the trunks of palm trees. 14
 When all the sons of Aaron in their glory, 13 with the offerings of the Lord in their hands, 15 stood before the whole assembly of Israel, while he completed the rites at the altars, 14 presenting in due order the offering for the Most High, the Almighty, reaching out his hand to the cup,^j 15 and pouring a libation of the juice of the grape, 16 pouring it at the foot of the altar, 17 an appeasing fragrance to the Most High, the King of all, then the sons of Aaron would shout 16
 and blow their trumpets of beaten metal, 18 making a mighty sound ring out 18
 as a reminder before the Most High;
 and immediately the people all together 17
 would fall on their faces to the ground, 19 in adoration of their Lord,^k
 the Almighty, God Most High, and with the cantors chanting their hymns of praise: 18
 sweet was the melody of all these voices,^l 20
 as the people pleaded with the Lord Most High,^m 19 and prayed in the presence of the Merciful, 21 until the serviceⁿ of the Lord was completed and the ceremony at an end.
 Then he would come down and raise his hands 20
 over the whole concourse of the sons of Israel, 22 to give them the Lord's blessing from his lips, being privileged to pronounce his name;^o
 and once again the people would bow low 21 to receive the blessing from the Most High. 23

Exhortation

And now bless the God of all things, 22
 the doer of great deeds everywhere, 24 who has exalted our days from the womb
 and acted towards us in his mercy.
 May he grant us cheerful hearts 23

 May his mercy be faithfully with us, 24 may he redeem us in our time.^q 26

THE PROPHETS

INTRODUCTION TO THE PROPHETS

The Hebrew Bible groups the Books of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and that of the Twelve Minor prophets under the title of 'Later Prophets'; this collection it puts after the Joshua-Kings group which it entitles 'Earlier Prophets'. The Greek Bible puts the prophetic books after the Psalms and the Wisdom Books (the 'Writings' or 'Hagiographa') arranging them differently from the Hebrew and adding to them Lamentations and Daniel (which the Hebrew Bible places towards the end of its catalogue); it also contains additional material not written, or not preserved, in Hebrew, including the Book of Baruch (after Jeremiah), the Letter of Jeremiah (after Lamentations), and the additions to the Book of Daniel. The Latin Vulgate has substantially adopted this arrangement but has followed the Hebrew in putting the minor after the four major prophets, and has appended the Letter of Jeremiah to the Book of Baruch which has been placed after Lamentations.

The nature of prophecy

To a greater or lesser degree and in varying forms, the great religions of antiquity always had their 'inspired' men who claimed to be speaking in the name of the god. This was particularly true of Israel's neighbours: texts from the second millenium B.C. tell of prophetic activity at Mari on the Euphrates and at Byblos in Phoenicia. More detailed evidence comes from the Bible itself which speaks of the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal summoned by Jezebel, a native of Tyre, and discomfited by Elijah on Mt Carmel, 1 K 18:19-40; and the Bible goes on to speak of the four hundred prophets consulted by Ahab, 1 K 22:5-12. Like the former, these were a group of wild ecstasies, though they claimed to speak in the name of Yahweh. The claim was false, but evidently contemporary Yahwism recognised that such an institution was not in itself illegitimate. We find groups of 'inspired' men in company with Samuel, 1 S 10:5; 19:20, and in the time of Elijah, 1 K 18:4, prophetic confraternities were in touch with Elisha, 2 K 2:3-18; 4:38f; 6:1f; 9:1; this is the last we hear of them save for the allusion in Am 7:14. Under the influence of music, 1 S 10:5, they would either go into a collective ecstasy that also affected their audience, 1 S 10:10; 19:20-24, or perform symbolic mimes, 1 K 22:11.

Elisha himself on one occasion resorted to music before prophesying, 2 K 3:15. More common with the prophets was the symbolic action; thus Ahijah of Shiloh, 1 K 11:29f, but also Isaiah, Is 20:2-4, frequently Jeremiah, Jr 13:1f; 19:1f; 27:2f, notably Ezekiel, 4:1-5:4; 12:17,18; 21:23f; 37:15f. During these performances, or on other occasions, their behaviour was at times extravagant and their psychological states abnormal, but these things were only incidental to the proper work of those prophets whose actions and words the Bible preserves for us. In this they are sharply distinguished from the ecstasies of the ancient prophetic confraternities.

Nevertheless, they are called by the same name, nabi. Doubtless the derived verb sometimes means 'to be beside oneself', 1 S 18:10 and elsewhere, from the way in which certain 'prophets' behaved, but this secondary use does not affect the original meaning of the noun itself. It is more probable that this noun is connected with a root that means 'to call, to proclaim'. The nabi is therefore either 'he who is called' or 'he who proclaims'; these two meanings together describe the essence of prophecy in Israel. The prophet is the bearer and interpreter of the word of God. This is succinctly expressed in two parallel passages: in Ex 4:15-16, Aaron is the interpreter of Moses, Aaron the 'mouth' of Moses, Moses 'the god who inspired him'; in Ex 7:1, Moses is to be 'a god for Pharaoh', and Aaron his 'prophet' (nabi). We are reminded of the words of Yahweh to Jeremiah: 'I am putting my words into your mouth', Jr 1:9. The prophets are aware that their message is from God, introducing it with the words 'Yahweh says this', 'Word of Yahweh', 'Oracle of Yahweh'.

This word compels them and they must speak it: 'The Lord Yahweh speaks: who can refuse to prophesy?' Amos cries, Am 3:8, and Jeremiah struggles vainly in its grip, Jr 20:7-10.

At a point in their lives each received an irresistible divine call, Am 7:15; Is 6, cf. especially Jr 1:4-10, and was chosen as God's envoy, Is 6:8; the price of attempting to elude this vocation is stated in the early part of the story of Jonah. These men were sent to proclaim God's demands and to be 'signs' of this divine will in their own persons. For it is not only the words they speak and the actions they perform that tell of God, but their whole lives. Hosea's unhappy marriage is a symbol, Ho 1-3; Isaiah walks naked for a portent, Is 20:3, and he with his children are 'signs and portents', Is 8:18; the life of Jeremiah is itself a lesson, Jr 16; Ezekiel is 'a sign for the House of Israel' when he carries out the strange commands of God, Ezk 4:3; 12:6,11; 24:24.

The divine message comes to them in various ways: by vision as in Is 6, Ezk 1,2,8, etc., Dn 8-12, Zc 1-6 (but rarely by night, cf. Nb 12:6; cf. Dn 7; Zc 1:8f), by hearing, but most often by internal inspiration (in this sense we are usually to understand the formulae: 'The word of Yahweh came to me', 'Word of Yahweh to . . .'), sometimes unexpectedly, sometimes occasioned by some quite ordinary circumstance like the sight of an almond branch, Jr 1:11, of two baskets of figs, Jr 24, or a visit to the potter's workshop, Jr 18:1-4. Equally various are the methods the prophets use to convey their message: lyrical fragments, prose narratives, in parable or direct speech, curt oracular style or the various literary forms of exhortation, diatribe, sermon, proverb, formal psalms, love songs, satire, funeral lament, etc.

This variety in both reception and transmission of the divine message is in large part due to the individual temperament and natural talents of each prophet. Yet beneath this variety there is something all have in common: the genuine prophet is fully aware that he is a mouthpiece, no more; his words though his own are not his own. He has no doubt that the word of God has come to him and that he must pass it on to others. The source of this conviction is a mysterious, we may call it mystical, experience of a direct contact with God. As we have said, the divine seizure often provokes 'abnormal' manifestations but, as with the great mystics, these are incidental. It is important to notice that the prophet, like the mystic, is raised to a 'supranormal' psychological state by this divine intervention. To deny this would be to reduce the prophet to the rank of poet or to credit him with the illusions of misguided visionaries.

The prophet rarely addresses his message to a single person, Is 22:15f, or, if he does so, it is with others in view, Jr 20:6; Am 7:17. The king, responsible for the whole nation, is an exception. Thus Nathan in the case of David, Elijah in that of Ahab, Isaiah of Ahaz and Hezekiah, Jeremiah of Zedekiah; after the return from exile the high priest, leader of the community, is also the recipient of the prophetic message, Zc 3. In every description of a prophet's call, it is made clear that his mission is to the nation, Am 7:15; Is 6:9; Ezk 2:3, or, in the case of Jeremiah, to all the nations.

The prophet's message relates to both present and future. His mission is to the men of his own time; to them he communicates the will of God. But in so far as he declares the mind of God he stands beyond time and his preaching is supported and continued by the fulfilment of the predictions he makes. At times he foretells some event in the near future the realisation of which will vindicate his words and his divine mission, 1 S 10:1f; Is 7:14; Jr 28:15f; 44:29-30; at times he tells of punishment to come in retribution for the crimes against which he thunders, or of prosperity in reward for the repentance for which he pleads. Prophets of the later period look still further ahead to the final triumph of God, though here too there is always a lesson for the present. Since the prophet, however, is an instrument of God and no more, his message may exceed the bounds of its historical context and even of his own appreciation; the message may remain veiled in mystery until the future explains its significance by fulfilling it, as in the case of the messianic prophecies.

There are two aspects to the message, threat and consolation. Jeremiah was sent 'to tear up and to knock down, to build up and to plant'. And indeed the message often makes bitter hearing, a tissue of menaces and reproaches, so much so that severity comes to be a sign that a prophet is genuine, Jr 28:8-9, cf. Jr 26:16-19; 1 K 22:8. This is because the true prophet is haunted by the idea of sin, the obstacle to the will of God. The prospects of salvation, however, are never forgotten. The Book of Consolation, Is 40-55, is a peak of prophecy; nor is there any justification for questioning the authenticity of passages in the older prophets which speak of future happiness, passages such as we find in Am 9:8-15; Ho 2:16-25; 11:8-11; 14:2-9. In God's dealings with his people, pardon and punishment are complementary.

Though the prophet is sent to the people of Israel, his vision, like the strong arm of God which is his theme, reaches more distant horizons. In the major prophets there are groups of oracles against the nations, Is 13-23; Jr 46-51; Ezk 25-32; the Book of Amos opens with sentence pronounced on Israel's neighbours; Obadiah delivers an oracle against Edom; Nahum is one long oracle against Nineveh.

The prophet himself knows that he speaks in God's name, but what of his hearers? Spurious prophets appear more than once in the Bible. Such prophets may be sincere but deluded, or they may be deliberate frauds; they are not distinguished from the true prophet by their behaviour. They succeed in duping the people, and the genuine prophets are forced to denounce them; thus Micaiah ben Imlah denounces the prophets of Ahab, 1 K 22:8f, Jeremiah attacks

Hananiah, Jr 28, and all spurious prophets in general, Jr 23, Ezekiel condemns prophets and prophetesses in Israel, Ezk 13. How are men to know if a message is from God? How recognise the genuine prophet? The Old Testament offers two criteria: the fulfilment of a prophecy, Jr 28:9; Dt 18:22; and cf. 1 S 10:1f; Is 7:14; Jr 28:15f; 44:29-30, but also, and of more importance, the agreement of the prophet's teaching with Yahwistic doctrine, Jr 23:22; Dt 13:1-6.

The texts we have quoted from Deuteronomy show that prophecy was an officially recognised institution of Israelite religion. The prophets were on occasion associated with the priests, Jr 8:1; 23:11; 26:7f, etc.; Zc 7:3, etc., and Jeremiah tells us that in the Temple at Jerusalem there was a room 'of Ben-johanan, a man of God', probably a prophet. From these indications and from similarities between some prophetic messages and liturgical compositions, certain recent scholars have inferred that the prophets, even the most notable among them, were attached to the Temple and played an official part in its worship. This hypothesis goes far beyond the evidence of the texts on which it is built; these are sufficiently explained by some looser connection between the prophets and the main centres of Israelite worship, as also by the influence of the liturgy on certain of the prophets' oracles, in particular those of Habakkuk, Zechariah and Joel.

The nature of the prophetic function has to be deduced from a variety of facts and of texts, but from these emerges this fundamental idea: the prophet is one who has an immediate experience of God; he is one to whom the holiness and will of God have been revealed; he contemplates present and future through the eyes of God; he is sent to remind men of their duty to God and to bring them back to obedience and love. Prophecy thus understood is a thing peculiar to Israel, a providential instrument of God for the guidance of his chosen people.

History of the prophetic movement

Given this definition of the prophet's nature and function, it is not surprising that Moses is accounted the father of them all, Dt 18:5,18, and their most distinguished representative, Nb 12:6-8; Dt 34:10-12, for he spoke with God face to face and conveyed his Law to the chosen people. His privileges did not die with him and 'the spirit dwells' in Joshua, his successor, Nb 27:18, cf. Dt 34:9. In the period of the Judges we meet Deborah the prophetess, Jg 4-5, and the unnamed prophet of Jg 6:8, and later Samuel himself, prophet and seer, 1 S 3:20; 9:9; cf. 2 Ch 35:18. Subsequently the prophetic spirit is found diffused among the groups of visionaries whose eccentric behaviour has already been mentioned, 1 S 10:5; 19:20, after whom come the more sober confraternities, the 'sons of the prophets', 2 K 2, etc.; even after the return from exile we still hear of 'prophets' spoken of in the plural, Zc 7:3. Nothing is known of the influence of these confraternities on the religious life of the nation, but other prophets appear, not of their number, whose influence is considerable: thus Gad, prophet of David, 1 S 22:5; 2 S 24:11, and Nathan, under the same king, 2 S 7:2f; 12:1f; 1 K 1:11f; so also Ahijah under Jeroboam, 1 K 11:29f; 14:2f, Jehu son of Hanani under Baasha, 1 K 16:7, Elijah and Elisha under Ahab and his successors, 1 K 17 to 2 K 13 passim, Jonah under Jeroboam II, 2 K 14:25, the prophetess Huldah under Josiah, 2 K 22:14f, Uriah under Jehoikim, Jr 26:20. To this list the Books of Chronicles add Shemaiah under Rehoboam, 2 Ch 12:5f, Iddo under Rehoboam and under Abijah, 2 Ch 12:15; 13:22, Azariah under

Asa, 2 Ch 15:1f, Oded under Ahaz, 2 Ch 28:9f, and a few others whose names are not given.

Most of these prophets are barely more than mentioned, but we know a little more about a few of them. Nathan is the prophet who assures David of the permanence of his divinely favoured dynasty—the first of a series of prophecies, becoming clearer as time goes on, of the Messiah, son of David, 2 S 7:1-17. This same prophet reproves David for his adultery with Bathsheba but, on his repentance, assures him of God's forgiveness, 2 S 12:1-24. Elijah and Elisha we know relatively well, thanks to the narratives in the Books of Kings. Elijah appears as the champion of the true God at a time when imported pagan cults are threatening the religion of Yahweh; on the summit of Carmel he wins a signal victory over the prophets of Baal, 1 K 18. His meeting with God at Horeb, the mountain of the covenant, shows how closely his own work is related to that of Moses, 1 K 19. He is the champion of the true faith indeed but also of sound morals; he sternly pronounces God's judgement on Ahab who has murdered Naboth for the sake of his vineyard, 1 K 21. An aura surrounds this figure whose disappearance is so mysteriously described, 2 K 2:1-18, and in Jewish tradition Elijah has grown more important with the passage of time. Unlike him, Elisha the hermit-prophet, plays a prominent part in contemporary affairs: in the Moabite war, 2 K 3, in the wars against the Syrians, 2 K 6-7, in Hazael's usurpation at Damascus, 2 K 8:7-15, and Jehu's usurpation in Israel, 2 K 9:1-3. He is consulted by the powerful, by Jehoash of Israel, 2 K 13:14-18, Ben-hadad of Damascus, 2 K 8:7-8, Naaman the Syrian, 2 K 5. He is also connected with the confraternities of the 'sons of the prophets', who related marvellous tales about him, 2 K 4:1-7, 38-44; 6:1-7.

Not unnaturally most of our information is about the prophets in the scriptural canon. Each of these will be treated separately when the books bearing their names are discussed; meanwhile we may indicate their relationship to the whole prophetic movement. The ministry of Amos is dated in the mid-8th century, about fifty years after the death of Elisha, and the great age of prophecy (less than two centuries) continues until the Exile; the period is dominated by the two great figures of Isaiah and Jeremiah, though to the same epoch belong Hosea, Micah, Nahum, Zephaniah and Habakkuk. The end of the ministry of Jeremiah coincides with the beginning of that of Ezekiel, the prophet of the Exile. But with Ezekiel the atmosphere changes: spontaneity and verve decline, the visions are on the grand scale and very involved, their description is meticulous, and interest in the 'latter days' increases; in short, apocalyptic literary form is beginning to make its appearance. In this period, even so, the great Isaian tradition is continued, with elaborations, in Is 40-55 (the 'Book of Consolation'). Haggai and Zechariah, the prophets of the Return, are more restricted in their outlook: they are entirely concerned with the rebuilding of the Temple. After these comes Malachi to point out the defects of the newly established community. The short Book of Jonah follows; adapting the ancient and sacred texts to teach its new lesson, it heralds the literary form called 'midrash'. In Joel and in the second part of Zechariah we re-encounter the apocalyptic literary fashion set by Ezekiel; so too in Daniel, where images of past and future come together in one great vision that transcends time, a vision of the destruction of evil and of the coming of the kingdom of God. At this point, it seems, the high inspiration of the prophets is exhausted and we begin to hear of the 'prophets of old', Dn 9:6,10, and cf., even before, Zc 7:7,12, while Zc 13:2-6 foresees the end of a prophetic office discredited by prophets who have proved spurious. But an outpouring of the spirit is promised for messianic times in Jl 3:1-5, and the promise is fulfilled at Pentecost, cf. Ac 2:16f; since this was the true beginning of the new age initiated by the preaching of the Baptist, the last of the prophets of the old Law, 'a prophet and more than a prophet', Mt 11:9; Lk 7:26.

The teaching of the prophets

The prophets played an important part in the religious development of Israel. They strove to keep the nation faithful to the true religion of Yahweh but, additionally, were the instruments especially chosen by God to further divine revelation. In this multiple activity each prophet made his own characteristic contribution to the doctrinal structure. These contributions were complementary, continuing to assert the three dominant features of Old Testament theology: monotheism, morality, messianism.

Monotheism: this was no new thing to the prophets. When Amos, earliest of the canonical prophets, describes Yahweh as the only God, lord of nature, master of men and their destinies, he is simply recalling old truths in strong support of his threats. But the teaching and implications of this ancient faith emerge ever more clearly. Because the Sinaitic revelation of the one God had been associated with the idea of choice and covenant, Yahweh might well appear as a God exclusive to Israel, tied to the land and its shrines. The prophets do indeed insist on the bond between Yahweh and his chosen people, but they also show how the fortunes of other nations are in his hands, Am 9:7. He sits as judge over smallest states as over widest empires, Am 1-2 (cf. also all the 'prophecies against the nations'), he grants them power and withdraws it, Jr 27:5-8, he uses them as instruments and weapons of his vengeance, Am 6:11; Is 7:18-19; 10:6; Jr 5:15-17, but drops them when he pleases, Is 10:12. The land of Israel is Yahweh's possession, Jr 7:7, the Temple his home, Is 6; Jr 7:10-11, but the prophets foretell destruction for the Temple, Mi 3:12; Jr 7:12-14; 26, and Ezekiel foresees the glory of Yahweh deserting Jerusalem, Ezk 10:18-22; 11:22-23.

By the side of Yahweh, lord of all the earth, there is no place for any other gods. When pagan cults, and compromises with them, threaten the faith of Israel, the prophets assert the impotence of false gods and the worthlessness of idols, Ho 2:7-15; Jr 2:5-13,27-28; 5:7; 16:20. During the Exile, when the hopes of the nation collapse and the power of Yahweh may have seemed defeated, the indictment of idols becomes more biting as well as more reasoned, Is 40:19-20; 41:6-7,21-24; 44:9-20; 46:1-7; cf. Jr 10:1-16, and at a later date the Letter of Jeremiah, Ba 6, and Dn 14; while the assertion of monotheism grows all the more vigorous, Is 44:6-8; 46:1-7,9.

This one God is transcendent, an attribute for which the favourite expression of the prophets is 'holy'; this is a recurrent theme in the preaching of Isaiah (Is 6 and passim: 1:4; 5:19,24; 10:17,20, etc.), but also cf. Ho 11:9; Is 40:25; 41:14,16,20, etc., Jr 50:29; 51:5; Hab 1:12; 3:3. He is wrapped in mystery, Is 6; Ezk 1, and is infinitely above the 'sons of men' (Ezekiel's continually recurring phrase emphasising the distance between the prophet and the God who speaks to him). And yet he is near; his kindness makes him so; and it is more than kindness, for Hosea and Jeremiah present it in allegory as wedded love between Yahweh and Israel, Ho 2; Jr 2:2-7; 3:6-8, an allegory which Ezekiel draws out at length, Ezk 16 and 23.

Morality: God is pure holiness, man a thing unclean, Is 6:5, a conviction which gives the prophets a sharp appreciation of sin. This entirely moral outlook is no more an innovation than monotheism; it is implicit in the ancient Decalogue, it lies behind Nathan's rebuke of David, 2 S 12, and Elijah's rebuke of Ahab, 1 K 21. But in our canonical prophets it becomes a repeated theme: sin is what divides man from God, Is 59:2, since sin is an offence against the God of Justice (Amos), the God of Love (Hosea), the God of Holiness (Isaiah). It may be said that sin is central to the vision of Jeremiah; it infects the entire nation, corrupting it, as it seems, beyond hope, Jr 13:23. Wickedness is rife and invites the vengeance of God, the great judgement of 'the day of Yahweh', Is 2:6-22; 5:18-20; Ho 5:9-14; Jl 2:1-2; Zp 1:14-18, so surely that for Jeremiah a criterion of genuine prophecy is that it should foretell disaster, Jr 28:8-9. As the sin is national and collective, so too must be the punishment; even so, the idea of individual punishment also makes its appearance in Jr 31:29-30 (cf. Dt 24:16) and is confirmed in Ezk 18, cf. 33:10-20.

Parallel with this runs a deepening appreciation of what religion demands. If a man is to escape punishment for his sins, he must 'seek God', Am 5:4; Jr 50:4; Zp 2:3, and this means, as Zephaniah explains, observing God's commandments, pursuing what is right, practising humility, cf. Is 1:17; Am 5:24; Ho 10:12; Mi 6:8. God asks for a religion of the heart, and Jeremiah declares this to be a condition of the covenant that is to come, Jr 31:31-34. Religion and external worship must live by this spirit; the prophets attack all ritual practice not related to moral conduct, Is 1:11-17; Jr 6:20; Ho 6:6; Mi 6:6-8.

Messianism: God, however, does not make the punishment of sin an end in itself. He does not want his people to perish utterly; they may repeatedly betray him—he still does not forsake his promise. A 'remnant' will be allowed to survive, Is 4:3+. This idea makes its appearance in Amos, 5:15; in the subsequent prophets it is developed and further defined. There is in the prophetic mind no perspective to distinguish God's imminent punitive intervention from his remote and final judgement; hence the 'remnant' is at one and the same time those who survive the immediate peril and those who are to win final salvation. The course of history itself will distinguish these perspectives. Crisis succeeds crisis and the survivors of each successive crisis are the 'remnant': they are the population of Israel suffered to remain after the fall of Samaria, Am 5:15, or of Judah after Sennacherib's invasion, Is 37:31-32; they are the exiles in Babylon after the fall of Jerusalem. Jr 24:8; they are also those who return to Palestine after the Exile, Zc 8:6,11,12; Ezr 9:8,13-15. But whatever the crisis, these survivors are always considered as the promising shoot, the nucleus, of a sacred nation, divinely assured of its great future, Is 11:10; 37:31; Mi 4:7; 5:6-7; Ezk 37:12-14; Zc 8:11-13.

In this future age there will be such happiness as the chosen people have never known; those of Israel and of Judah who have been scattered among the nations will return to a Land of Promise, Is 11:12-13; Jr 30-31, astonishingly fertile, Is 30:23-26; 32:15-17, and the people of God will take vengeance on their enemies, Mi 4:11-13; 5:6-8. Material prosperity and power do not, however, lie at the heart of the prophetic hope; they are only concomitants of the coming of the kingdom of God, for this, the essential hope, implies a profoundly spiritual outlook: virtue and holiness, Is 29:19-24, a new mode of life and divine forgiveness, Jr 31:31-34, true knowledge of God, Is 2:3; 11:9; Jr 31:34, peace and joy, Is 2:4; 9:6; 11:6-8; 29:19.

To establish his kingdom on earth and to rule it, Yahweh the King will have his vicegerent, his Messiah, anointed (as the word means) to royal dignity. Foreseeing his choice, God, speaking through the prophet Nathan, promised David that his dynasty would endure, 2 S 7. Of this Davidic line would come the Messiah, Is 11:1; Jr 23:5-33:15. As the messianic expectation grew, an intense significance was found in the prophecies in which the prophets had expressed their own hopes: the noblest titles conceivable would be his, Is 9:5, and the spirit of Yahweh with its great sum of gifts would rest on him, Is 11:1-5. Isaiah, 7:14, calls him Immanuel ('God-with-us'), and Jeremiah, 23:6, Yahweh sidqenu ('Yahweh-is-our-righteousness'); the two titles sum up the messianic hope in its purest form. Any pointers to the identity of the Messiah were collected and remembered: he would originate in Bethlehem Ephrathah, Mi 5:1, and would be preceded by a messenger, Mi 3:1.

This great hope survived the collapse of pretensions to political domination and the hard lesson of the Exile. Henceforth, the prophets begin to speak of the second David not so much as a mighty king, but rather as a mediator or as a shepherd, Ex 34:23f, meek and humble, Zc 9:9. Of especial significance is the appearance in the second half of Isaiah of the servant of Yahweh; this figure is not given the name Messiah, but he is represented as the teacher of his people and a light to the nations, a gentle preacher of the law of God, despised and rejected by his own, yet winning their salvation at the sacrifice of his own life, Is 42:1-7; 49:1-9; 50:4-9, and especially 52:13-53:12. The prophet Daniel, however, sees someone like a son of man coming on the clouds to receive dominion over all the nations, a kingdom never to fail, Dn 7, from the hand of God.

This messianic expectation runs throughout the history and sustains the faith of Israel. It was, however, expressed in terms that remained mysterious until the coming of the one who gave full realisation to the prophecies and resolved their apparent contradictions in himself, i.e., Jesus called the Christ (that is to say, the Messiah), descended from David, born in Bethlehem, the peaceful king of Zechariah, the suffering servant of Isaiah, the child Immanuel foretold by Isaiah, the Son of Man from the heavens foreseen by Daniel. The New Testament applies all these prophetic texts to Jesus and they now mean infinitely more to Christians than to those who first heard them pronounced.

The books of the prophets

The prophets after whom the canonical books are named are commonly called 'writing prophets'. The term is unfortunate. From what has been said of the prophetic function it is evident that the prophet was not a writer; he was first and foremost a speaker, a preacher. His message was originally a spoken one, and the question arises: how did it become a written book?

The contents of these books are of three different kinds: 1. There are the 'prophetic sayings'; these are 'oracles', spoken either by God or by the prophet in God's name or else they are poetic passages conveying some teaching, prediction, threat, promise, etc.; 2. Narratives told in the first person: here the prophet relates his own experiences, and principally his own vocation; 3. Narratives in the third person: these recount events in the prophet's life or the conditions in which he worked. These three genres are not mutually exclusive; indeed, narrative sections frequently include either oracle or discourse.

The passages in the third person point to an author other than the prophet. There is clear proof of this in the Book of Jeremiah. The prophet has dictated to Baruch, Jr 36:4, all the words that he has uttered in God's name over a period of twenty-three years, cf. Jr 25:3. When this collection was burned by King Jehoiakim, Jr 36:23, a fresh scroll was written by the same Baruch, Jr 36:32. The account of all this could have come only from Baruch himself; to him we must also attribute the biographical narratives that follow, Jr 37-44, though they close with a message of comfort for Baruch from Jeremiah, Jr 45:1-5. A remark is also made to the effect that Baruch's second scroll, Jr 36:32, contained 'many similar words in addition' (added by Baruch or by others).

Similar circumstances may lie behind the composition of other prophetic books. Probably the prophets themselves either wrote or dictated a part of their prophecies or an account of their experiences, cf. Is 8:1; 30:8; Jr 30:2; 51:60; Ezk 43:11; Hab 2:2. Some part of this prophetic legacy may have been faithfully preserved by the oral tradition of the prophets' followers or by disciples of these latter (that Isaiah had disciples would appear from Is 8:16). These same groups would have treasured recollections of the prophet's life as well as of his oracles: thus, for example, the traditions about Isaiah incorporated in the Books of Kings, 2 K 18-20, and carried over from there into the Book of Isaiah, Is 36-39; so also the account of the conflict between Amos and Amaziah, Am 7:10-17.

From these various units collections were formed: related oracles and passages either dealing with the same subject (e.g. the passages against the nations in Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel) or else weighing threat of punishment against promise of salvation (as in Micah) were drawn together. All these became the subject of reading and meditation and helped to keep alive for new generations the spirit of the prophets who had gone before. Thus Jeremiah's contemporaries quote one of the prophecies of Micah, Jr 26:17-18, and reference is often made to the former prophets, Jr 28:8, a reference that becomes a recurrent formula in Jr 7:25; 25:4; 26:5; etc., and cf. Zc 1:4-6; 7:7,12; Dn 9:6,10; Ezr 9:11. The books of the prophets were kept alive by groups of the devout who found in them the food for their faith and devotion; indeed, as in the case of Baruch's scroll, Jr 36:32, 'many similar words were added', under divine inspiration, either to adapt the books to the spiritual needs of a new generation or to improve them. Sometimes, as we shall see when we deal with the Books of Isaiah and Zechariah, these additions could be considerable. By making such alterations, the heirs of the prophets considered that they were at once preserving and maturing the treasure received from their masters.

In the Hebrew Bible and in the Greek and Latin versions, as in this edition, the books of the four major prophets appear in chronological order. The arrangement of the twelve minor prophets is more arbitrary, but we shall discuss them here in order of composition, in so far as this can be established.

Isaiah

The prophet Isaiah was born in about 765 B.C. In the year of King Uzziah's death, 740, he received his prophetic vocation while in the Temple of Jerusalem: his mission was to proclaim the fall of Israel and of Judah, the punishment of the nation's infidelity, 6:1-13. His earliest pronouncements, ch. 1-5, for the most part belong to the following years until the beginning of the reign of Ahaz in 736. Rezin, king of Damascus, and Pekah, king of Israel, tried to persuade the young king of Judah to form an alliance against Tiglath-pileser III, king of Assyria. Ahaz refused and, when war was declared, appealed to Assyria. Isaiah tried in vain to discourage a policy so based on human expediency; as the pledge of God's intentions he foretold the mysterious birth of Immanuel and made the first of his messianic prophecies. Most of the oracles contained in ch. 6-12 (the 'Book of Immanuel'), belong to this period. The appeal of Ahaz to Tiglath-pileser put Judah under Assyrian protection and hastened the fall of the Northern Kingdom, part of the territory of which was annexed by Assyria in 734; by 721 Samaria itself had fallen. In Judah, Hezekiah who succeeded Ahaz (716) was a devout man, bent on reform. There was a resumption, however, of political intrigue, this time for Egyptian support against Assyria. Isaiah, true to his principles, pleaded for trust in God, not in a military alliance. In this period just before and after the fall of Samaria, Isaiah delivered most of the oracles of ch. 28-32, and also the oracles against the nations 14:24-23:18. Hezekiah allowed himself to be drawn into an anti-Assyrian revolt and Sennacherib, in 701, devastated Palestine. The king of Judah resolved to defend Jerusalem; Isaiah supported his decision, assuring him of God's help, and the capital, in fact, was saved. The details are recorded in ch. 36-39, parallel to 2 K 18-20, and bring the first part of the book to a close. We know nothing of Isaiah's career after 700. According to Jewish tradition he was martyred under Manasseh.

The prominent part played by Isaiah in his country's affairs made him a national figure, but he was also a poet of genius. Brilliance of style and freshness of imagery make his work pre-eminent in the literature of the Bible; he wrote a concise, majestic and harmonious prose unsurpassed by any of the biblical writers who were to follow him. But his greatness lies above all in the religious order. The vision in the Temple at the time of his vocation, a revelation of the transcendence of God and the unworthiness of man, left a lasting mark on the prophet. His monotheism has a note of exultation in it but also of awe: God is the Holy, the Strong, the Mighty One, the King. Man is a creature defiled by sin for which God demands reparation. For God insists on justice between men and sincerity in divine worship. God looks for faithfulness and Isaiah is the prophet of faith; in times of crisis all he prescribes is trust in God and in no one else; by this alone will salvation be won. He knows clearly how hard the test will be, but his hope is that a 'remnant' will be spared, with the Messiah for its king. Isaiah is the greatest of the messianic prophets. The Messiah he foretells is a descendant of David who will establish peace and justice on earth and propagate the knowledge of God, 2:1-5; 7:10-17; 9:1-6; 11:1-9; 28:16-17.

A religious genius of this quality inevitably made an impression on his period and secured a following. The prose passages in the third person which conclude the first part of the book, ch. 36-39, are the work of Isaiah's disciples. From time to time the prophet's spiritual descendants made further additions to his own work and in particular they inserted the oracles against Babylon, ch. 13-14, the apocalypse of ch. 24-27, and the poems of ch. 33-35.

The second part of the book, ch. 40-55, is of a very different kind, and modern criticism does not admit it to be the work of the 8th century prophet. The Biblical Commission, on 28th June 1908, warned Catholic exegetes against this view, opposed as it is to ancient traditional opinion and setting bounds, it might seem, to the free range of prophetic inspiration. The Commission asserted that the arguments so far adduced were not strong enough to dismiss the Isaian authorship of these chapters. It was a cautionary measure, not forbidding further inquiry. Subsequent investigations have now added weight to the earlier arguments, and a growing number of Catholic interpreters now hold that these chapters are a later addition; not merely because the name of Isaiah is never mentioned but because the historical setting itself is about two centuries after his time: Jerusalem has fallen, the nation is in exile in Babylonia, Cyrus the liberator is already on the horizon. The oracles in the first part of the book were for the most part threatening, and alluded constantly to events under Ahaz and Hezekiah; the oracles of the second part are consoling and remote from this historical context. The style is still very fine, but is different, more rhetorical, diffuse, repetitive. The thought has also developed, and is more theologically expressed. Monotheism is not merely affirmed, but expounded; the impotence of the false gods is used as an argument for their insignificance. Emphasis is laid on the fathomless wisdom and providence of God. For the first time religious universalism receives clear expression.

Almighty God could, of course, have conveyed the prophet into the distant future, severing him from his own time, transforming his imagery and cast of thought. This would mean, however, a duplication of the author's personality and a disregard for his contemporaries—to whom, after all, he was sent—for which the Bible provides no parallel. It is therefore highly probable that ch. 40-55 are the work of an unnamed writer at the end of the exilic period, a disciple of Isaiah and like him a prophet of the first order. The collection is introduced, ch. 40, by a prefatory poem which epitomises this prophet's mission: 'Be comforted, be comforted, my people', cf. Si 48:24. The book is known as 'the Book of the Consolation of Israel'.

Embedded in this book are four lyrical passages, the 'Songs of the Servant of Yahweh', 42:1-7; 49:1-9; 50:4-9; 52:13-53:12. They depict a perfect disciple of Yahweh; he proclaims the true faith and suffers to atone for the sins of his people, but God exalts him in the end. In all of this, the Christian tradition sees a foreshadowing of the true Servant of God, of the life and redeeming death of Jesus.

The last section of the book, ch. 56-66, is composite. Ch. 57 may be pre-exilic but ch. 56, 58, 66 read as if the exiles were home again. Ch. 63-65 are markedly apocalyptic in tone. The ideas and style of ch. 60-62 bring them very close to ch. 40-55, and the whole third section reads very much like a sequel of the second, confirming traditional matter and composed by disciples of the prophet-comforter of the exilic period. This is the final production of the Isaian school extending the ministry of the great prophet of the 8th century.

Jeremiah

In about 646 B.C., just over a century after Isaiah, Jeremiah was born of a priestly family living in the neighbourhood of Jerusalem. His life and character are better known to us than those of any other prophet, thanks to the biographical narratives in the third person scattered throughout his book, the chronological sequence of which is as follows: 19:2-20:6; 26; 36; 45; 28-29; 51:59-64; 34:8-22; 37-44; and the autobiographical passages, prose or verse, known as the 'Confessions of Jeremiah': 11:18-12:6; 15:10-21; 17:14-18; 18:18-23; 20:7-18. Called by God as a young man in 626 B.C., the thirteenth year of Josiah, 1:2, he lived through the tragic years preceding and succeeding the ruin of the kingdom of Judah. Hopes had been raised by Josiah's religious reforms and his rallying of the nation, but these were destroyed by the death of the king at Megiddo in 609 and the disruption of the balance of power in that ancient world by the fall of Nineveh in 612 and the expansion of the Chaldaean empire. From 605 onwards Nebuchadnezzar imposed his will on Palestine; Judah rebelled, encouraged by the persistent intrigues of Egypt, and in 598 Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem and deported a number of its population. A second revolt recalled the Chaldaean armies and in 587 Jerusalem was captured, its Temple burnt and more of its inhabitants deported. Jeremiah lived throughout these catastrophic events, preaching, threatening, prophesying disaster, vainly admonishing the worthless Davidic kings one after the other; by the war party he was dubbed a defeatist, persecuted and imprisoned. When Jerusalem fell, Jeremiah remained in Palestine with his friend Gedaliah whom the Chaldaeans had appointed governor; the prophet could see, however, that all hopes for the future lay in those who had been exiled. When Gedaliah was assassinated, a party of Jews, fearing reprisals, fled to Egypt, taking Jeremiah with them. It is probable that he died there.

The prophet's own inner conflicts were as dramatic as the events in which he played a part. Of an affectionate and gentle disposition, he was nevertheless called 'to tear up and to knock down, to destroy and to overthrow', 1:10, and disaster was the keynote of his message, 20:8. This man of peace was for ever at war, with his own people, with kings, priests, false prophets, the nation itself, 'a man of strife and of dissension for all the land', 15:10. He was tortured by a duty he could not refuse, 20:9. In prayer he referred to his anguish repeatedly: 'Why is my suffering continual?', 15:18; and cf. the passage that anticipates Job's 'cursed be the day when I was born', 20:14f.

All this suffering purified his soul of everything unworthy and made it open to God. Before expressing it in his prophecy of the new covenant, 31:31-34, Jeremiah practised a really inward and heartfelt religion; this is what makes him near and dear to Christians. This personal religion led him to rethink traditional teaching: God examines the heart, 11:20, and rewards each according to his works, 31:29-30; friendship with God, 2:2, is broken by sin which is the consequence of a perverted will, 4:4; 17:9; 18:12. His warm religion makes Jeremiah not unlike Hosea, who influenced him; his conception of the Law as an 'inward' force, his respect for the function of love in true religion, his concern for the person as an individual, all make the Book of Jeremiah rather like Deuteronomy. They have some phrases in common because of a mutual influence at the time when the two books were edited; this borrowing is justified, since the spirit and doctrine of the books is the same; Jeremiah was familiar with the first edition of Deuteronomy and supported the religious reform inspired by deuteronomic principles.

During his lifetime Jeremiah was a failure; after his death he grew steadily in stature. His doctrine of a new covenant written in the heart made him the father of all that was best in Judaism. His influence may be seen in Ezekiel, in the second part of Isaiah and in several of the Psalms. In the Maccabaeian period he was considered a protector of the nation, 2 M 2:1-8; 15:12-16. By maintaining the primacy of the things of the spirit and by showing how intimate man's contact with God must be, Jeremiah paved the way for the new covenant of Christian times; his life of renunciation and of suffering in the service of God, which may well have contributed to the portrait of the servant in Is 53, makes Jeremiah an antetype of Christ.

That Jeremiah's influence persisted shows that his words must often have been studied, meditated and interpreted. This contribution of the prophet's spiritual children can be seen in the construction of the book. This clearly was not written at one sitting. The Greek translation represents an edition considerably shorter than the Hebrew text and puts the oracles against the nations after 25:13 (which must have been their original position), whereas the Hebrew relegates them to the end of the book, ch. 46-51. These prophecies against the nations do not seem to have all been written by Jeremiah himself; the oracles against Babylon, at least, date from the end of the Exile, ch. 50-51. Ch. 52 is included as an historical appendix; it is parallel to 2 K 24:18-25:30. Other, shorter, supplementary passages have also been inserted into the body of the book; they witness to the use made of it by the exiles in Babylon and the post-exilic community, and to the respect in which it was then held. The many duplicate passages are also proofs of editorial activity. Lastly, the numerous indications of time are not in sequence. The book as we have it now is in a state of disorder, the outcome of a protracted compilation, the stages of which are very hard to sort out.

Ch. 36, however, gives some very useful data: in 605 Jeremiah dictated to Baruch the oracles he had made since the beginning of his ministry in 626, 36:2. This scroll, burnt by Jehoiakim, was rewritten and supplemented, 36:32. We can do no more than conjecture what this collection contained. It appears to have had 25:1-12 for introduction, and it assembled the pre-605 passages which are now in ch. 1-18; but, according to 36:2, it also contained certain ancient oracles against the nations referred to in 25:13-18. In the same sections, the supplements later added are passages dating from after 605 and further oracles against the nations. Into those were inserted the pages of 'Confessions' (described in detail above). Two small booklets were added, one on the kings, 21:11-23:8, the other on the prophets, 23:9-40, which may originally have been distinct.

In this way we are able to identify two sections of the book: one containing threats against Judah and Jerusalem, 1:1-25:13, the other containing prophecies against the nations, 25:13-38 and ch. 46-51. Ch. 26-35 make up a third section; this is a collection, out of order, of rather more cheerful passages. Nearly all of these are in prose and are mostly drawn from a biography of Jeremiah for which, it is supposed, Baruch was responsible. Exception must be made of ch. 30-31, a small book of consolation, written in verse form. The fourth section, ch. 36-44, is in prose; it continues the biography of Jeremiah and describes his sufferings during and after the siege of Jerusalem. It ends with 45:1-5 which may be considered as the signature of Baruch.

Lamentations

The Hebrew Bible groups this short book with the 'Writings' (Hagiographa). The Greek Bible and the Vulgate put it immediately after Jeremiah entitling it 'The Lamentations of Jeremiah'. This tradition of authorship is based on 2 Ch 35:25 and supported by the poems themselves, the subject-matter of which reflects the times of the prophet. Even so, it is difficult to credit Jeremiah with the book. The Jeremiah we know from his authentic oracles could never have said that the voice of prophecy was silenced, 2:9; nor could he have praised Zedekiah, 4:20, or put his trust in Egyptian help, 4:17. His spontaneity would have burst through the artificial literary curbs we find in these alphabetical poems: in the first four it is each strophe which begins with a different letter and in the fifth it is each of the twenty-two verses.

Ch. 1, 2 and 4 are written in the form of a dirge for the dead, ch. 3 is an individual lament, ch. 5 ('Prayer of Jeremiah' in the Vulgate) a collective one. They were written in Palestine after the fall of Jerusalem in 587 and they were probably used in the liturgy which, according to Jr 41:5, was still performed on the site of the Temple. With great pathos, the author (or authors) describes the mourning of city and people; but from this darkness shines a ray of unconquerable trust in God and of wholehearted repentance, which makes the short book of lasting value. The Jews chant it on the great fast commemorating the events of 587; it is used by Christians in the Holy Week liturgy to recall what happened on Calvary.

Baruch

The Book of Baruch is one of the deuterocanonical books not found in the Hebrew Bible. The Greek Bible puts it between Jeremiah and Lamentations; the Vulgate immediately after Lamentations. According to its introduction, 1:1-14, it was written in Babylon by Baruch after the deportation and sent to Jerusalem to be read at liturgical gatherings. It contains: a prayer acknowledging guilt but expressing hope, 1:15-3:8; a 'wisdom' poem, 3:9-4:4, in which wisdom is identified with the Law; a prophetic passage, 4:5-5:9, in which a personified Jerusalem speaks to the exiles and the prophet consoles her with a reminder of messianic hopes. The three sections, 1:15-3:8, 3:9-4:4, 4:5-5:9, probably had a Hebrew origin, now lost. Their date is hard to fix; they may be as late as the 2nd or 1st century B.C.

In the Greek Bible, Lamentations separates the Letter of Jeremiah from Baruch, but the Vulgate adds the Letter (with a separate title) to Baruch, ch. 6. The Letter is an apologetic argument against idolatry; its style undistinguished, it develops themes already used in Jr 10:1-16; Is 44:9-20. The idolatry here attacked is late Babylonian. The Letter, apparently written in Hebrew, is of the Greek period; more precise dating is not possible. It is alluded to, seemingly, in 2 M 2:1-3.

This collection, grouped under the name of Baruch, gives us valuable information about the Jewish communities in the Dispersion and the ways by which their religious life was sustained: contact with Jerusalem, prayer, devotion to the Law, thirst for retribution, messianic hope. Like Lamentations, it also testifies to the enduring reputation of Jeremiah, both short books being assigned to the prophet and his disciple.

Ezekiel

The Book of Ezekiel, unlike that of Jeremiah, appears to be a well-constructed whole. After the introduction, ch. 1-3, in which the prophet receives his mission from God, the body of the book is divided clearly into four sections: 1. Ch. 4-24, consisting almost exclusively of reproaches and threats addressed to the Israelites before the siege of Jerusalem; 2. Ch. 25-32, of oracles against the nations, in which the prophet widens his anathema to include those who have influenced the faithless Israelites and urged them on; 3. Ch. 33-39, of comfort for the nation during and after the siege, with a promise of a brighter future; 4. Ch. 40-48, of provisions for the political and religious constitution of the future community, once re-established in Palestine.

Beneath this systematic arrangement nevertheless there are noteworthy irregularities. There are numerous duplicate passages, e.g. 3:17-21 = 33:7-9; 18:25-29 = 33:17-20, etc. References to Ezekiel's being struck dumb by God, 3:26+; 24:27+; 33:22, are separated by protracted discourses. The vision of the chariot of God, 1:4-3:15, is interrupted by the vision of the book, 2:1-3:9. In the same way, the description of the sins of Jerusalem, 11:1-21, is a continuation of ch. 8 and clearly interrupts the account of the chariot's departure which begins at 10:18-22 and continues in 11:22. Nor are the dates of ch. 26-33 in sequence. An author writing the book as one consistent whole could hardly be responsible for these irregularities; it is much more likely that they are the result of disciples' combining and supplementing the documents or recollections at their disposal. To some extent, therefore, the Book of Ezekiel has undergone the same treatment as other prophetic books. The consistency both of style and of teaching, however, is proof of the fidelity of the prophet's disciples to his own mind and, for the most part, to his actual words.
